Man has always been a fighting animal. Human history opens with a tragedy. There was a murderer in the earth's first family. Christ had to endure the agony of Gethsemane and the torture of the cross in order that humanity might find the way of everlasting life. All the shrines of progress have been drenched with tears or stained with blood. But always there have been serious sentinels along the picket lines of civilization anxiously watching the horizon for gleams of the dawning of the day of "universal peace."

We believe in our country and its destiny. We believe the American Republic, enriched by contributions from all the past, is the highest forum in which the genius of man for self-government has found expression. We have gathered men from the ends of the earth and builded a temple of civilization grander than any ever before "touched by human hands or conceived by human intellect." But thinkers of renown tell us that "government of the people by the people" is still an experiment. Give sufficient time, they say, and no government has yet been established that has been immune from a recrudescence of barbarism. Our hope has been that America would be the exception to this rule. The decision we make to-day may be for weal or woe. Shall we be "heirs of all the ages" or laggards in the vanguard of civilization?

There are those among us who are prone to look for guidance to the sayings and teachings of the founders of our Government. I do not impugn their wisdom as applied to the conditions that existed then, but we know it is not the world of Washington and Jefferson that furnishes the momentous problems of this hour.

Nations have been brought into one great neighborhood. The pulsing waves of ether sending messages and warnings around the globe have made the earth a vast whispering gallery. The ocean depths and the circumambient cloudland are both utilized to-day to meet the exigencies of war and commerce. The North Pole and the South Pole have divulged their secrets. Where is there an unexplored continent or an unvisited land? The world is no longer divided into two hemispheres. Its limits are reached and its depths are fathomed.

Figuratively speaking, science has created a new heaven and a new earth. And just when all the wonderful forces of material and social invention are playing upon our bewildered senses with titanic energy over half of Christendom becomes a seething, furious, flame-swept area of agony, hate, and murder.

Is it too much to believe that the present saturnalia of war and destruction is a necessary prelude to a new harmony which is to follow? Out of it all may we hope there will come eventually the swelling rythm of a grand march, to which all the peoples of the earth by common impulses will step forward to a common destiny characterized by democracy, freedom, and light?

In the light of the President's message, this is no time for negative, easy-going, complacent pacifism. It is no time for laying that flattering unction to our souls that some way, some time all will be well. If we remain inactive now and the German Emperor acquires dominion over Europe, would not our turn come next? We would then have to fight alone.

What shall America do? Play a dirge? No. Give utterance to a jeremiad? No. The old timepiece of the centuries has struck the hour for a charge.

Some one has said "great tasks create and challenge great folks," and the task before the American people this day is to make the world's crisis the world's opportunity.

Ah, my friends, there is something more to this war now than securing indemnity for a few American merchantmen that have been sunk. Something more than dollars, something more than the profits of munition makers and greater than keeping unobstructed the pathway of the seas. It is a momentous question. It is grander than the things we have spent most time in discussing to-day. Victor Hugo once said that in the sweep of the ages there come times when events constitute the hinges upon which the centuries swing. Such a hinge is being made to-day. America is getting ready to help inaugurate a new era in which the insiduous doctrine of the "divine right of kings" shall be taken from the book of civilization and written on the page of retrogression. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, as I said in the beginning, the people of West Virginia will be loyal in this crisis, and her legions will be ready to go forward, if needed, to help carry the Old Flag to every land and float it on every breeze, the unchallenged symbol of "man's humanity to man." [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair has overlooked anyone, he will be glad to recognize him now.

Mr. MANN. I ask for a vote, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon agreeing to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McCULLOCH] to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN].

The question being taken, the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SLOAN: Strike out all of the resolution, beginning on page 1, line 1, and substitute therefor the following:

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the said state of war between the United States and certain citizens on the one hand and the Imperial German Government, brought about by the Imperial German Government, is hereby formally declared; and that the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to take immediate steps to place the country in a thorough state of defense and enforce American rights both as to citizens and ships on land and on the high seas, and especially within the zones where said rights have heretofore been interfered with, and to that end the President is authorized to use the military and naval forces of the United States, together with all the immediately available resources of the Government."

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I will not use all the time that is allotted to me, but there are two propositions: First, in the resolution before the House there is no provision for placing this country in a state of defense, which, in my opinion, will, during the next six months, be found to be of more importance than the prosecution of a foreign war.

The second proposition is that the war to be prosecuted is restricted to meeting the injuries or attacks which we have suffered. With these propositions I simply ask for a vote on the amendment. I think it expresses more fairly the wish of the American people than the prosecution of a foreign war for the regulation of European affairs; that is, the redress of our own grievances and the preparation for a defense of the United States against attacks which we may have within the next few months.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MEEKER] is confined to his bed in a hospital by illness. He has sent word to me asking to be paired in favor of the resolution, which, I think, can not be done; but he desires me to announce that if it were possible for him to be here and vote he would vote for the resolution. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, my colleague [Mr. FIELDS] received a telegram announcing the serious illness of his wife——

Mr. MANN. He made that announcement here.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS] made that announcement.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the resolution to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FITZGERALD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration Senate joint resolution 1 declaring that a state of war exists between the Imperial German Government and the Government and people of the United States and making provision to prosecute the same, had directed him to report the resolution back with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution and the preamble to its final passage.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the preamble and the resolution.

The resolution and preamble was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BRITTEN moves to recommit the resolution back to the Committee on Foreign Affairs with instructions to report the same back forthwith with the following amendment:

On page 2, after line 16, add a new paragraph, as follows:

"Provided, however, That no part of the military forces of the United States shall be ordered to do land duty in any part of Europe, Asia, or Africa until so directed by act of Congress, excepting those troops who specifically volunteer for such foreign service."

Mr. FLOOD. On that, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands the yeas and nays. All those in favor of taking the vote by yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Thirty-three gentlemen have arisen, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken and the motion to recommit was refused.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the resolution.

Mr. FLOOD. Upon that, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 373, nays 50, not voting 9, as follows:

NOT VOTING—9.

Bleakley	Helgesen	Lee, Ga.	Powers
Capstick	Hill	Meeker	Webb
Fields

So the Senate joint resolution was passed.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. HILL with Mr. WEBB.

Mr. FIELDS with Mr. MEEKER.

Mr. LEE of Georgia with Mr. POWERS.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a statement. My colleague, Mr. LEE, as the membership of the House knows, is sick, just recovering from pneumonia. I have talked to him over the phone to-night. He was anxious to be present, but could not be. If he could have been present, he would have voted "yea."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent, I desire to make a statement also. The gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. HILL, as we all know, is ill, though he is here part of the time. He came here to-night thinking that he would be able to vote, but on account of his health I sent him home. If he had been here, he would have voted for the resolution.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. FLOOD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The Speaker announced his signature to enrolled joint resolution of the following title:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 1) declaring that a state of war exists between the Imperial German Government and the Government and the people of the United States and making provision to prosecute the same.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. FIELDS, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence indefinitely on account of the sickness of his wife.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS—LYMAN F. GRAY.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted, at the request of Mr. PETERS, to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Lyman F. Gray (H. R. 20526), Sixty-fourth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 14 minutes a. m., Friday, April 6, 1917) the House adjourned until Monday, April 9, 1917, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication of the president of the United States Civil Service Commission submitting an urgent estimate of appropriation for necessary additional employees, printing, stationery, travel, contingent, and other necessary expenses for the United States Civil Service Commission (H. Doc. No. 2); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Building submitting supplemental estimates of appropriations required for additional watchmen for the State, War, and Navy Department Building from April 1, 1917, to June 30, 1918 (H. Doc. No. 3); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation, not heretofore submitted, for additional force for the Patent Office, fiscal year 1918 (H. Doc. No. 4); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication of the Secretary of Commerce submitting supplemental estimates of appropriations required by the Department of Commerce, the same to be made immediately available and to remain available until expended (H. Doc. No. 5); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication of the Attorney General submitting supplemental and deficiency estimates required by the Department of Justice for the service of the fiscal years 1917 and 1918 (H. Doc. No. 6); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

6. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication of the Secretary of the Navy submitting an estimate of appropriation required to provide for an increase in the authorized enlisted strength of the Navy and Marine Corps to 150,000 men and 30,000 men, respectively (H. Doc. No. 7); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

7. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication of the Secretary of the Navy submitting an estimate of appropriation immediately required to defray extraordinary expenses of the Naval Establishment and the Navy Department (H. Doc. No. 8); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

8. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication of the Secretary of War submitting a special estimate of appropriation for national defense, War Department, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended (H. Doc. No. 9); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

9. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of appropriation to enable the Coast Guard to bring its present teleghone system of coastal communication to a high state of efficiency, to extend such system to include all Coast Guard stations not now connected, and to include the most important light stations which have at present no means for rapid communication (H. Doc. No. 10); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

10. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of appropriation for the national security and defense, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, to be expended at the discretion of the President, and to be made immediately available and to remain available until December 31, 1917, $100,000,000 (H. Doc. No. 11); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, April 6, 1917.

Rev. J. L. Kibler, of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

O God, our heavenly Father, unworthy though we be, we still lift our eyes unto the hills from whence cometh our help. In this time of appalling war, and our entrance into the awful struggle, we realize our need of Thee, O God, more than ever before. Our country needs Thee; our President, our Congress, our governors, our soldiers, and all our people scattered over our vast territory need Thy overruling providence, Thy wisdom, and grace, and power.

Thou hast sustained us in the past and blessed us with great progress because we trusted in Thee and built our foundation upon Thy principles. Surely Thou hast not dealt thus with any nation. We have stood before the world as a God-fearing people, and, therefore, we have been a God-honored people.

O God, may we not forget Thy mercies, which have been ever of old. May we remember that Thou hast pronounced Thy blessing upon that nation whose God is the Lord. Wherever our people and our soldiers may go may the world still read our shining motto upon our coin, "In God we trust."

May we not lose sight of our dependence upon Thee, O God. If we must go forth to war, oh grant that we may receive our orders from the skies and look confidently to Thee as our great leader. As Thou didst divide the sea and saved Thy people Israel from their enemies, so do Thou remove our difficulties and deliver us from all our foes. O Thou great Jehovah, be with us still and guide us safely through every peril, and if it be Thy way to bring peace and liberty to the world, we pray Thee give speedy triumph to our arms. We ask it in the name of Him who is strong to save and mighty to deliver, Jesus Christ the Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Wednesday last was read and approved.

PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Public Utilities Commission, which will be inserted in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The communication is as follows:

PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, April 5, 1917.

The honorable the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: In accordance with paragraph 14 of section 8 of "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1914, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1913, which reads as follows: "That the accounts shall be closed annually on the 31st day of December, and a balance sheet of that date promptly taken therefrom. On or about the 1st day of February following such balance sheet, together with such other information as the commission shall prescribe, verified by an owner or officer of the public utility, shall be filed with the commission and a copy thereof transmitted to Congress." I have the honor to inform you that the balance sheet for the year ended December 31, 1916, and other information required by the Public Utilities Commission of the various utilities under its jurisdiction, which have been received since March 3, 1917, have been submitted to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Very respectfully, C. W. KUTZ, Chairman.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 1) declaring that a state of war exists between the Imperial German Government and the Government and the people of the United States, and making provision to prosecute the same.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 11. An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes;

H. R. 13. An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 14. An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The VICE PRESIDENT announced his signature to the enrolled joint resolution (S. J. Res. 1) declaring that a state of war exists between the Imperial German Government and the Government and the people of the United States, and making provision to prosecute the same, which had previously been signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a telegram addressed to the Senate of the United States, which will be printed in the RECORD.

The telegram is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 4, 1917.

The SENATE,
Care Vice President Marshall, Washington, D. C.

The following has been introduced in the House by our committee. Would you kindly have same read to your honorable body:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there be, and hereby is, created a commission similar to the commission which averted war with Mexico when that seemed inevitable, which shall consider differences between this Government and Governments of belligerent nations, and which shall endeavor to reach settlement of such difficulties on the basis of peaceful adjustment without recourse to the horrors of war. That this commission shall be appointed at once by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, and that this commission shall proceed immediately to do work in advance of war which such commission must necessarily do to conclude terms of peace after war has been waged."

JAS. EADES HOW,
Of International Brotherhood Welfare Association.

Mr. HARDWICK. I present resolutions adopted at a meeting of citizens of Augusta, Ga., which I ask to have read and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the resolutions were read and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

AUGUSTA, GA., April 2, 1917.

THOMAS W. HARDWICK,
Senate, Washington, D. C.:

At a large and overwhelming gathering of Augusta men and women to-night, which was attended by several thousand loyal citizens, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted with a fervent outburst of patriotism:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this meeting that the German Government has during the whole course of the present war by its declarations and actions avowed and maintained principles fatal to freedom; with atrocities contrary to every sentiment of civilization, has disregarded and destroyed lives most precious and possessions most cherished, and has, notwithstanding the unexampled patience and forbearance on the part of the United States persisted in its wrongs until without provocation it has waged, is now waging, and has manifested its purpose to continue to wage, war against the United States; therefore the latter will go to war not only because it is warred against but also in the performance of a high duty, the duty to take sides in a world controversy, in which are to be decided fundamental rights of nations and of humanity, the duty to do our part in a war which is as much our war as that of the entente allies. It is, therefore, the sense of this meeting that the Congress of the United States should immediately make a formal declaration of war against Germany and enact such legislation as will make all the resources of the country in material and men available on the side of the entente allies; and it is further

"Resolved, That the good of the country and its future safety can be best conserved by the prompt adoption of compulsory universal military service under Federal control.

"Resolved further, That a copy of the foregoing be immediately furnished to the President and our Representatives and Senators with the request that the same be presented to the House and Senate."

D. G. FOGARTY, Chairman.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have a telegram from the Employers' Association of the Inland Empire, of Spokane, Wash., indorsing universal military training, and also a telegram from the Everett Rotary Club, of my State, which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The telegrams will be so referred.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have a telegram from a mass meeting of citizens at Montesano, Wash., which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read.

The telegram was read and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

MONTESANO, WASH., April 5, 1917.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
Care Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

Whereas the United States to-day faces the greatest crisis of half century and must defend its national honor and liberties against a foreign foe, it becomes the duty of all true Americans to pledge their loyalty to our Government, and as a united Nation face calmly the issue which have been forced upon us: Therefore be it

Resolved by the citizens of Montesano here assembled, That we heartily approve of the action of President Wilson and our Government in declaring a state of war after exhausting every effort to maintain peace with honor, and pledge our lives and resources to the cause of our country; and be further

Resolved, That plans for universal military training are indorsed and approved.

A. G. CHENEY,
Chairman Citizens' Mass Meeting.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I present a telegram from Rev. J. M. Regier, of Freeman, S. Dak., and one from Winfred Lodge, No. 148, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Winfred, S. Dak., which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FREEMAN, S. DAK., April 2, 1917.

Hon. EDWIN S. JOHNSON,
Washington, D. C.:

Prompted by deep religious convictions of our Mennonite Church and by true patriotism, we humbly petition our honored President and Congress to exert all possible influence against any legislation fostering military spirit or making military training compulsory. Signed by pastors of 14 churches near Freeman, S. Dak., representng 1,700 members.

Rev. J. M. REGIER.

WINFRED, S. DAK., Aprl 3, 1917.

Whereas it seems that there is a movement in progress by the Emergency Peace Federation, which misrepresents our sentiment of national honor in this hour of peril; and

Whereas for months past a strained condition of affairs has existed between the Government of the United States and those warring nations known as the central powers, owing to the inhuman and illegal measures the said central powers have resorted to, together with their total disregard for the fundamental rights of free and sovereign people: Therefore be it

Resolved by the members of Lodge No. 148 of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Winfred, S. Dak., in executive session assembled, That we hereby express to the President of the United States and his advisors our hearty appreciation for the stand they have taken, and pledge to them our undivided cooperation and support in whatever measures they and the Congress may deem necessary, to maintain the national ideals and the untrammeled freedom and self-respect of all our citizens, and the ultimate peace of the world based upon justice; be it further

Resolved, That we send a copy of these resolutions to the President of the United States, one to each of the Members of Congress from South Dakota, and that one be placed on file with the records of this lodge.

BERT A. HESTER,
E. L. SMITH,
W. B. BEDDOW,
Committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I present a telegram from the Commercial Association of Yankton, which I ask may be read.

There being no objection, the telegram was read, as follows:

YANKTON, S. DAK., April 6, 1917.

Hon. EDWIN S. JOHNSON,
Senator, Washington, D. C.:

We, the Commercial Association of Yankton, S. Dak., in special session assembled, in this national crisis pledge to the President our earnest support and urge the employment of the entire Navy and military force of the United States and every resource of the Government in waging war against the Imperial German Government.

S. M. HOHF,
President Yankton Commercial Association.

Mr. LODGE. I present sundry resolutions in support of the President and the Government and two protesting against war. I ask that the resolutions, of course without the names, may be printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NORWOOD, MASS., April 4, 1917.

Senator HENRY CABOT LODGE,
Washington, D. C.:

Resolved, The Norwood Board of Trade tenders its hearty approval and unswerving support to the President of the United States and the American Congress in the position taken and measures proposed to uphold and defend the honor and rights of our country; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be telegraphed to President Wilson, Senators LODGE and WEEKS, and Congressman OLNEY.

B. A. ROWE, Secretary.

Whereas we, citizens of Lexington, Mass., in town meeting assembled, are ever mindful of the unremitting vigilance and fearless action of those who dwelt here in 1775; and

Whereas we desire to fulfill our responsibility of remaining true and loyal to their memory; and

Whereas, although bearing no malicious hatred toward any ruler, class, race, or nation, we yet determinedly and advisedly condemn the cause of a government whose present policy is flagrantly abhorent to American principles; and

Whereas we would not seem ungrateful to those Governments which serve our highest interests and the highest interests of mankind: Therefore be it

Resolved—

First. That we do hereby express our entire and hearty sympathy with the cause of liberty against tyranny, the cause for which the allied Governments of the entente are now fighting;

Second. That we thankfully acknowledge whatever debt we already owe to the armies and to the navies of the said Governments;

Third. That we cordially favor serving the said Governments by granting them loans of money on such favorable terms as shall show our gratitude for their help in the past and in the present;

Fourth. That we openly challenge the attention of such inhabitants of the United States of America as are not, even at this late hour, fully alive to the dangers that threaten the life of the Nation; a challenge uttered to these ends:

(a) That sleeping patriotism may everywhere awaken to an intelligent and loyal public spirit, which shall actively carry out whatever measures are most conducive to the national welfare;

(b) That the foundations of our Government, as laid by the men of old, be not shaken, but that the President and the Congress of the United States of America be consistently supported; and

(c) That the American people, which in 1775 had no difficulty in seeing across the Atlantic Ocean, may have less difficulty in determining its duty while endeavoring to serve to the extent of its power the righteous interests of democracy as against autocracy throughout the entire world.

THE MASSACHUSETTS CLUB,
GEORGETOWN UNIVERSITY LAW SCHOOL,
Washington, April 4, 1917.

Whereas our President has done everything within his power to create a permanent peace, not only between our own country and Germany, but between the European nations as well; and

Whereas Germany, unmindful of the neutral position maintained by the United States, has in contravention of international law, and the laws of humanity, willfully and wantonly violated the rights of American citizens upon the high seas; and

Whereas such action by Germany has compelled the President, in order that the honor and dignity of the United States may be upheld, to ask Congress to declare that a state of war now exists between the United States and that nation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the members of the Massachusetts Club, of Georgetown University Law School, being imbued with that spirit of loyalty which now permeates the citizenry of our beloved State, and endeavoring to emulate our ancestors, who, at other critical times in the history of our Government, were so quick to respond to their country's call, and who by their unstinted efforts, materially aided in the perpetuation of respect for our rights as one of the family of nations, pledge our unfaltering loyalty and earnest support to the President and Government in any steps which they may take for the protection of the sacred rights of our citizens and the upholding of our honor and dignity before the world; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to President Wilson, the honorable Senators and Representatives in Congress from Massachusetts, and his excellency, the Governor of Massachusetts.

ROBERT E. J. WHALEN, President.

Whereas our Government, following its traditional policy of restraint and extending "a helping hand" to all nations in distress or in the throes of conflict, has long and patiently borne the accumulating wrongs and aggressions of the German Government violating the laws of nations and the more deep and fundamental laws of humanity, resulting not only in the destruction of property, but the very lives of our citizens, as well as those of other neutral nations; and

Whereas the President, after exhausting all diplomatic and peaceful means, found it necessary to sever diplomatic relations with the German Government, and later authorized the arming of our merchant vessels in order to protect the lives and property of our citizens from the ruthless submarine warfare; and

Whereas it now appears that nothing short of a surrender of the principles of right, justice, and independence upon which this Government is founded can keep our country out of the conflict, and as the President has in the maintenance of these rights found it necessary to recommend to Congress that a declaration of a state of war now exists with the German Government.

Resolved, That we, the members of the Lowell Fish and Game Association in annual meeting assembled, recognizing the gravity of the present situation, but believing that the ideals of American citizenship and patriotism are being upheld by the President, hereby indorse his action in severing diplomatic relations with Germany and authorizing the arming of our merchant marine in order to protect the lives and property of our citizens on the high seas; and while we with true American spirit deplore war, yet we recognize that thus was our country established, and by the same means, if necessary, must the rights and liberties of our citizens be preserved, and to that end we unhesitatingly sustain the President in his recommendation to Congress.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions, signed by the president and secretary, be sent to the President of the United States, and a copy to each of our two Senators and Congressmen.

Lowell, Mass., April 3, 1917.

SIMON B. HARRIS,
President.
WILLIS S. HOLT,
Secretary.

THE SOUTHBRIDGE RIFLES,
NATIONAL RIFLE ASSOCIATION,
Southbridge, Mass., April 3, 1917.

From: O. B. Carson, secretary executive committee.
To: Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE, Washington, D. C.
Subject: Resolutions adopted by the Southbridge Rifles April 2, 1917.

Whereas Germany has destroyed our ships, murdered our citizens, restricted our commerce, and attempted to dismember our Union by arraying against us the friendly nations of Japan and Mexico; and

Whereas by these and other hostile acts Germany has in effect declared war against the United States and is now and has been for some time in war against us: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we approve of the action of the President in severing diplomatic relations with Germany, of deciding to arm our merchant ships, and to take all measures practicable to ward off the dangers of ruthless submarine warfare.

Resolved, That we approve of the universal training and service act recommended by the General Staff, providing for permanent national defense, and that the Southbridge Rifles continue, as in the past year or more, to offer military training to all young men who desire it, to the end that they may be better fitted for any service that they may be called upon to give to the town, the State, or the Nation.

Resolved, That we unalterably stand for the principles of democracy as exemplified by our Government since its foundation to the present hour, and that we are opposed to military autocracy with unshakable firmness, such autocracy being inconsistent with democracy and the purposes and aspirations of this Republic.

Resolved, That it is the duty of every citizen to take part in whatever way he can that is lawful to ward off the aggressions of Germany or any other nation that may attack this Nation.

Resolved, That the Southbridge Rifles call upon the selectmen to make arrangements for a mass meeting, to be held at as early a date as practicable, and that a committee of two members of the company be authorized to cooperate with the selectmen and such members of a general committee as the selectmen may name to meet with the selectmen in conference as to ways and means for holding said mass meeting.

Resolved, That in the event of a call for volunteers the Southbridge Rifles do undertake to organize a war-strength company of infantry, to be composed of and officered by men from Southbridge and its immediate vicinity.

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, to the Senators of the State, and the Congressmen from this district, to the governor of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and to the senator and representative in the general court from this district.

Senator HENRY CABOT LODGE,
Washington, D. C.:

We, citizens of Boston and New England, who have gathered together this evening (Mar. 31, 1917) to demonstrate our unswerving loyalty to our country and to the President of the United States, do hereby adopt and pass the following resolutions, which we believe express not only our sentiments but those of the overwhelming majority of the American people:

"Resolved, That we approve the action of the President in severing diplomatic relations with Germany, in arming American vessels, and in calling Congress in extra session.

"Resolved, That we call upon our Government for prompt, vigorous, and courageous leadership in the immediate mobilizing of the naval, military, and industrial strength of the Nation, for the effective protection of American rights and American lives on land and sea.

"Resolved, That we urge upon Congress the immediate enactment of a universal military service bill providing for permanent national defense based upon the duty of every able-bodied citizen to share in the protection of his country.

"Resolved, That upon the people of this country there has now devolved the solemn duty of doing their part in the common task of defending freedom and democracy against the attacks of autocracy and militarism exemplified by the conduct and practices of the present Imperial German Government, which leaves Congress no alternative but to declare the existence of a state of war between the United States of America and Germany.

"Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be forwarded to the President of the United States and to the Members of Congress."

ALEXANDER SEDGEWICK.

QUINCY, MASS., April 4, 1917.

Senator HENRY CABOT LODGE,
Washington, D. C.:

Quincy Lodge, No. 943, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, at special meeting this evening adopted the following resolution:

"Whereas the Imperial German Government has by its deeds, both here and abroad, forced our United States of America, after justly protesting against Germany's indefensible violation of the hitherto universally admitted right, into war to maintain the integrity of our Nation: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That Quincy Lodge, No. 943, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks of the United States of America, does hereby heartily indorse the action of our President in urging preparedness by our country for the proper assertion of and the securing and maintaining, at any cost, of the free exercise by all nations and their inalienable right; and be it further

"Resolved, That Quincy Lodge, No. 943, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, does hereby pledge to the President and our country our united support in upholding the principles for which the United States has ever stood."

QUINCY LODGE, NO. 943, B. P. O. ELKS,
J. J. O'HARA, Secretary.

BOSTON, MASS., April 4, 1917.

Senator LODGE,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We, members of the Liberty Club of Boston, organized in 1909 and consisting of members of American birth, do hereby pledge allegiance to our flag and are ready to fight in behalf of same at our country's call.

LIBERTY CLUB,
Elizabeth Peabody House.
LAWRENCE B. GOLDBERG, Secretary.

Mr. GERRY. I have here a resolution from the General Assembly of Rhode Island indorsing military training, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND, ETC.,
IN GENERAL ASSEMBLY,
JANUARY SESSION, A. D. 1917.

Resolution indorsing universal obligatory military and naval training.

Resolved, That the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island hereby declares that it is in favor of universal obligatory military and naval training under the directions of the Federal Government; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and he is hereby, directed to send a certified copy of this resolution to each of the Senators and Representatives from this State in the Congress of the United States.

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
PROVIDENCE.

I hereby certify the foregoing to be a true copy of the original resolution approved by his excellency the governor on the 28th day of March, in the year 1917.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the State of Rhode Island this 31st day of March, in the year 1917.

[SEAL.] J. FRED PARKER,
Secretary of State.

Mr. NEW. I present a number of petitions and memorials, most of them of a patriotic character, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the appropriate committee.

There being no objection, the petitions and memorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

WARSAW, IND., LODGE, NO. 802,
Warsaw, Ind., April 2, 1917.

Hon. HARRY S. NEW,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: At a special session of Warsaw, Ind., Lodge, No. 802, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the inclosed resolutions were unanimously adopted.

Very respectfully, C. EDWIN STOUT,
Exalted Ruler.

Attest:
[SEAL.] C. S. BRENNEMAN,
Secretary.

Resolutions adopted by Warsaw, Ind., Lodge No. 802, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, in special session, April 2, 1917.

Whereas for more than two years and one-half the most powerful nations of the earth have been struggling in the most gigantic war of time; and

Whereas this ambitious Hohenzollern has enlisted under his bloody banner the degenerate Hapsburg and the murderous Turk; and

Whereas this vile trio has ignored treaties, disregarded international law, trampled humanity under foot, deported the heads of families, murdered the innocent, and violated the wives and daughters of their victims; and

Whereas they have for more than two years been riding over the rights of Americans, and have sunk our boats, drowned our men, women, and even our children, and have insulted our flag; and

Whereas for more than two years we have suffered these insults and have borne these indignities in the vain hope that our rights might be enforced and our flag be kept in the sky without the arbitraments of arms; and

Whereas our efforts toward peace have been unavailing, and have brought only additional encroachments and insults from these monarchs run amuck; and

Whereas the time has come when forbearance has ceased to be a virtue, and when every true American should take his stand against these bloodthirsty monarchs to the end that the European allies, with our aid, may banish them and their kind from the earth forever: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That Warsaw, Ind., Lodge 802, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, in special meeting assembled, extends its sympathy to the German people, the victims of an outrageous system of government which has permitted the greed of one man to involve a large part of the world in a needless war; and be it further

Resolved, That said lodge stands firmly back of the President of the United States of America in his attitude toward the German Empire and her colleagues, and pledges to the President and the country its unqualified support, and the individual support of its members and their property and lives, if necessary, and urge that he proceed as rapidly as possible to wage against the allied aggressors a vigorous and unrelenting war until a lasting peace has been accomplished and civilization and humanity have been assured the rights for which the world has been struggling for 2,000 years; and be it further

Resolved, That this lodge favors universal military training, and urges its adoption by the Congress just assembled; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be spread upon the records of this organization, that the same be published in each of the daily and weekly newspapers published in the city of Warsaw, and that copies be transmitted to our Representative in Congress and to each of our Senators.

HEADQUARTERS ELMER POST, NO. 37,
DEPARTMENT OF INDIANA, G. A. R.,
Elkhart, Ind., March 25, 1917.

At a regular meeting of Elmer Post, No. 37, a committee of three comrades was appointed to report resolutions on the state of the country, and the following resolutions were reported and unanimously adopted:

"Resolved—

"First. That as the survivors of the War for the Union we recognize that our time for service in the field has passed, but we are yet anxious to render to our country full and efficient service to the extent of our ability;

"Second. That we are firmly convinced that if a state of war between our country and a foreign power does not actually exist, that war is imminent, and that it is the duty of all American citizens, regardless of age, sex, color, or previous nationality, to now stand unitedly for the United States of America, for our country, and our flag, and by eternal vigilance preserve the rights and liberties of our citizens, either at home or abroad, and insist that the American flag shall be permitted to float in safety wherever it has a right to float, and that wherever it floats the lives and property of American citizens will be protected;

"Third. That this is the time to indict and drive out of this country every man and every actual or pretended federation that attempts in any manner longer to delay preparations or the enforcement of the most stringent regulations with reference to all spies and traitors in whatever guise;

"Fourth. That we will support the President and Congress in any and all vigorous and effective steps to vindicate the honor of our Nation, and that all people within the United States who are not willing to contribute their money, their influence, their sacred honor, and their lives if need be toward that end, should at once leave our shores for a country, if any such there exist, which will appreciate their sniveling, cowardly selfishness; and

"Fifth. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the Senators and Representatives from Indiana and tendered to the local press for publication."

PATRIOTIC RESOLUTIONS.

The citizens of Washington Township, Marion County, State of Indiana, in public meeting assembled, on this 2d day of April, 1917, for the purpose of raising a flag, as a slight token of their loyalty to the Government of the United States of America, adopt the following as a declaration of their sentiment:

"Whereas as a state of war has been forced upon the United States by the Imperial Government of Germany; and

"Whereas justice and citizenship demand that the burdens and sacrifices of the Nation must be borne by every citizen to keep inviolate his rights as well as the common weal; and

"Whereas the Army and Navy must at once be greatly increased to safeguard our national welfare: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we as American citizens, confident that our Government has exerted every effort to keep us at peace with the world, but realizing that these efforts have been in vain, hereby declare our unfaltering allegiance to the President of the United States and to all constituted authority charged with the administration of national affairs. We believe that the honor and safety of our Government demand prompt and united action in maintaining our relations with other nations the inviolability of those principles of human freedom in which the United States of America was born. We favor an immediate declaration by Congress that a state of war exists between the United States and the German Empire; and be it further

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this meeting that the destruction of the Hohenzollern dynasty will alone assure to the Teutonic peoples the right to freedom and self-government such as millions of their countrymen have sought and found in the United States of America; and further

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the President and the Vice President of the United States and to each of the Senators from Indiana, and to the Representative in Congress from this district."

O. E. ALLISON,
Chairman.
R. E. WIGGINS,
Secretary.
F. A. WALKER.
JOHN A. MARSH.
S. H. SHEARER.

Mr. NEW. I also present resolutions adopted by the faculty of Purdue University, La Fayette, Ind., which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The faculty of Purdue University, assembled in special session on March 29, 1917, deeply impressed with the gravity of the situation confronting the United States of America, and holding that at this time all considerations of party, doctrines, or prejudices should yield to the single patriotic ideal of a united country, unanimously adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That we affirm our unfaltering allegiance to the President of the United States and to all constituted authority charged with the administration of national affairs. We believe that the honor and safety of our country demand prompt and united action by the Government in maintaining, in our relations with other nations, the inviolability of those principles of human freedom in which the United States of America was born. We are in favor of universal military training and service as in our opinion the only equitable, effective, and feasible plan for providing for the future an adequate system of national defense and a citizenship united for action in national affairs.

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States and to each Senator and Representative from Indiana."

Mr. VARDAMAN. I ask to have printed in the RECORD a telegram from the acting president of the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Mississippi, asking that provision be made for instruction of the students in military affairs.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AGRICULTURAL AND MECHANICAL COLLEGE, MISS.,
April 5, 1917.

Senator JAMES K. VARDAMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

This college has reserve officers' training corps already established and in operation under command Capt. A. W. Foreman, of United States Army. Our students receiving military training under two commissioned and three noncommissioned Regular Army officers. If possible please include in universal-service bill provision exempting military schools of this class. Training given here now good as can be given recruits anywhere. Classes should not be disrupted unless our boys needed at front, and they will be ready if called out.

B. M. WALKER,
Acting President.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I also present, and ask to have printed in the RECORD, a telegram from the chancellor of the State university and a telegram from the president of Millsaps College, at Jackson, Miss., asking for the training in military affairs of the students at those institutions. They desire to have such instruction so given as not to interfere with class work.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OXFORD, MISS., April 5, 1917.

JAMES K. VARDAMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

I respectfully suggest the universal service will provide for the training of students on the campuses. Otherwise the schools and colleges will be seriously crippled. This institution stands ready to serve the country.

J. N. POWERS.

JACKSON, MISS., April 4, 1917.

Senator J. K. VARDAMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

Suggest that universal service bill be amended so as to train students at their schools and prevent disruption of classes.

DR. A. F. WATKINS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, my colleague [Mr. BANKHEAD] this morning received a telegram from Mobile, Ala., transmitting a resolution passed by a mass meeting in Mobile pledging the citizens of that town to the support of the Government in the present war. I ask that the telegram may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MOBILE, ALA., April 6, 1917.

Hon. JOHN H. BANKHEAD,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The people of Mobile, in mass meeting assembled this date above, 5,000 strong, adopted by acclamation the following resolution:

"Whereas our country now finds itself forced, however unwillingly, into war by the aggressions of the German Government:

"Now, therefore, the people of Mobile, in mass meeting assembled, hereby declare their profound and unswerving loyalty to the Government in the measures which it may take for the due and energetic conduct of the war, and urge, for the protection of our homes and institutions, the adoption of a system of universal military training and the amplest provision of war materials by the Congress of the United States."

H. PILLANS, Mayor.

Mr. JAMES. I present a telegram, which I desire to have printed in the RECORD, adopted by the Rotary Club of Louisville, Ky., expressing their loyalty and support of the Government.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LOUISVILLE, KY., April 5, 1917.

Senator OLLIE M. JAMES,
Washington, D. C.:

Following resolution adopted enthusiastically at meeting of Rotary Club of Louisville to-day:

"Whereas our country, despite the efforts of the President and the patience of our people, has been forced into war to protect the rights, the lives, and the property of our citizens: Be it

"Resolved, That the Rotary Club of Louisville pledge its unqualified support of our Government in the prosecution of this war; that we renew our allegiance to the flag, and that we reconsecrate ourselves to the foundation principles of our national life, justice, and democracy; be it further

"Resolved, That we indorse the action of our President in this crisis and his firm and righteous challenge as the leader of a free people; be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the President of the United States and another to the congressional delegation from Kentucky."

ROTARY CLUB OF LOUISVILLE.

Mr. JAMES. I also present a telegram signed by various citizens of London, Ky., which I ask to have inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LONDON, KY., April 5, 1917.

Hon. OLLIE M. JAMES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Your patriotic acts and loyalty to our country is approved by every citizen in this county. Our county stands as a unit in support of you, our President, and the country.

E. W. Brunner, Shelby Post, J. M. Young, H. J. Johnson, R. H. McFee, J. M. Harper, W. H. Pointer, E. W. Hackney, Nat B. Sewell, R. E. Baldwin, W. R. Hackney, J. C. Johnson, Oscar Bryant, C. C. Woodward, Chas. G. Pearl, Joe Baldwin, E. A. Pollard, Crede Russell.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, without taking up the time of the Senate in reading them, I present quite a number of telegrams and communications, which came to my office this morning—something over a hundred of them, I should say, without having counted them—congratulating the President of the United States and the Congress of the United States upon the stand which they have taken in defense of American honor and safety.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The telegrams will be received and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I desire at this time to read to the Senate a communication in poetry which I have received and which I think is somewhat above the average measure of good expression. It is written by Charles Pressley Simonton, of Covington, Tenn.:

ARMAGEDDON.

[By Charles Pressley Simonton.]

From centuries of slumber, waked by world-wide war's
Deep thunder tones, blest Liberty arose full armed
From Russia's barren steppes. One bugle blast, and like
The walls of Jericho down fell the ancient throne
And hoary palace of the Romanoff. Not he—
The people reign in Petrograd. By right divine
None but the people rule. She saw a world in which Gaunt hunger stalks where plenty once did smile, a world
With human blood encrimsoned, and with women's tears
Bedewed, and billowed with the graves of fratricides;
For, travesty of all the ages, brothers did
Each other slay, while each did blindly grope, contend
For universal brotherhood and Liberty.
And each one died—God grant 'twas not in vain—for that
Which unto each the other would have gladly giv'n.

Yet they are not the fratricides, but rather they
Who wield the cruel sceptre of despotic power.
And with false cry of "liberty and fatherland"
Did drive them on, for in their tyrant foreheads, just,
Omniscient God hath burned the livid mark of Cain.
Ye blood-drenched, iron thrones of Hohenzollern and
Of Hapsburg quake! Ye, too, shall fall; for Liberty
E'en now does ope the eyes of men, unshackle minds
For ages bound with chains of slavery which ye
Did forge, and misery, pain, and poverty, which they
In ignorance ascribed to God. They now perceive
These are but children of your adamantine hearts
And calloused souls. Upon your fallen palaces
Brave freemen yet shall build a temple and a shrine
To universal brotherhood and Liberty.

The glorious seeds of Liberty which Washington
And Lafayette did sow in fair Columbia's rich
And fertile fields, long since did germinante, mature;
Eternal blossom in the red and white and blue
Of stars and stripes of Liberty. Borne by God's winds
Across the sea, they long did lie in Europe's vales
And serf-tilled plains, 'til, fertilized and quickened by
The blood of millions slain and by the tears of those Bereft and left behind, the fields are white with flow'rs,
And now humanity the harvest garners in.
Though many fall beneath the blazing harvest sun
And burdens of the day—for 'tis not giv'n to all
To labor in the fields 'til eve—the Master of
The harvest calls some toilers home, yet millions of
The laborers and countless millions yet unborn,
At eventide again will sing the harvest home.

Was Liberty asleep? She never sleeps, or, like
The faithful soldier, sleeps upon her arms; she did
But 'wait the fullness of God's time, that of the blood
And toil and travail of the nations might be born
Beneath the star of Bethlehem returned, good will
To men, enduring peace on earth. Then fear not ye
Of little faith; God reigneth still, hath ever reigned,
Will ever reign in heav'n and o'er affairs of men,
For from beginning 'twas decreed that God shall lead
Humanity e'er onward, upward, 'til beneath
Blest Eden's tree of life all men shall brethren be
In brotherhood of mutual love and trust and peace.

Now and then a man of some poetical genius presents himself in the newspapers of the country. As I have stated, this was written by Charles Pressley Simonton, of Covington, Tenn. I think it is worthy to be a sort of battle hymn of this Republic as we enter into this unknown and unknowable conflict.

Mr. FLETCHER. I present and ask to have printed in the RECORD a telegram from the Tampa Lodge of Elks.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TAMPA, FLA., April 2, 1917.

Hon. DUNCAN FLETCHER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Tampa Lodge, No. 708, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, with a membership of over 500 of this city's leading citizens, pledges its unqualified support to you in taking steps not only to put the country in thorough state of defense but also to exert all of its power and employ all of its resources to carry on war against the Imperial German Government and bring the conflict to a successful termination.

P. J. VAN PELT,
Exalted Ruler.

Mr. MYERS. I send to the desk two telegrams, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD, together with the signatures. I will say that they have my very hearty approval.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HELENA, MONT., April 4, 1917.

Hon. H. L. MYERS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

At a special meeting of Helena Lodge, No. 193, of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, held this evening, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"With its birth on American soil in the afterglow of the civil strife, love of country has become a fundamental tenet of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Its membership is composed solely of American citizens, and the Nation's call reaches their minds and hearts. Mindful of patriotic obligations which our order inspires in this solemn hour of our country's history, the membership of Helena Lodge, No. 193, stand ready to discharge cheerfully the duties which the national call demands, whatever they may be: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That Helena Lodge, No. 193, of Helena, Mont., heartily indorses the sentiments expressed by our President in his latest message to Congress and tenders its manhood and substance to the American people in defense of American ideals and in making liberty and freedom the heritage of all the peoples of the earth; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the President and to our Senators and Representatives in Congress."

R. N. HITCHCOCK,
Exalted Ruler, Helena Lodge, No. 193.

MILES CITY, MONT., April 2, 1917.

Hon. HENRY L. MYERS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Resolved, That Miles City Lodge, No. 537, of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks of the United States of America, are in favor of quick and effective preparedness for our country, and that we pledge our undivided support to the President of the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be immediately wired to each of our Representatives in Congress from Montana.

H. D. MCKINNON,
Exalted Ruler.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I present sundry patriotic telegrams from organizations and mass meetings in the State of New Mexico. I ask that they be printed in the RECORD, together with the signatures which they bear.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ALBUQUERQUE, N. MEX., April 4, 1917.

Hon. A. A. JONES,
Washington, D. C.:

The following message has been forwarded to President Wilson by Albuquerque Lodge, No. 461, B. P. O. E., consisting of 800 members, in extraordinary session assembled:

"Resolved, That we indorse the action you have taken in the present crisis and pledge our loyalty and support to the course that you have adopted, and will lend aid and assistance in whatever avenue is necessary."

H. F. FAGAN,
Exalted Ruler.

Attest:

F. A. STORTZ,
Secretary.

ALBUQUERQUE, N. MEX., April 4, 1917.

A. A. JONES,
Washington, D. C.:

The Bernalillo County Medical Society, Albuquerque, N. Mex., passed a resolution unanimously indorsing the President's message to Congress, of April 2, advising that a state of war exists between the United States of America and Germany, and tenders the society's service as may be required by the President.

JOS. S. CIPERS, President.
FRANK E. TULL, Secretary.

ALAMOGORDO, N. MEX., April 5, 1917.

Senator A. A. JONES,
Washington, D. C.:

That the citizens of Alamogordo extend their unwavering support in all efforts to maintain the honor of our country and to safeguard the lives and rights of our common humanity was demonstrated at a patriotic meeting last night.

G. E. MOFFETT, Chairman.

TAOS, N. MEX., April 5, 1917.

Hon. A. A. JONES,
Care United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We, 500 citizens of Taos in mass meeting assembled, request you to convey to President Wilson our pledge of unqualified support in any action he may take in the impending crisis.

T. P. MARTIN, Chairman.

Mr. POMERENE. I present sundry telegrams and resolutions in the nature of petitions relating to the President's address and the recent action of the Congress thereon. I ask that they be printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the telegrams and resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CINCINNATI, OHIO, April 2, 1917.

Hon. ATLEE POMERENE,
Washington, D. C.:

Archbishop Elder Council, Knights of Columbus, of Cincinnati, in session to-night has learned that you have asked Congress to declare that a state of war exists with Germany. The council assures you of its unswerving loyalty in the present crisis and heartily indorses the action you have taken.

JOHN H. DRUFFEL,
Grand Knight.

OBERLIN, OHIO, April 2, 1917.

Senator ATLEE POMERENE,
Washington, D. C.:

A meeting of Oberlin business men and members of the faculty of Oberlin College to-day indorsed unanimously the President's firm determination to defend the national honor and protect the rights of American citizens from German aggression. At a mass meeting Wednesday night resolutions will be adopted expressing a like sentiment on the part of the citizenship of Oberlin and approving the promised action of Congress declaring that a state of war exists between the United States and Germany. Oberlin will do all in her power to aid in the successful prosecution of hostilities.

COMMITTEE.

YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO, April 2, 1917.

Hon. ATLEE POMERENE,
Washington, D. C.:

Be it resolved, That we, the trustees of the Youngstown Chamber of Commerce, an organization composed of 1,000 Youngstown business and professional men, pledge ourselves to approve whatever program looking to the defense of American rights and lives the President of the United States may advocate and to use all of the means and influences at our command to further the prompt and thorough carrying out of such program: Be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of this chamber be, and he is hereby, instructed to transmit by wire copies of this resolution to both President Wilson and our Representatives in Congress.

ROBERT S. WADSWORTH,
Secretary Youngstown Chamber of Commerce.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, April 5, 1917.

Senator ATLEE POMERENE,
Washington, D. C.:

The following message was sent to-day to the President:

"Nine hundred Cleveland American citizens of Italian birth and descent gathered together in Murray Hill School pledge their loyal support to you in every measure you take to protect the liberty and ideals which it is our joy to have found in our country, and we instruct the chairman of this meeting to send a copy of this message to our Senators and Representatives in Congress informing them we desire them to do their part to commit this country to the action recommended in your message of April 2."

E. M. WILLIAMS, Chairman.

KENT, OHIO, April 5, 1917.

Hon. ATLEE POMERENE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Resolution resolved by the Kent Board of Trade, Kent, Ohio, in meeting assembled this 4th day of April, 1917, that President Wilson be assured of our admiration and gratitude for the amazing efforts which he had made to keep us at peace with the whole world in the face of most trying conditions; that we are fully conscious of the futility of further efforts toward peace and the necessity of lending giant strength of this great Republic to the defeat of modern barbarism and tyranny, and in the name of democracy and freedom to help curb the despots of the Old World and loosen the shackles for ever that we as citizens of the United States and the world democracy pledge our hearts and hands, our wealth and our production, one and all, in the full strength of manhood and in the glory of our citizenship to our President in his just and righteous blow for world peace and universal freedom; that we commend and approve the course and action of Senators HARDING and POMERENE and Congressman BATHRICK in voting to sustain the President in his commendable efforts.

THE KENT BOARD OF TRADE,
R. S. SMITH, President.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, April 2, 1917.

Hon. ATLEE POMERENE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The board of directors of the Business Men's Club of Cincinnati, an organization, as you know, of representative business men of this city, at a regular meeting passed resolutions approving universal compulsory training and service, which were heartily indorsed at a patriotic meeting of over 500 of the leading business men of the city, in the club, Saturday evening, March 31. A report of the action of the board of directors, at the meeting above referred to, with a copy of the resolutions, was telegraphed Saturday night to the President of the United States.

The resolutions are as follows:

"Whereas America is a democracy in which all share equally opportunity and liberty and which all, and not a few, therefore, are equally obligated to defend; and

"Whereas justice demands that there should be a fair and equitable distribution of the burdens of national defense so that those who ought to be the last to go should not be the first; and

"Whereas we believe that the Government should have the power to determine the needs of the Nation and to supply these needs according to the ability of American citizenship to fill them; and

"Whereas a national emergency exists wherein the time for debate has ended and the time for action has come: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the board of directors of the Business Men's Club of Cincinnati, Ohio, hereby approve universal compulsory training and service as the only democratic, just, equitable, and American method of national defense; and be it further

"Resolved, That we hereby again pledge to the President of the United States in this trying hour our sincere, hearty and undivided cooperation and support in any action he may deem advisable to take."

Very respectfully,

THE BUSINESS MEN'S CLUB,
RUTHERFORD H. COX,
Executive Secretary.

TOLEDO, OHIO, April 2, 1917.

Hon. ATLEE POMERENE,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: At the annual meeting of the Toledo Bar Association held March 31, 1917, a resolution, copy of which is inclosed herewith, was unanimously and enthusiastically adopted. At this meeting approximately 100 lawyers were present, and the resolution was adopted without a dissenting vote. We are pleased to call your attention to the action taken by our association, and inclose copy for your information.

Very respectfully, yours,

AMOS L. CONN,
Secretary, Toledo Bar Association.

Whereas our President, Woodrow Wilson, has used his utmost endeavor to keep this country out of the European holocaust; and

Whereas notwithstanding the President's endeavor to the contrary, it has become quite evident that this country is becoming involved in war with certain European nations; and

Whereas it has also become evident that our present volunteer military system is grossly inadequate in case of serious emergency, and it is also unfair to them to rely on only our most patriotic young men for national protection: Now, therefore, it is hereby

Resolved, That the Toledo Bar Association of Toledo, Ohio, in meeting assembled, do hereby express our appreciation and confidence in President Wilson and pledge to him and his almost unanimous confrères in both Houses of Congress our support in upholding and carrying out the measures they shall deem wise in the premises; and be it further

Resolved, That Congress should immediately enact proper laws providing for universal preliminary education and training to commence in youth and be continued, with organization and equipment, at stated periods for a reasonable time thereafter; and be it

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of the occasion and a certified copy thereof be mailed to President Wilson, to Senators POMERENE and HARDING, and to Congressman SHERWOOD.

MARCH 31, 1917.

TOLEDO, OHIO, April 2, 1917.

Hon. ATLEE POMERENE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In accordance with the instructions given me at a mass meeting of Toledo patriotic citizens, Saturday evening, March 31, I am inclosing copy of resolutions adopted at this meeting.

Respectfully,

TOLEDO PATRIOTIC LEAGUE,
JAMES DUNN, Secretary.

Whereas a system of universal military training will not only prepare the citizens of this Nation for efficient service in the event of war but when properly administered will promote the beneficial physical development of those subject to such training, and will instill in the citizens of our country a sense of democracy, patriotism, discipline, and responsibility to duty; and

Whereas the want of lack of such a system of universal training may result in disaster to our country: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the citizens of Toledo, this day assembled at a meeting of the Toledo Patriotic League, is in accord with and favors the principle of universal training, and requests the two United States Senators from the State of Ohio and the Congressman from this district to use every effort on their part to secure the enactment by Congress of Senate bill 1695 by Mr. CHAMBERLAIN; and be it further

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Toledo Patriotic League be, and is hereby, requested to forward copies of these resolutions to Senator CHAMBERLAIN and to the public officials herein mentioned.

At this time of crisis in the affairs of the Nation, when at any moment we may find ourselves forced into a war that we have steadfastly sought to avoid, it is fitting that American men and women should have the opportunity, as unquestionably they have the will, to give assurance of their loyal support to the Government in its measures to uphold American rights and protest the lives of American citizens.

Therefore, be it resolved by the citizens (men and women) of Newport News, Va., in mass meeting assembled, That, as Americans, faithful to American ideals of justice, liberty, and humanity, and confident that the Government has exerted its most earnest efforts to keep us at peace with the world, we hereby declare our absolute and unconditional loyalty to the Government of the United States and pledge our support to the President of the United States in protecting American rights against unlawful violence upon land and sea, in guarding the Nation against hostile attacks, and in upholding international right.

Unanimously adopted at Newport News, Va., this 1st day of April, 1917.

H. L. FERGUSON,
Chairman of Mass Meeting.

Attest:

ANNIE C. PERKINS,
Secretary.

Mr. KELLOGG. I present resolutions adopted at a mass meeting of the Patriotic League of St. Paul, Minn., and ask that they be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ST. PAUL, MINN., April 3, 1917.

Hon. KNUTE NELSON,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

The following resolutions were adopted to-day at a mass meeting of the Patriotic League of St. Paul. The President in his message to Congress has given expression to the principles and to the united will of the American people, we believe that the right is more precious than peace. We are ready to fight in defense of American right and honor and for the things which we have always carried nearest our hearts for democracy for the right of those who submit to authority to have a voice in their own Governments; for the rights and liberties of small nations; for a universal dominion of right by such a concert of free peoples as shall bring peace and safety to all nations and make the world itself at last free.

Therefore, be it resolved by the Patriotic League of St. Paul in mass meeting assembled this 3d day of April, 1917, That we urge the Congress to act upon the advice of the President, and that, accordingly, it do declare the recent course of the Imperial German Government to be in fact nothing less than war against the Government and people of the United States; that it formally accept the status of a belligerent which has thus been thrust upon it; and that it take immediate steps not only to put the country in a more thorough state of defense but also exert all its power and employ all its resources to bring the Government of the German Empire to terms and to end the war.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be telegraphed to the Senators from Minnesota and to the Representative of this district in the House of Representatives.

ARTHUR H. SAVAGE, Secretary.

Mr. HALE. I present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Maine indorsing universal military training, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF MAINE,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Augusta, March 1½, 1917.

Hon. FREDERICK HALE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to herewith transmit to you an attested copy of the joint resolution in favor of "Universal military training under the Federal Government."

This resolution was unanimously passed by both branches of the seventy-eighth legislature of our State and is self-explanatory.

Very respectfully, yours,

FRANK W. BALL,
Secretary of State.

Joint resolution by Senate and House of the Seventy-eighth Legislature of Maine in favor of universal military training under the Federal Government.

Whereas the necessity of adequate military defense is the most vital issue before the American people; and

Whereas the permanent safety of the Nation demands efficient training of the young men of the country that they may be properly prepared to render instantly effective military service in time of war: Be it

Resolved, That the senate and house of representatives in legislature assembled are heartily in favor of any fair and equitable law establishing a system of universal military training under the direction of the Federal Government; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to our Senators and Representatives in Congress by the secretary of state.

IN SENATE CHAMBER,
March 7, 1917.

Read and passed.
Sent down for concurrence.

TABER D. BAILEY, President.
W. E. LAWRY, Secretary.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
March 8, 1917.

Read and passed in concurrence.

WILLIAM L. BONNEY, Speaker.
W. R. ROIX, Clerk.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF MAINE,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, Frank W. Ball, secretary of state of the State of Maine and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify:

That I have carefully compared the annexed copy of joint resolution of the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Maine in legislature assembled with the original thereof as filed in the office of the secretary of state of the State of Maine, on the 9th day of March, 1917, and that it is a full, true, and complete transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof.

In testimony whereof I have caused the seal of the State to be hereunto affixed. Given under my hand at Augusta this 14th day of March, in the year of our Lord 1917 and in the one hundred and forty-first year of the independence of the United States of America.

[SEAL.]

FRANK W. BALL,
Secretary of State.

Mr. HALE. I also present a resolution adopted by the entire faculty of the Bangor Theological Seminary, of Maine, urging that vigorous measures be taken to bring to an end the present submarine warfare. I ask that the resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BANGOR THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY,
Bangor, Me., March 28, 1917.

Hon. FREDERICK HALE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We, the entire faculty of Bangor Theological Seminary, express to you our conviction that vigorous measures should be employed to bring the present submarine war to an end, and also effectually to check the German attempt to dominate over other nations.

We believe that the submarine war of Germany is a menace to the civilized life of the world, more serious than open piracy. It is our conviction that the United States owes it to its own future and to that of the world to intervene with all needed forces to help destroy this warfare on merchant and passenger vessels and the rights of neutrals, and to secure the outlawry of the use of submarines against any vessels not directly used in warfare.

Mr. STERLING. I have here a telegram, signed by the dean and 41 members of the faculty of the State Agricultural College of South Dakota, which I ask may be read.

There being no objection, the telegram was read, as follows:

BROOKINGS, S. DAK., April 5, 1917.

SOUTH DAKOTA CONGRESSIONAL DELEGATION,
Care of Senator Thomas Sterling, Washington, D. C.:

We, the undersigned members of the faculty of the South Dakota State College, wish to express our concurrence in the avowed aim of the administration to vindicate the principles of peace and justice in the life of the world and pledge our support of any measures taken in defense of American rights and liberties.

Mr. STERLING. I also present a communication from Winfred Lodge, No. 148, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of South Dakota, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the communication was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WINFRED, S. DAK., April 3, 1917.

Whereas it seems that there is a movement in progress by the Emergency Peace Federation which misrepresents our sentiment of national honor in this hour of peril; and

Whereas for months past a strained condition of affairs has existed between the Government of the United States and those warring nations known as the central powers, owing to the inhuman and illegal measures the said central powers have resorted to, together with their total disregard for the fundamental rights of free and sovereign peoples: Therefore be it

Resolved by the members of Lodge No. 148, of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Winfred, S. Dak., in executive session assembled, That we hereby express to the President of the United States and his advisors our hearty appreciation for the stand they have taken, and pledge to them our undivided cooperation and support in whatever measures they and the Congress may deem necessary to maintain the national ideals and the untrammeled freedom and self-respect of all our citizens and the ultimate peace of the world based upon justice and honor; and be it further

Resolved, That we send a copy of these resolutions to the President of the United States, one to each Member of Congress from South Dakota, and that one be placed on file with the records of this lodge.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I hold in my hand a telegram announcing the action of the faculty of Norwich University, Northfield, Vt. I desire to say that this university is a military college in the pure sense of the word. It has been in existence three-quarters of a century, and has distinguished itself by the officers it has furnished the Army of the United States. I desire to have its action incorporated in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NORTHFIELD, VT.

Senator W. P. DILLINGHAM,
Washington, D. C.:

The faculty of Norwich University at a meeting held on the morning of April 4 adopted the following resolutions:

"First. We heartily indorse the message of the President to the National Congress delivered April 2.

"Second. It is the unanimous sentiment of this body and we strongly recommend that we enter into the war in the most aggressive manner possible, and that we throw into it every resource in man power and in material which may be available.

"Third. We firmly indorse the principle of universal military training.

"Fourth. We join in encouraging the American people to exercise the greatest economy, dispensing with all luxuries, and making every effort to increase the production of the necessities of life.

"Fifth. We strongly recommend that the Nation take action at once to limit the use of alcoholic liquors to actual medicinal and mechanical necessities.

"Sixth. That we wish to join all American citizens in displaying the United States flag from sunrise to sunset at our homes and places of business.

"Seventh. We hereby offer the services of the institution and the faculty for any duty, military or civic, for which we may be competent."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I send to the desk resolutions passed by the Rotary Club of the city of Augusta, Ga., and ask that they may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE ROTARY CLUB OF AUGUSTA,
Augusta, Ga., April 4, 1917.

Senator HOKE SMITH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor of sending you a resolution passed at a meeting of the Rotary Club of Augusta, held April 3, 1917, as follows:

"Whereas the President of the United States has splendidly voiced those high purposes and principles for which the people of this country are ready to make all needful sacrifices; and

"Whereas the Rotary Club of Augusta believes that universal military training, under Federal control, is the best and most democratic means by which to maintain those principles and preserve the future peace of this country in security and honor: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we earnestly urge our Representative and the Senators of this State to give their support to the speedy enactment of a law providing for compulsory military service under direct Federal control; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to President Woodrow Wilson, Congressman CARL VINSON, Senator HOKE SMITH, and Senator THOMAS W. HARDWICK.

Yours, very truly,
M. G. RIDGELY, Secretary.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I present sundry telegrams from various organizations and citizens of the State of Washington in relation to the President's message and the recent action of Congress declaring the existence of a state of war with Germany. They indicate in general the public opinion of the State of Washington and the desire of the people there, almost without exception, to contribute to the needs of the country in this emergency. I ask that the telegrams be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"Resolved, That we heartily indorse the patient efforts of President Wilson to maintain peace with honor with each of the warring European nations; that we believe that a state of war now exists between the United States and Germany, for which the German naval and military authorities are wholly responsible; that we believe that the President is in a position to know best the course our country should take in this world-wide crisis; that we pledge to him our undivided support in his announced intention to do all in his power to protect the lives and property of our citizens and the integrity and honor of our country; and that we urge our Senators and Representatives in Congress to loyally support him in this policy.

"Resolved further, That we unqualifiedly condemn as un-American and as an effort to mislead the President and Congress as to the sentiment of our western people the expensive newspaper advertising propaganda now appearing in our daily newspapers addressed to Americans of the West and purporting to be issued by a so-called Emergency Peace Federation of New York.

"Resolved further, That we heartily indorse every act of the President and the various departments of the Government looking toward preparedness; that we urge that efforts along this line be speeded up in every way practicable, and in furtherance of this end we favor the immediate passage by Congress of a comprehensive universal military-training law.

"Resolved further, That these resolutions be telegraphed to Congressman HADLEY, with the request that the President and each Member of the Washington congressional delegation be furnished with a copy thereof."

ATTITUDE OF NORTH DAKOTA IN THE WAR.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, so far I do not think there have been any of the resolutions or petitions from my State in support of the Government in its course entered in the RECORD.

I therefore feel justified in desiring to put my State on record, and fairly so, in asking that resolutions from the Knights of Columbus of the State and also a portion of a copy of two letters may at this time be read; and at the close of the reading, in order to place my State rightly, I wish to ask permission to take three minutes of the time of the Senate in placing the attitude of the State upon the record.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

WILLISTON, N. DAK.

Hon. P. J. McCUMBER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The following resolution was passed at the regular meeting of Williston Council, No. 1798, Knights of Columbus, on April 2, 1917:

"Whereas our country is now in the shadow of a crisis fraught with greater possibilities of danger than any that has faced the country during the entire period of its international relations, a state of war with a foreign power, it is proper that all patriotic Americans should give expression of their loyalty to the Government and the course which it has chosen to pursue in the conflict which has been thrust upon us; although the Knights of Columbus is an international organization one of its cardinal principles and virtues is respect for and maintenance of properly constituted authority, no Knight of Columbus living under the American flag, obedient to the teachings of the order, can be anything but a good and patriotic American: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we, the members of Williston Council, No. 1798, in regular meeting assembled, this 2d day of April, A. D. 1917, do hereby give expression of our utmost loyalty to and support of the course our Government has deemed wise to pursue in this our hour of trial, and our friendly assurance of the hearty cooperation of our order to achieve the ultimate object for which our President stands; and be it further

"Resolved, That this resolution be spread upon the minutes of this meeting and that a copy thereof be transmitted to our senior Senator, Hon. P. J. McCUMBER, to be delivered to the President of the United States."

I am convinced that the time has come for Congress to make a declaration of war. It is not merely a question of American rights, although that must enter into the case and be the point that is largely emphasized. But I feel there are much larger grounds than this. The fact is that the world is in the midst of a tremendous and epoch-making conflict, upon the decision of which tremendous consequences depend. I believe that it is to result in the downfall of autocracy and the spread of liberty, equality, and fraternity throughout the world.

At such a time I feel that the United States can not afford to sit idly by while other nations are struggling, sacrificing, and suffering to the limit for the world's betterment. We shall be held up to the scorn of mankind by historians of the future if we do not play our part like men in this gigantic conflict. Militarism, autocracy, the exploitation of alien peoples, the divine right of kings—these things must be put down forever, and if our great, rich, and influential Nation is to be able to look in the face of the world with self-respect in the years to come she must align herself with the progressive forces of civilization.

Yours, very cordially,

VERNON P. SQUIRES.

FARGO, N. DAK., April 3, 1917.

Hon. P. J. McCUMBER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I notice by the papers that the President has urged Congress to declare war on the German Government, and I presume action will be taken in accordance with his wish and that active war by this time will be a settled fact. I feel as every loyal American should feel, that we must aid our country to the best of our ability and our fullest capacity; that is my desire and the desire of my sons. As you know, I am engaged in road building, construction of sewers and waterworks, and have a large equipment in various States from Wisconsin to California, and I wish to offer for the use of the Government, in case they need me or my equipment, my services and full use of my equipment if it be needed. I wish that you would make a tender of my services and equipment to the President of the United States, the Secretary of War, and the Hon. D. F. Houston, Secretary of Agriculture.

I wish to further add that I have a letter from Mr. G. C. Warren, of Boston, president of Warren Bros. Co., stating that they have also made an offer of their equipment in case of need. I mention this fact for the reason that I am connected with and doing work with the Warren Bros. Co. at the present time.

In case it is required, I will send an itemized list of the equipment and horses which I have at my command.

Yours, very truly. JAMES KENNEDY.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask permission to speak about three minutes on the matter of the attitude of our own State.

Mr. President, there have been so many petitions and resolutions from the State of North Dakota, praying that this country might avoid entering into this war that I fear the country may have a wrong impression of the sentiment of the people of the State and might possibly question their patriotism and loyalty.

Mr. President, our people did desire, and deeply desire, to avoid entering into this war if we could honorably escape it, and I am certain that the adoption of the substitute for the Senate resolution, which I offered, giving the central powers one more opportunity to abandon unrestricted warfare on American ships and citizens, and to conduct their blockade in accordance with well recognized international rules, and thereby avoid a war with this country, would have been most gratifying to the vast majority of our people. But while so desiring to avoid a war, I am certain that few, if any, would uphold the military authorities of Germany in directing the indiscriminate sinking of American vessels without notice and without any attempt to ascertain the character of their cargoes or their destination.

Mr. President, probably more than one-fourth of the population of our State are of German birth or parentage, and most naturally their sympathies were with the fatherland so long as this war was confined to the great European powers; but now that a state of war exists between this country and Germany, you will find our people united as American citizens in defense of the principles for which we battle.

When this country in 1776 declared her independence and severed her relations with the mother country, the American people were compelled to war against their own blood and kinsmen. Let us not think for a moment that those were not days of deepest sorrow for them when compelled to draw the sword against people of their own blood. But a great political principle was at stake, a principle just as dear to Britons themselves as to the British colonials across the seas. It was the aristocracy of England and not the English people who attempted to subordinate that principle of English liberty; and so we, battling against our ancestors and our own kindred, with the aid of France, fought the War of the Revolution to a finish.

So, Mr. President, now that the die is cast and the great principle of freedom of the seas is at stake—the question of whether any nation in the world shall have the right to declare that any vast section of the ocean shall be a death zone, and that any neutral ship, no matter how innocent her cargo or what her destination may be, shall be destroyed and her crew and passengers sent down to death without notice and even without an opportunity to establish their innocent purpose—must be settled by the arbitrament of arms, we shall find that all the American people, no matter what their ancestry, will stand united—one country, with one purpose, and with but one flag in the skies. And in making this declaration I know I am expressing the sentiment, the fidelity, and the patriotism of all the people of North Dakota.

WAR WITH GERMANY.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan: Mr. President, I have received, as other Senators have, hundreds of petitions and memorials, some appealing to Senators and Representatives to sustain the President in the present trying hour, and others protesting against any step which would involve our country in war, and I desire, if I may have the consent of my colleagues, to say just a few words touching the attitude of my State as I interpret it in the present situation.

Our State, as most of you know, has in the past shown its patriotism and loyalty to the Government in every crisis which we have faced. Solemnly and unitedly the entire delegation from the State of Michigan, in House and Senate, has recorded its faith in the leadership of the President of the United States in the present crisis. I would not have any of my colleagues understand for one moment that this responsibility rests lightly upon me. This is the second time during my service in this Capitol when I have been called upon to vote a declaration of war. Eighteen years ago we approached a national crisis with patriotism and courage, and to-day we launch the ship of state upon an unknown sea, deeply impressed with the responsibility which we are assuming. What sufferings will be endured; what trials we will be subjected to; what changes will be wrought in our international relations and in our domestic affairs no man can foretell. The Government is now committed to a new course of conduct, fraught with danger to our institutions and affecting even the progress of civilized government. Ours, indeed, is a most disagreeable duty.

Eighteen years ago Congress forced the President of the United States into war. Perhaps I should take my share of the responsibility for that course, because I thought then, and I still think, that it was the duty of this Government to rid the Western Hemisphere of the difficulties and the dangers which menaced our national peace and the health and good order of our countrymen. I have never regretted the course which I then took, although, as I saw our brave boys go forth to battle, my heart was heavy and my eyes filled with tears. Their mission, however, was a holy one, and Providence kindly spared most of them to their loved ones.

We had a very safe and courageous and prudent pilot then—a soldier who had for four years carried a musket in defense of his country. He was opposed to war, but when the hour struck President McKinley assumed all of the responsibility which fell to his high office and did his duty with a breadth of view and a courage and a patriotism and a generosity which found reflection in every American heart and stimulated our countrymen to the highest evidences of loyalty.

If any Senator had told me a year ago that our country would to-day be involved in the European war, I would have thought him a madman. At no period in this discussion have I, by word or act, encouraged the present deplorable situation. I have been the critic of the President many times. I have disagreed with him in almost everything he has done since he became the official head of our Government. Perhaps I have been wrong and the President has been right; but, Mr. President, from this moment I bow in loyalty to the President of the United States, and never again, while this burden rests upon him, will I lay even a feather's weight upon his shoulders. He is carrying our burden for us and I pray God to give him strength to bear it; he has responsibilities enough; and he understands the delicacy and the importance of our country's position better than we do. The fathers of the Republic specially enjoined upon him the conduct of our foreign affairs. Henceforth with me politics and factionalism, discord and sectionalism, will be strangers to my public code, while my heart shall beat responsive to his every need.

This must be no partisan war. I sat beside gallant Joe Wheeler when President McKinley called him to the White House and placed the suit of blue upon him. McKinley was broad enough and generous enough and far-sighted enough to call around him men of all political parties—Fitzhugh Lee and Senator Butler, of South Carolina, men of opposite political faith to himself; and unless I am mistaken in the high character and the generous purpose and the broad Americanism of the President of the United States in this trying time he will know no section, no party, no faction of his countrymen; he will summon to the colors men of might and men of power who can aid him in guiding the old ship of state once piloted by Washington, Lincoln, and McKinley through troublous waters and past dangerous shoals.

If he needs the advice of experienced men, he can, for the asking, quickly obtain it. There are in this Chamber men of large experience whose services he can instantly command. In statecraft and diplomacy, in foreign relations, we have in our membership the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], fit to be the premier in any cabinet or Government of the world. We have in the new Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] an experienced and able lawyer who in the Cabinet of McKinley and in the Cabinet of Taft showed his qualifications for leadership. There are two former Presidents of the Republic now living whom President Wilson can command. He should promptly call to the council chamber the dauntless and the intrepid Roosevelt and use him wherever he is willing to go and in the performance of any service of which he is capable; and he should use the services of the calm and able and prudent Taft, who as jurist, Secretary of War, and President solved many difficulties with honor. He can call for his assistants great men upon both sides of this Chamber, and if the far-seeing and sagacious Root will be helpful in this crisis, the President has but to command, and I am sure he will obey.

This is no time for partisanship. For myself and my State, we shall never think of it again. The loyal people of Michigan who would have kept our country out of war will now rally to our flag and sustain the Government in its trying hour; and voicing their sentiments, representing them in part as I do, I have risen this morning simply to pledge my earnest cooperation in every measure that is intended to strengthen the arm of Government in this crisis and lend encouragement to the patriotic men and women of our country.

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENCE—WAR WITH GERMANY.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of State addressed to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and also, following that letter, a translation of a letter from the Imperial German Embassy, dated March 1, to the Secretary of State, and following that another letter from the Imperial German Embassy here, dated March 26, to the Secretary of State.

I shall not ask to have these documents read, but I should like the privilege of saying that they have been prepared, and were sent to Senator KING for the purpose of correcting certain inaccuracies which developed here in debate and which have been published widely concerning the mining of the North Sea and the highways of the ocean.

The letter shows, in the first place, why the Department of State did not officially publish the British Admiralty order alleged to have been prepared November 2, but which actually was dated November 3, namely, that it had been previously made public. It shows, furthermore, that the first mining of the high seas was done and officially announced on August 7, 1914, by the German Admiralty, which then mined the trade routes to Great Britain. It shows that on August 11 the British Admiralty reserved its right to do likewise in retaliation for what the German Admiralty had done. It shows that on August 13, 1914, the United States protested to Great Britain against mining the high seas, even though Germany had done so. It shows that on August 19 Great Britain notified us that Germany was placing mines on the high seas; that on August 23 Great Britain again notified us that Germany was laying mines, and that Great Britain still reserved the right to do likewise, although it had not yet done so; that on August 30 further notice to the same effect was given by Great Britain to the United States; that on October 2, 1914, some two months after Germany had acted, Great Britain notified us that the British Admiralty had laid mines in certain waters of the North Sea, and outlined the area covered by latitude and longitude.

The note which I have sent to the desk from the German Embassy in Washington explains, from the German standpoint, to the United States why the American ships Evelyn and Carib were sunk, and gives as a reason that they did not obey the orders of the German Admiralty as to sailing in safe waters; that they had Dutch pilots, secured through English authority, instead of having German pilots, and therefore could not know where the German mines were. The other note of March 26 from the Germany Embassy explains that the two ships should have had German pilots, and would then have known the safe course to pursue in seeking German ports. These two notes indicate, at least, that the German Government held that the two American vessels were sunk by German mines and not by British mines.

These are offered, Mr. President, for publication in the RECORD, in order that the State Department may not be misrepresented, and in order that the facts may be accurately and officially known.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Nebraska in this connection if it is not also true that Great Britain furnished pilots to all of our ships approaching her shores so that they could be safely carried through that part of the sea which was mined by her?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is true.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the documents referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 5, 1917.

The Hon. WILLIAM H. KING,
United States Senate.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of a letter dated March 28, 1917, signed by Mr. Samuel Russell, clerk of the Senate Committee on Expenditures in the Post Office Department, with which was inclosed a copy of a letter from Mr. Emil Ahlborn, of Boston, Mass., imputing bad faith to the Department of State for failure to include in its publication of the diplomatic correspondence with belligerent Governments relating to neutral rights and duties the British Admiralty order of November 2, 1914, declaring the North Sea a military area. The department has also received from other sources a facsimile of its letter of March 9, 1917, regarding the publication of this order. The fact that these facsimiles are being broadcasted over the country, accompanied by palpable misstatements over the name of Emil Ahlborn, indicates the scope, origin, and purpose of this propaganda and renders a further statement by the department on this matter desirable.

On November 3, 1914, the British ambassador transmitted in a note of that date to the department a copy of a telegram dated November 3, 1914 (instead of Nov. 2, 1914, as supposed), and received by him from the principal secretary of state for foreign affairs, "recommending certain routes to be followed for ships wishing to trade to and from Norway, the Baltic, Denmark, and Holland." (A copy of this note is printed in the inclosed document.) On November 4, 1914, this telegram was given to the press, and subsequently a copy was sent to the Secretary of Commerce for his information.

While it is true that for the reasons stated in my letter of March 9, 1917, this telegram of November 3, 1914, was not included in the published diplomatic correspondence, it is also true that other documents with reference to the laying of mines on the high seas were not published in the White Books, as, for instance, the notice issued by Germany on August 7, 1914, that the trade routes to English ports would be closed by German mines In regard to this notice the German Government in its communication of November 7, 1914, replying to the British protest to neutral powers against the laying of German mines, stated:

"In the British protest the charge is made that the German Government never issued any proclamation as to the places where mines were laid. This charge is not founded in fact. On August 7, 1914, the German Government communicated to all the neutral powers that the trade routes to English ports would be closed by mines by Germany. Neutral shipping was therefore notified of the fact of the laying of the mines and the zones where it had to look out for German mines. If the German Government did not give the exact situation of the various mines, this may well be understood from the conditions which forced the laying of the mines."

So far as the department is advised, the German notice of August 7, 1914, referred to is the first one of its kind issued by any belligerent Government during the war. Notwithstanding this fact, and notwithstanding that Germany subsequently sowed mine fields on the high seas, no protest has been made by this Government to the German Government against such action. (A copy of the German communication of Nov. 7, 1914, is printed in the inclosed documents.)

In a memorandum dated August 11, 1914, the British ambassador alleged that Germany was scattering contact mines indiscriminately about the North Sea and informed this Government that the British Admiralty held themselves fully at liberty to adopt similar measures in self-defense. (A copy of this communication is printed in the inclosed document.)

In reply to this, on August 13, 1914, this Government protested against such action on the part of the British Admiralty, as follows:

"If an enemy of His Majesty's Government has, as asserted, endangered neutral commerce by an act in violation of the Hague Convention, which can not be justified on the ground of military necessity, the Secretary of State perceives no reason for His Majesty's Government adopting a similar course, which would add further to the dangers to peaceful navigation of the high seas by vessels of neutral powers.

"The Secretary of State, therefore, expresses the earnest and confident hope that His Majesty's Government may not feel compelled to resort, as a defensive measure, to a method of naval warfare which would appear to be contrary to the terms of the Hague Convention, and impose upon ships and lives of neutrals a needless menace when peaceably navigating the high seas."

The British ambassador acknowledged this in a memorandum dated August 19, 1914, and stated that Germany was placing automatic contact mines on the high seas, where they were dangerous to merchant shipping, and that a German mine-laying vessel had been caught in the act.

In the memorandum dated August 23, 1914, the British ambassador stated:

"The Germans are continuing their practice of laying mines indiscriminately upon the ordinary trade routes," and that "The admiralty, while reserving to themselves the utmost liberty of retaliatory action against this new form of warfare, announce that they have not so far laid any mines during the present war, and that they are endeavoring to keep the sea routes open for peaceful commerce."

In a further memorandum, dated August 30, he stated:

"Although the German action in laying mines has forced the admiralty to reserve to themselves the right to do likewise, the statement already made by His Majesty's Government that no British mines have been laid remains absolutely true at this moment. The mines off the Tyne were laid 30 miles to the seaward, not as part of any definite military operations nor by German ships of war, but by German trawlers of which a considerable number appear to have been engaged in the work; the number of one such trawler actually seen to be doing this was A.E. 2½, Emden."

On October 2, 1914, approximately two months after the notice of Germany of August 7, 1914, that she would lay mines on the trade routes to English ports, the British Government first notified this country that mines had been laid by the British Admiralty, and the area in which these mines were laid was set forth by latitude and longitude. Subsequent to the notice of October 2, 1914, the British Government issued, from time to time, notice of changes in British mine areas and of provisions made for pilots to conduct merchant vessels through them. (A copy of this notice is printed in the inclosed document.)

Subsequent representations to Great Britain on the subject as well as the other correspondence on mine areas will be found in the inclosed document.

As to the American ships Carib and Evelyn, which were sunk in February, 1915, with loss of American lives, and which are claimed in the propaganda circular mentioned to have been sunk by British mines, it may be stated that in contemporaneous German communications the sinking of these vessels is apparently assumed to have been caused by German mines; for the responsibility for their loss is laid on the captains for not following German sailing directions and taking on German pilots. Copies inclosed. (German notes, Mar. 1 and 26, 1915.)

I have the honor to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,

ROBERT LANSING.

IMPERIAL GERMAN EMBASSY,
Washington, D. C., March 1, 1915.

Mr. SECRETARY OF STATE: Pursuant to instructions, I have the honor to inform your excellency that the American vessels Evelyn and Carib were lost in the North Sea because, contrary to the direction given in the Nachrichten für Seefahrer (Notice to Mariners) Nos. 2770–14, 3093–14, and 33–15, they ran along the East Friesian Islands by direction, as stated by the captain of the Evelyn, of a British warship.

The Imperial Government urgently recommends all vessels for Helgoland Bay from the coast of the Netherlands to sail up to about the fifty-fifth degree of latitude from the Terschelling Lighthouse and then steer for Lister Tief and there wait for a German pilot. He alone can furnish reliable information to navigate the German Bay.

The safest course is that given in No. 3161–14 of the Nachrichten für Seefahrer.

Accept, Mr. Secretary of State, the renewed assurance of my most distinguished high consideration.

J. BERNSTORFF.

His excellency the Secretary of State of the United States,
Mr. W. J. BRYAN.

IMPERIAL GERMAN EMBASSY,
Washington, D. C., March 26, 1915.

Mr. SECRETARY OF STATE: Referring to your excellency's kind note of the 5th instant about the sinking of the American steamer Evelyn, I have the honor to make to your excellency the following communication:

The investigation of the Evelyn and Carib casualties brought to light the fact that the vessels had on board Dutch, not German, pilots. Those pilots appear to have been furnished by the Rotterdam branch of the English Furness Steamship Co. Those pilots, according to the inquiries made, are not competent to navigate German waters. It was found, for instance, that H. Benne, the pilot taken by the steamer Osmulgu, who was formerly a Dutch district pilot, but is already on the pension list, declared he knew nothing of a certain sailing direction for the German coast, which is enough to show that he is not fit to steer a vessel to Germany. As a matter of fact, he did not even observe the sailing directions issued by the German Admiralty for the German coast, and it was just luck that saved the Osmulgu from the fate of the Evelyn.

The master of the Evelyn declared that he sailed through the channel and had a mine pilot along the English coast. It seems that the English officer who came on board with the pilot told him that he should steer not the northern course but the southerly course, below the East Friesian Islands, which was the course taken by the other steamers.

Whereupon they steamed for Rotterdam and there took a pilot. On being asked why he had not steered for Lister Tief, he replied that he had left everything to the pilot.

According to his chart the casualty occurred 53° 52′ north, 6° 7′ east. The pilot, who had the looks of an old Dutch fisherman and made a rather unfavorable impression, declared that he had steered that course because he had heard that other ships had taken it. In reply to a question he said that he had never come with a ship into the German Bay since the war began.

In order to avert further casualties as much as possible I have the honor to leave it to your excellency kindly to consider whether it may not be advisable to warn in such manner as may seem appropriate the American steamship companies concerned against applying to the above-mentioned firms for pilots. I make this recommendation all the stronger, as there is reason to suspect that the enemy will spare no efforts to expose ships bound for Germany to danger and that influence is possibly brought to bear on the pilot service. I would in this connection again repeat that the course recommended in the Nachrichten für Seefahrer No. 3161–14, north around Scotland to the guiding buoys of Lister Tief.

Accept, etc.,

J. BERNSTORFF.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MARTIN. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 12) making appropriation to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 2) thereon.

I will state that when the routine morning business has been concluded I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

ALICE CANNING.

Mr. THOMPSON, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution No. 22, submitted by Mr. HUGHES on the 4th instant, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Alice Canning, widow of Thomas A. Canning, late conductor of elevator in the employ of the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary, at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

DENNIS M. KERR.

Mr. HUGHES, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 4th instant proposing to appropriate $1,200 to pay Dennis M. Kerr for extra and expert services rendered the Committee on Pensions during the second session of the Sixty-fourth Congress as assistant clerk, etc., reported favorably thereon and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed, which was agreed to.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

EDUCATION OF IMMIGRANTS.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I introduce a bill for reference to the Committee on Immigration. I wish to call the attention of the chairman of that committee, if he is present, and if not to call the attention of the committee to the fact that it is a bill I introduced near the close of the last Congress. It was referred to the Committee on Immigration and favorably reported, with a recommendation that it go to the Committee on Appropriations for action. It relates to the maintenance of schools for the instruction of immigrants foreign born.

The bill (S. 1078) to amend section 1 of the act approved July 1, 1916, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

NATURALIZATION OF ALIENS.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to call attention, particularly of the chairman of the Committee on Immigration, to the bill which I introduced on April 4, being Senate bill 124. I have received several letters in behalf of this measure, one of which I desire to read, as it is short and expresses the ideas which I had in mind. It is dated at Chicago, and is addressed to me. It reads as follows:

CHICAGO, April 4, 1917.

United States Senator TOWNSEND, of Michigan,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I read in to-night's Chicago News of your introduction of a bill to allow all Germans who have been in this country five years to become citizens of the United States. Voicing the sentiments of many Germans I know here in Chicago, and no doubt of thousands more I don't know, permit me, first of all, to thank you for your thoughtfulness, and, secondly, to express the hope that the bill will become a law. I, like many, many of my friends, have been in this country longer than the required period for obtaining citizenship, but have, through laxity and not lack of patriotism, neglected to take out our papers. We now have our first papers, and surely would become so much more loyal citizens if we were allowed to save the two years' waiting according to the present law. Let me tell you, Mr. Senator, that while there may be some black sheep who by underhanded acts try to do harm against our Government and who thereby do more harm to the loyal and law-abiding Germans here, that such black sheep do not (and would not be allowed to) exist in the working class of the Germans here, to which I also belong. We are all for the country we live in and will die in, the country that feeds and clothes us. Your bill would have a wonderful moral effect, if it became a law, which would easily be seen by the thousands and thousands of Germans who would flock to get their papers and who would thus swell the ranks of Uncle Sam's best and most useful citizens.

Respectfully, yours,

M. J. DREHER.

Mr. President, as I have said, I call the attention of the Committee on Immigration to this matter, because I, in common with other Senators, have received many such letters, and, if I am not mistaken, I can conceive of nothing at this time that would tend more to harmonize our people than the passage of this particular bill, amended as may be necessary.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. SAULSBURY submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to completely report on certain portions of the improvements relating to the purchase of the existing Cape Cod Canal and the existing Chesapeake & Delaware Canal, respectively, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill (H. R. 13), which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to include certain ground in the District of Columbia as a part of the connecting parkway between the Potomac Park, Zoological Park, and Rock Creek Park, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 11), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PHELAN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $60,000 for the installation of a hydroelectric power plant in the Yosemite National Park, Cal., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 11), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. OWEN submitted an amendment providing that officers of the Army with the rank of colonel who shall have served faithfully for 45 years on the active list shall, when retired, have the rank of brigadier general, intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill (H. R. 13), which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BROUSSARD submitted an amendment providing that no officer of the Medical Reserve Corps shall be entitled to retirement or retirement pay, nor shall he be entitled to pension except for physical disability incurred in the line of duty while on active duty, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill (H. R. 13), which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CURTIS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $5,000 to appropriately mark the place at Medicine Lodge, Kans., where the council was held and treaties made with the Plains Indians in 1867, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 11), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. POINDEXTER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $50,000 for the purchase of a rifle range for the District of Columbia National Guard, intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill (H. R. 13), which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WARREN submitted an amendment providing that the salary of the adjutant general of the National Guard of the Territory of Hawaii which shall be that of a brigadier general of the United States Army, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill (H. R. 13), which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PENROSE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $135,000 for a general storehouse, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 11), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $250 for the purchase of the ground known as the O'Neal property, in High Street, adjoining the present post-office site at Gettysburg, Pa., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 11), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment authorizing the President to appoint Brig. Gen. Chambers McKibbin, United States Army, retired, to the position and rank of major general on the retired list of the Army, intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill (H. R. 11), which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment providing that Cornet John Conyngham Stevens, First Troops, City Cavalry, shall receive pay at the rate allowed a second lieutenant, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill (H. R. 13), which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $30,000 for the acquisition by purchase of certain land composing the right of way of the Gettysburg Railway Co., etc., for the Gettysburg National Military Park, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill (H. R. 13), which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES of Washington submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $46,920 to enable the Secretary of Labor to carry into effect the provisions of the act of March 4, 1913, to create a Department of Labor to foster, promote, and develop the welfare of wage earners of the United States as applied to women, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 11), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WALSH submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate not exceeding $10,000 for an administration building for office of the supervisor, etc.; not exceeding $25,000 for construction of a bridge across the Flathead at Belton, Mont.; and not exceeding $2,000 for ranger cabin and auto-checking station at Glacier Park Station, Mont., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 11), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SWANSON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $500,000 for a George Washington memorial building, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 11), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

FOREIGN POLICY.

Mr. BORAH submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 27), which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed:

Whereas, in September, 1796, George Washington, then President of the United States, declared, "The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible * * *." And that "Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none or a very remote relation. Hence, she must be engaged in frequent controversies the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves by artificial ties in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities"; and

Whereas, in response to a letter addressed to him by James Monroe, then President of the United States, concerning the policy afterwards declared by President Monroe, and since then known as the Monroe doctrine, Thomas Jefferson said in reply: "The question presented by the letters you have sent me is the most momentous which has ever been offered to my contemplation since that of independence. That made us a Nation. This sets our compass and points the course which we are to steer through the ocean of time opening on us. And never could we embark upon it under circumstances more auspicious. Our first and fundamental maxim should be never to entangle ourselves in the broils of Europe. Our second, never to suffer Europe to intermeddle with cis-Atlantic affairs. America, North and South, has a set of interests distinct from those of Europe, and particularly her own. She should therefore have a system of her own separate and apart from that of Europe"; and

Whereas James Monroe, President of the United States, afterwards amplified this policy, incorporating it in a message to the Congress of the United States, declaring in effect that any attempt on the part of foreign Governments to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety, and setting forth in full the policy which was afterwards and ever since has been known as the Monroe doctrine; and

Whereas the policies thus early announced by Washington, Jefferson, and Monroe, and ever since adhered to by this country, regardless of political parties, have contributed greatly to the peace and happiness of the people of the United States; and

Whereas we believe any material departure from these policies would be fraught with danger to the peace and happiness of the people of the United States, involving us in all probability in the controversies of other nations: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States reaffirm its faith and confidence in the permanent worth and wisdom of these policies and shall seek in all matters coming before it touching the interests or affairs of foreign countries to conform its acts to these time-honored principles so long and so happily a part of our foreign policy.

PRINTING OF PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS (S. DOC. NO. 5.)

Mr. FLETCHER. I submit a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration. It provides for the printing to the limit allowed by the Senate of the President's address, namely, 129,000 copies.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 25) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to as follows:

Resolved, That the address of the President of the United States delivered at a joint session of the two Houses of Congress April 2, 1917, be printed as a Senate document, and that 129,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

SAND DUNES IN NORTHERN INDIANA.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask for the adoption of an order withdrawing from the files of the Senate the communication from the Secretary of the Interior relating to the sand dunes in northern Indiana, which was submitted to the Senate February 28, 1917, and referred to the Committee on Printing but was not acted upon. The Interior Department desires to have this matter printed by the department, and I therefore ask for the adoption of the order.

The order was read and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That the papers accompanying the communication from the Secretary of the Interior relating to the sand dunes in northern Indiana, submitted on February 28, 1917, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. SMOOT, it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying the bill S. 8, Sixty-fourth Congress, granting a pension to Louis Hagenbucher, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

On motion of Mr. JONES of Washington, it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying the bill S. 3822, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, granting a pension to Ottiwell M. Roberts, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

ATTITUDE OF GERMAN-AMERICANS.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There is a distinguished citizen in Denver, Mr. Godfrey Schirmer, who is president of the German-American Trust Co., of that city. He has issued a statement, published in the Denver Post of April 3 last, a part of which I will ask to have placed in the RECORD. I will read the statement:

I believe that every German in this country, native born or naturalized, is just as good and honorable and patriotic an American as am I. And, for myself and all of those men and women, I can pledge to this Nation, here and now, our undivided and unquestioning loyalty and patriotism. This is our country. It is about to be engaged in a war with Germany. And to this, our country, we pledge our unswerving service and all that we have and are in wealth and courage and devotion. We are American citizens and we shall work and fight for America. So much, and not less than that, should be understood.

Now that we are in this war, we must keep in it until it is won by the cause we are fighting for. And the cause we are fighting for is the cause of universal democracy. I have read more than once to-day the special message of President Wilson delivered to Congress last night. I feel that he has been patient under much provocation. I feel that he has exhausted all the principles and expedients of diplomacy. I feel that he is not advising us to enter this war to subjugate the German people, but to defend and uphold the principles of international law and international justice and humanity. And I am confident that he will receive the absolute support of every German-American in the United States.

Of course, there may be unfortunate exceptions to that general rule. There are intemperate and hot-headed and foolish people in every country. And they are not limited to any one class or to any one race. But Americans who are not of German birth or German descent should preserve an attitude of toleration and self-control when they are tempted to passion by such persons. They should remember that in this coming war hundreds of thousands of German-Americans will tear out their hearts to lay them on the altar of this Republic. And, remembering that, they should be patient and understanding, not for the sake of the people who are foolish or disloyal, but for the sake of the far, far greater number who are, even now, preparing to offer their services to the United States.

It is a troubled and a trying time that is before us all to-day. This war may go on for one or two or three years. Before it is over it may engage every nation in the world. It has done almost that already. And before it is over we of the United States, each last man of us, will need all our patience and all our self-restraint and all our courage and all our spirit of self-sacrifice. We shall need that, and we must remember that we shall need it. We shall need it for ourselves and for our neighbors. Wars are fought by nations, and not by armies or navies, and, as we are in this war, we should be in it as one people—citizens of the United States of America, consecrating ourselves to this world-wide war for democracy.

To all German-Americans I want to send this message of patience and self-sacrifice and devotion and patriotism to-day. And I want to send it to all Americans of every race. The cause is now our common cause; we must meet it with a united front; all that we have we must give to make it succeed; for it is the cause of the United States and we of the United States are all Americans to-day.

Mr. Godfrey Schirmer is one of the leading citizens of Denver and president of the largest German-American financial institution of Colorado. His admirable patriotism, as shown in this statement, is sure to have a great influence with Germans in the Rocky Mountain region.

INCREASED FOOD SUPPLY.

Mr. REED. I send to the desk a Senate resolution, for which I ask present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 26), as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby requested to immediately submit to the Senate a comprehensive plan for increasing the production of food supplies, especially by the cultivation of town lots and unused lands adjacent to towns, and by promoting the raising of all classes of food or food-producing animals, and for the creation of an organization to promote and in a practical and effective way carry out the purposes aforesaid, together with his estimate of the amount of moneys necessary to be appropriated by Congress for the promotion of the purposes aforesaid.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BORAH. I am not going to object to the consideration of the resolution, but I wish the Senator to include in it a statement from the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Interior as to how we can effectively get under cultivation our vast areas of arid and semiarid land. I say this in perfect good faith. There are vast areas of land upon which settlers have already taken their homes, where great crops could be raised within the next year, or two years at most; and I say seriously I think under present conditions it is imperative that we should do something to deal with that situation.

Mr. REED. I think that will be covered by the general language of the resolution.

Mr. BORAH. Very well.

Mr. REED. I am quite willing the Senator should have it included if it is not. Is unanimous consent given for the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BORAH. I will not object to its consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

Mr. BORAH subsequently said:

By the consent of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], I ask for a reconsideration of the vote by which the resolution he offered was adopted, in order that I may insert a few words, which have been agreed upon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote by which the resolution was adopted is reconsidered.

Mr. BORAH. I ask, after the word "towns," in line 5, that the words "and of the arid or semiarid lands" be inserted as an amendment.

Mr. REED. I have no objection to that, except that I do not want to delay a report by the Secretary to us on the other proposition.

Mr. LANE. We should surely do everything possible to ameliorate the conditions due to a lack of the food supply. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if he will not introduce a clause in the resolution to arm each member of the Senate with a hoe, so that if they begin work about 6 o'clock in the morning they could hoe up enough ground before noon, when they take up their duties in the Senate, to feed a good many soldiers.

Mr. REED. Judging from the remark of the Senator I imagine that that would be a very suitable change for him to make in his occupation.

Mr. BORAH. I do not think this amendment will delay the report, because they can report upon this proposition much more quickly than upon the other.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is it not true, let me ask the Senator, that the Interior Department has charge of the arid lands rather than the Agriculture Department?

Mr. BORAH. Precisely.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Should not the resolution be directed to the Interior Department? Would not that be the proper way to reach that problem, if it is reached?

Mr. BORAH. The Secretary of the Interior would have charge of the actual performance of the work, but the facts could be gathered by the Secretary of Agriculture just as effectively as by the Secretary of the Interior. I ask for the adoption of the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Idaho.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. I have no objection now to the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I want to say just one word in regard to the resolution, particularly since the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE] has undertaken to make it a matter of jest.

I can remember only a few years ago when almost every man living in a small country town cultivated a town lot, grew a portion of the vegetables for his family, and raised pigs and chickens; but afterwards we progressed so far as to regard the raising on a town lot of anything to eat as quite beneath the dignity of the ordinary citizen.

Mr. President, I believe, and have for many years believed, that one of the causes of food shortage in the United States is to be found in the particular fact I have mentioned. I have not the slightest doubt but that if the Secretary of Agriculture can devise a plan that will result in all the governors of States taking hold of this proposition and if the movement is carried on by the mayors of all our cities and by them be extended so that the people will actually take hold there can be raised in the aggregate in the United States upon the vacant lots of towns and upon the farm lands which are unused that are immediately adjacent to towns enough food supplies to very materially affect not only the price of food but the convenience and the happiness of the people.

I think it is a very material thing for us to consider. We know that in Germany, after the Government has done all that it can do, the food supplies are nevertheless so short that the people are actually starving. We know that in England by a recent order the food supply has been limited. We know that this war we are entering upon may call from industrial and productive pursuits millions of men. We should begin to understand how grim the task is that we are entering upon. We may as well begin to understand that hands hitherto unaccustomed to toil will be obliged to assume the tasks of labor; that the delicate fingers of many a woman, which have scarcely ever been employed in any productive capacity, will be called upon to engage in earnest the work of creating things of use and necessity; that children who have hitherto spent all of their hours in play may be called upon to work in order to contribute to the support of families.

We may as well understand that the burdens of taxation will be enormous, oppressive, in many instances almost crushing; the man who supports the family must in many cases be sent to the training camp, and from the training camp to the war trench, and that those who remain at home must sustain the home and also help sustain the absent one.

We have declared war, none of us with a light heart, but I fear few of us have conceived all that this war we are entering upon may mean. God knows we hope it may never become for us an actual war. We hope that before we shall really enter upon it the power of the German Empire will have been broken and we shall escape the frightfulness of the struggle; but no wise man will rely upon that hope. Wise men will understand to-day that the only thing we can do in prudence is to prepare for every exigency, for every possibility, for every danger; and that at this moment we must begin girding our loins for a fray that may last not for a few months but that may run into the years; that may be fought out with nations we do not conceive of as antagonists; that may call for the best of our blood, the best of the youth, and finally demand gray-haired men. It may sap the very foundation of our industrial structure. It may inflict sacrifices in this country similar to those that are being borne in other lands. Under such circumstances it does not do to smile at a proposition which proposes to evolve a plan to increase production in the United States.

I believe, sir, that the governors of States can be enlisted; I believe that States can be induced to appropriate money to furnish free seed, and where they fail that the Congress ought to respond. I believe that millions of boys and girls can be induced by the mayors of cities and by civic organizations and societies to enter contests for the raising of all kinds of vegetables; and I believe in the aggregate it will be one of the great things that can be done in the way of genuine preparedness. So I offered the resolution. I am glad that it passed without opposition, and I hope that we shall, when the information comes, find an equally responsive spirit in the carrying out of its purposes.

Mr. McCUMBER and Mr. LANE addressed the Chair.

Mr. LANE. I should like an opportunity to reply——

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I feel that I ought to say just one word——

Mr. LANE. Will the Senator from North Dakota yield to me a moment? I desire to make an answer to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish myself to answer, and that is my reason for taking the floor. The Senator from Oregon can make his answer afterwards.

Mr. LANE. Very well.

Mr. McCUMBER. I feel that I ought to say one word to banish the phantom of starvation which some seem to think is hanging over the American people.

Mr. President, we are not suffering from the want of food because of the shortage in the number of acres which was seeded during the last year. In 1915 there were raised in the United States 1,100,000,000 bushels of wheat. Our home consumption is from six hundred to six hundred and fifty million bushels. So we raised in 1915 nearly double what we annually consume in the United States.

In 1916, however, on account of floods, droughts, hot winds, and rust in some sections, the wheat crop was destroyed in the Dakotas, in eastern Montana, and in western Minnesota, which raise the great bulk of the spring wheat. That, perhaps, will not happen more than once in 40 years. So if in 1917 we sow the same acreage which we sowed in 1915 we shall probably raise nearly a billion bushels of wheat in the United States, or nearly double what we need for our own consumption.

If the Department of Agriculture would call the attention of the farmers of our State and of other States of the Union to the prices of the products, which at the present time are short, and thereby encourage them to plant and raise more onions, potatoes, and other things besides wheat, especially beans, which are now exceptionally high, showing the good prices which they command, and in all probability will command next year, I think we could raise in the United States at least double the quantity of foodstuffs which we shall consume.

The great danger to-day is that of meat shortage. The high price of land to-day and the high cost of labor have been such that the American farmers are not keeping up with the demands of the population in the raising of meat products. There ought to be encouragement along this line. If there is, and if the proper information is given over the country as to prices and assurance is given that if the farmer plants beans, or onions, or potatoes, or cabbages, or turnips, or any of the ordinary food products he will be assured reasonable prices for them, there will be no danger on earth of a food shortage in the United States, unless we should have another year like last year of flood and drought and rust and hot winds to destroy our spring grains.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I desire to say in relation to the resolution offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], that it seemed to me, on the eve of a war which may search this country to its innermost heart and bring upon it great distress, when we are attempting to raise now $6,000,000,000, or thereabouts, and 2,000,000 men, to offer a resolution for somebody to go out and raise food supplies from town lots was trivial and fiddling with the question. That was the idea I had in mind. That would add a little help—just a little—and it would be a good example if the Members of the Senate tackled the hoe themselves and dug up a lot or two. That would help somewhat, though it would not amount to much.

We have a war on our hands, or it has been declared on our part to be a war; and it may be a war to the knife, and the knife to the hilt; and you had as well prepare for it. Two million men are to be raised to do the fighting, and it would not be out of proportion to make arrangements for 500,000 more men, carefully selected, to search this country over, and in the arid lands where water is needed to put the water on and to raise crops there; and in the South, where there is too much water, to drain the lands. The necessity for that may be seen all through this country as you go through it on trains and as you go over it on the street cars. Those lands should be put under cultivation. Hundreds of thousands of acres of unused lands all over the country are not being cultivated. That is the fortification that in the long run will save this country in case of war. It will sustain the Army; it will sustain those who are not engaged in war, those embracing the various communities and the masses of the people. That would be the foundation of their salvation.

Town lots! You could paint them red and do just as much good in the ultimate in this war, as to fool with them for raising potatoes and other basic crops. There is a larger and a better way of handling that matter than depending on town lots. Do what the Germans do. Go to it from its foundations. Peel your potatoes and plant the peelings. They will produce potatoes. Do it systematically, as any good farmer would. Increase the ratio of your crops. "Every army travels on its belly," as Napoleon said a hundred years ago and more.

I object to starting a war with any powerful nation such as Germany unless we get at the foundation and realize what we are up against and prepare from the foundation up. It has been coming upon us for months and for years. We should have been prepared, and we can not prepare too quickly. The women, with their delicate hands, are not going to have to do the necessary work in the soil, but they are going to put their babies to their breasts. Give them food to nourish them, put cattle and sheep on the ranches, and get the farm lands under cultivation. Do it scientifically, do it on merit, and do it efficiently.

What I objected to was that this proposition seemed merely like a drop in that kind of a bucket. Give each one of us a hoe. I can handle a hoe; I have done it all my life; I have kept my family in their vegetable products with the hoe; I did it for years and can do it again; but that will not help out my neighbor's family. Take these lands and put them under the control of a number of men. We should do that. It would be one of the greatest things we could do. It would be just as valuable as raising an army to raise the food supplies for it. Without such supplies we will fail. I should like to see this done in a methodical way and on a scale which would produce results. You may laught at it; you may smile at it now; but you will see the day when our people may go hungry if we are crowded to the wall in this coming war. I wanted to help prepare for it in that form. I therefore had a little bit, I must say, of impatience with the suggestion of going around and enlisting food supplies to be obtained from town lots. That is the reason why I called attention to it.

Mr. REED. If the Senator had read the resolution, he would have seen that it covered even the arid land.

Mr. LANE. I think perhaps I have looked a little further into the question than has the Senator from Missouri, for the reason that I have raised more crops in times gone by, perhaps, than he, and have been more intimately engaged in handling land than he has. I know what it means. I know how many bushels of potatoes grow to the acre; I know the proper time to plant them; and I think the time has come now to get busy and stimulate those processes and that art.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I desire to ask the Senator a question before he takes his seat. I simply wish to ask the Senator the number of the bill which he has introduced for the purpose he states?

Mr. LANE. What purpose?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The purpose the Senator has outlined.

Mr. LANE. Introduced a bill?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Mr. LANE. Since when?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I asked what was the number of the bill the Senator had introduced for the purpose that he outlined. He has objected to the resolution offered by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. LANE. I think it must have been about the time when the Senator was working on the bill governing the mail charges on newspapers, which would bring an increased income to certain gentlemen who would profit by the differences in rates. The Senator may remember that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I merely should like to know concerning the bill the Senator has introduced.

Mr. LANE. Surely the Senator can not have forgotten that illuminating episode in which he showed so much interest and took such an active part.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Morning business is closed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were each read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

H. R. 13. An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 14. An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

H. R. 11. An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 12, being the general deficiency appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 12) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Bureau of Efficiency," on page 3, after line 16, to strike out:

Not less than 5,000 square feet of the space now occupied by, and to be made vacant by the removal of, the Federal Trade Commission from the building rented for the use of the Department of Commerce, is transferred to, and for the accommodation of, the Bureau of Efficiency.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Treasury Department," subhead "Contingent expenses," on page 4, after line 21, to insert:

For purchase, exchange, maintenance, and repair of motor trucks; purchase, exchange, and maintenance of horses, including shoeing; purchase and repair of wagons, horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, and harness, all to be used for official purposes only, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Internal Revenue," on page 6, line 10, after the date "1918," to strike out "$1,500,000" and insert "$3,000,000," and in line 11, after the words "more than," to strike out "$125,000" and insert "$250,000," so as to make the clause read:

Income tax, excess-profits tax, etc.: For expenses of the assessment and collection of the taxes provided by the act approved March 3, 1917, entitled "An act to provide increased revenue to defray the expenses of the increased appropriations for the Army and Navy and the extensions of fortifications, and for other purposes," and by the act entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," approved September 8, 1916, including the employment of agents, inspectors, attorneys, deputy collectors, experts, clerks, messengers, and janitors, to be appointed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and for supplies, equipment, mechanical devices, telegraph and telephone service, and rent of quarters in the District of Columbia, and the several collection districts, fiscal year 1918, $3,000,000: Provided, That not more than $250,000 of this sum may be used for personal services, supplies, equipment, and mechanical devices in the District of Columbia: Provided further, That not to exceed $10,000 (which shall be available immediately) may be used for rent of quarters in the District of Columbia for such bureaus or divisions of the Treasury Department as the Secretary may determine to move out of the Treasury Building to accommodate the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous objects," on page 6, after line 23, to strike out:

Independent Treasury: Packages of coin and currency hereafter shall be admitted to the mails and transported under the penalty privilege governing their transportation prior to the passage of the act of May 18, 1916.

And insert:

Independent Treasury: For contingent expenses under the requirements of section 3653 of the Revised Statutes, including the same objects specified under this head in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1917, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 16, after the word "coin," to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$7,500," so as to make the clause read:

Recoinage of minor coins: To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to continue the recoinage of worn and uncurrent minor coins of the United States now in the Treasury or hereafter received, and to reimburse the Treasurer of the United States for the difference between the nominal or face value of such coin and the amount the same will produce in new coin, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public buildings," on page 8, after line 5, to insert:

Mount Clemens, Mich., post office: Authority is granted to pay Frank N. Vannater the sum of $4.50, out of any moneys heretofore appropriated and remaining unexpended on the books of the Treasury Department, for the construction of the post-office building at Mount Clemens, Mich., the same representing an expense incurred by him prior to the abrogation of his contract by the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Coast Guard," on page 9, after line 9, to insert:

For pay and allowances prescribed by law for commissioned officers, warrant officers, petty officers, and other enlisted men, active and retired, temporary and substitute surfmen, not exceeding 21 cadets and cadet engineers who are hereby authorized, and 1 civilian instructor, $94,000.

For rations or commutation thereof for warrant officers, petty officers, and other enlisted men, $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 8, after the words "in all," to strike out "$61,800" and insert "$167,800."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "District of Columbia," on page 16, after line 14, to strike out:

Court fines: The sum of $24,300.76, representing fines in United States cases collected on judgments of the criminal division of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, during the period from July 1, 1878, to September 30, 1908, inclusive, and deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the District of Columbia, shall be transferred from the credit of the District of Columbia to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 23, to strike out:

The sum of $211,450.12, representing fines in United States cases collected on judgments of the police court of the District of Columbia, during the period from July 1, 1878, to January 1, 1902, inclusive, and deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the District of Columbia, shall be transferred from the credit of the District of Columbia to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 21, before the word "session," to strike out "this" and insert "the Sixty-fourth Congress, second," so as to make the clause read:

Judgments: For payment of judgments, including costs, against the District of Columbia, set forth in House Document No. 2029 of the Sixty-fourth Congress, second session, except the judgments with interest and costs in favor of Samuel T. Kalbfus and Edward S. Wood, $6,877.95, together with a further sum to pay the interest at not exceeding 4 per cent on said judgments, as provided by law, from the date the same became due until the date of payment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 2, to insert:

Payment to Littlefield, Alvord & Co. and others: To satisfy the awards made in pursuance of the act approved April 25, 1912, by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, in the suit of the United States of America, plaintiff, against Littlefield, Alvord & Co. and others, equity No. 33898, for the value of the wharves, bulkheads, wharf structures, buildings and improvements within the limits of the land, water, and land under water, whereof the paramount title was decreed in said suit to be in the United States as follows: Littlefield, Alvord & Co., a corporation, $1,479.80; Christian Heurich, $1,581.36; the Cranford Paving Co., a corporation, $16,766.66; in all, $19,827.82.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "War Department," subhead "River and harbor work," on page 23, line 17, before the word "session," to strike out "at the present" and insert "of the Sixty-fourth Congress, second," so as to make the clause read:

To pay the claims adjusted and settled under section 4 of the river and harbor appropriation act approved June 25, 1910, and certified to Congress in House Document No. 2040 of the Sixty-fourth Congress, second session, $363.70.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of the "Navy Department," subhead "Claims for damages," on page 34, line 1, before the word "session," to strike out "at the present" and insert "during the Sixty-fourth Congress, second," so as to make the clause read:

For the payment of the claim adjusted and settled in accordance with naval appropriation act, approved June 24, 1910 (36 Stats., 607), and certified to Congress during the Sixty-fourth Congress, second session, in House Document No. 2104, $128.18.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, after line 7, to insert:

The foregoing appropriations for the Naval Establishment, which are for the completion of the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, are made available until June 30, 1918.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This concludes the amendments of the committee.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 19, page 8, add the following:

Durango (Colo.) public building: For construction of work, $50,000, and the limit of cost is hereby increased from $100,000 to $175,000 in order to provide court room, judges' chambers, clerk's offices, and other necessary offices to comply with the act of June 12, 1916, authorizing the holding of court at Durango, Colo.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I am very much surprised that the Senator from Colorado should offer an amendment like that, when he knows there were a great many other amendments offered and the committee rejected them all. I think it is very extraordinary that a member of the committee should expect to come in now and get an item like this allowed. It is absolutely, in my judgment, wrong. This is not a public-building bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I want to be heard on the amendment. I should like to make a statement.

Mr. MARTIN. I make a point of order that the amendment has not been estimated for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia makes a point of order against the amendment, and it is sustained.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I wish to make a statement anyway.

Mr. MARTIN. I do not know of any way by which I can stop the Senator from speaking If I did, I would certainly resort to it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the committee and of the Senate to the circumstances connected with this case. It is certified. Here is an estimate which is made by the Secretary of the Treasury. I will state the circumstances:

Some years ago an appropriation was made of $100,000 for the construction of a public building at Durango, Colo., for post-office purposes. In June, 1916, there was an act passed by the Congress of the United States which provided for the holding of the United States court in Durango. I want to call attention to that act. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Virginia particularly to this part of the act:

That the Secretary of the Treasury, in constructing the public buildings heretofore authorized to be constructed at the cities of Grand Junction and Durango, be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to provide accommodations in each of said buildings for post office, United States court, and other governmental offices, and the existing authorizations for said buildings be, and the same are hereby, respectively amended accordingly.

Mr. President, that was an authorization directly upon the part of Congress for the purpose of having the building finished in a manner that would accommodate the court, which was provided for by this very act passed by Congress.

This item was placed on the emergency bill a year ago and it went out in conference. Then a bill was introduced for the purpose of increasing the appropriation for the building, and that was passed by the Senate of the United States.

If there is a clear case where, as a matter of fact, a deficiency exists by reason of which this item should be put in the bill it seems to me this is the instance. This is for a public building. There are other public buildings that are provided for in this bill where emergency exists, and it seems to me this item ought to be recognized. Here is one item in the bill on page 8:

New Haven, Conn., post office: For completion under limit of cost established in the act approved March 4, 1913, $200,000, or so much thereof, together with the sum of $100,000 appropriated in the act approved July 1, 1916, as may be realized from the sale of the old post-office and customhouse building and the site theerof.

There is some emergency matter, no doubt, in that; but I maintain that there is not a single instance in this bill or in any other bill that I know of where there is a clearer case or a stronger reason why such an item should be put on such a bill than the one now pending to provide for deficiencies. Here is an act really authorizing the construction of a building for a courthouse in addition to the post office, which has been passed by Congress, and the very act provides that it shall be taken by the officers of the Government as a change of the previous law which authorized the building to be constructed only for post-office purposes.

The Supervising Architect estimates that there should be an increase here of a certain amount, and he sends that down under a statement made by the Secretary of the Treasury:

Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting letter with statement in regard to deficiencies in certain public-building appropriations.

Here is a statement made by the Secretary of the Treasury:

The attention of Congress is respectfully invited to the following list of public-building propositions for which, for the reasons stated, additional legislation as indicated is considered necessary.

Now comes this one:

DURANGO, COLO.

The act of July 25, 1910—

That is seven years ago—

The act of June 25, 1910, authorized the acquisition of a site at a limit of cost of $10,000. The act of March 4, 1913, authorized the construction of a post-office building at a limit of cost of $100,000. The act of June 12, 1916, authorized the holding of courts at Durango, and directed that accommodations for said courts and other governmental offices be provided in the post-office building. One hundred thousand dollars, as authorized, is not sufficient to construct a building to include accommodations for the courts. In a letter addressed to the Committee on Appropriations, under date of February 15, 1917, it was recommended that the limit of cost be increased to $175,000, and an appropriation of $50,000 within this limit be made before the close of this session of Congress.

Of course this bill did not get through at that session of Congress, and consequently it was not presented. Mr. President, it comes up here. Here is a letter stating that it is properly within the deficiency appropriations. It is one of the instances where Congress had provided that it should be done. I can not see, for the life of me, if there is a single item relating to public buildings to go into the bill, why this Durango item should not go in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order has been made and sustained.

Mr. WEEKS. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read it.

The SECRETARY. On line 19, page 6, after the word "revenue," insert the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That the agents, inspectors, attorneys, deputy collectors, experts, clerks, messengers, and janitors employed under this appropriation shall be selected from persons eligible on any civil-service register.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, that is legislation. I make a point of order against it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I wish to take this opportunity to say that I do not think the Senator from Virginia is justified in making a point of order on such an amendment. It is the well-established policy of the Government that such employees shall be employed under the provisions of the civil service, and, in my judgment, it is not only the well-established policy but one which should be continued. I am surprised that the Senator from Virginia is willing to put himself or his party on record by making a point of order against such an amendment.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. WEEKS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KENYON. I wish to inquire of the Senator how much in the bill in the way of appropriations goes to new positions? How many positions are created?

Mr. WEEKS. The bill carries an appropriation of $3,000,000 for new employees. If they were given an average pay, say, of $1,000 apiece, the number would be 3,000.

Mr. SMOOT. That is in only one department.

Mr. WEEKS. That is in one department.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock meridian on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, April 9, 1917, at 12 o'clock meridian.

SENATE.

MONDAY, April 9, 1917.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we lift our hearts to Thee in humble, earnest prayer that Thou wilt guide us aright as we stand face to face with the problems of this day. We thank Thee for the spirit Thou hast given to us, the spirit that Thou hast breathed into our national life. To-day we fear no foe; we fear that we may disappoint Thy love, Thy mercy, Thy grace. To Thy hand we commit ourselves with our interests. We pray that Thou wouldst guide us according to the divine counsels and purpose. For Jesus' sake. Amen.

CHARLES S. THOMAS, a Senator from the State of Colorado, appeared in his seat to-day.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Friday last, when, on request of Mr. SMOOT and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

SUBMARINE BASE, PANAMA CANAL (S. DOC. NO. 6).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of War resubmitting an estimate of appropriation in the sum of $1,573,950 for the fiscal year 1918 to be immediately available for the establishment and equipment of a submarine base, Panama Canal, etc., which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, requests a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FITZGERALD, Mr. EAGAN, and Mr. CANNON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a concurrent resolution adopted by the Ninth Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, expressing condolences on the death of Maj. Gen. Frederick Funston, United States Army, which will be inserted in the RECORD.

The concurrent resolution is as follows:

HONOLULU, HAWAII, March 10, 1917.

The Honorable PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to forward you herewith certified copy of house concurrent resolution No. 2, which was adopted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii.

Very respectfully,
EDWARD WOODWARD,
Clerk House of Representatives.

Whereas Maj. Gen. Frederick Funston, United States Army, has been called to join the ranks of the heavenly hosts; and

Whereas this distinguished soldier and useful citizen made several visits to these islands and was for a period in command of the Department of Hawaii; and

Whereas while a resident of the Territory Maj. Gen. Funston was ever jealous of our interests, amiable and courteous to all our people, and in every way a true friend to Hawaii: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii (the Senate concurring), That in the death of Maj. Gen. Funston our Nation loses one of its most notable and valuable men, one whose counsel and services were of utmost worth, one who was a true and unselfish patriot, standing always with distinction and ability for all that is best and most emblematic of true democracy and genuine Americanism;

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the journals of the house and senate, and that copies thereof be sent to the President of the United States, the Secretary of War, the presiding officers of the Congress of the United States, the commanding officer of the Department of Hawaii, and the widow of the late Maj. Gen. Funston.

THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE TERRITORY OF HAWAII,
Honolulu, Hawaii, February 26, 1917.

We hereby certify that the foregoing resolution was adopted in the House of Representatives of the Territory of Hawaii on February 26, 1917.

H. L. HOLSTEIN,
Speaker House of Representatives.
EDWARD WOODWARD,
Clerk House of Representatives.

THE SENATE OF THE TERRITORY OF HAWAII,
Honolulu, Hawaii, February 27, 1917.

We hereby certify that the foregoing resolution was adopted in the Senate of the Territory of Hawaii on February 27, 1917.

CHAS. T. CHILLINGWORTH,
President of the Senate.
O. TOARIS,
Clerk of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a communication from the board of trustees of the German Liederkranz, of the city of New York, pledging support to the President and the Government and tendering, in case of need, their clubhouse as a hospital unit, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SMOOT. On March 26, 1917, there was a most enthusiastic mass meeting of citizens of Utah held at the tabernacle, Salt Lake City, at which certain resolutions were adopted. I present a copy of the resolutions and ask that they be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UTAH STANDS BEHIND THE PRESIDENT—MASS MEETING SWEARS LOYAL SUPPORT.

Following are the resolutions adopted by last night's mass meeting at the Tabernacle:

"The United States of America is not a warlike or military Government. It has engaged in four wars with foreign powers—the first for independence, the second for freedom of the seas and the right of American sailors and citizens to enjoy that freedom, the third for the protection of Americans on neutral or foreign soil, the fourth in the interest of suffering humanity.

"Whereas the United States Government now appears to be on the eve of another war into which it is being forced to reassert all these principles of national right and honor, to safeguard our prestige and perpetuity as a Nation, to defend the freedom of our commerce, to compel respect for our long-established rights, to protect the lives and liberties of our citizens on the high seas, to rebuke aggressive tyranny for its brutal disregard of the claims and pleadings of humanity; and

"Whereas, in its relation to other Governments, the United States for two years past has borne, and is now bearing, with dignity and credit the gravest responsibilities this or any other republic has ever been called upon to face; and

"Whereas every honorable effort has been made conscientiously to keep this country from being drawn into this most savage, sanguinary, destructive, and unnecessary, but far-reaching, war the world has ever witnessed; and

"Whereas the German Government has denied to us the freedom of the seas, has destroyed our ships and shipping, and, without justification or warning, has ordered or approved the treacherous assassination of American seamen and citizens on neutral waters outside of any defined or pretended zone of danger; and

"Whereas, under the guise of friendship and the hospitality of the United States, the German Government has, through its accredited official representatives, plotted to embarrass and injure this Nation by fomenting racial and political intrigues among our people, by the use of money or the promise of support, by the establishment of secret cabals, hostile organizations, and schools of spies within our borders, by inflaming the minds of people in foreign lands and inciting them to make war upon this country; and

"Whereas every open or covert attack on this Government or on those who direct its destinies in war, naturally construed by enemies as furnishing evidence of disunion and weakness, invites insult and attack and should be rebuked and suppressed as a potential cause leading to war; and

"Whereas the loyalty, unity, and solidarity of the American people in support of the President and Congress in such a grave crisis is a most effective barrier to the insolence, oppression, and assault of foreign foes; and

"Whereas the time has now come for all patriotic Americans to take a stand with the Republic and the flag and the President, and to so announce their decision to the world: Therefore be it

"Resolved by this mass meeting of representative citizens of the State of Utah, assembled in the Tabernacle at Salt Lake City on this, the 26th day of March, 1917, That we solemnly reaffirm our allegiance to the flag and the Republic, our faith in the Constitution of the United States, our confidence in the Commander in Chief of our Army and Navy, our devotion to the principles of human liberty and to the rights of the weak to immunity from torture, slavery, debasement, and destruction by the strong, and we solemnly pledge ourselves here and now to loyally support the President of this Republic in whatever course may become necessary to enforce our rights as a people, to preserve our honor as a Nation, and to protect the lives of our fellow citizens at home or abroad, on land or sea.

"Resolved further, That a copy of these resolutions be prepared for presentation to the President of the United States by the congressional delegation from this State on behalf of the patriotic citizenship of Utah."

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have received a petition from the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Marquette, Mich., signed by the pastor of that church and many other citizens of that place, relative to universal military training, which I desire to have read.

There being no objection, the petition was read and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

FIRST METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH,
Marquette, Mich.

We express our conviction that the safety and security of our Republic requires that we definitely recognize the principle that the duty of defending the Nation rests equally upon all citizens capable of service. We would earnestly urge, therefore, that measures be taken for the immediate establishment of a permanent, adequate, and democratic system of national defense based upon universal military, industrial, and scientific service according to the capacity of each citizen.

We also express our conviction that if the United States of America speak as a nation fully prepared for defense it can best serve the cause of international righteousness and universal peace.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I present a memorial from the National Legal Fraternity of Phi Delta Phi in province convention assembled at Kansas City, Mo., March 30 and 31, 1917, pledging support to the President, and also a communication from the Volante, University of South Dakota, at Vermilion, pledging support to the President, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the memorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE VOLANTE,
UNIVERSITY OF SOUTH DAKOTA,
Vermilion, S. Dak., April 5, 1917.

Hon. E. S. JOHNSON
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The inclosed copy of a resolution sent to the President of the United States is sent you in pursuance of an order by the National Legal Fraternity of Phi Delta Phi in province convention assembled at Kansas City, Mo., March 30 and 31. The Senators from each State which was represented at the convention will receive the resolution, and with this from South Dakota we are glad to extend the heartiest congratulations for the stand taken by you in support of the rights of America, and again pledge our loyalty and support.

Respectfully, yours,
H. R. HANLEY,
Secretary of Convention.

In this grave international crisis, when the whole-souled loyalty and support of every American is demanded, the International Legal Fraternity of Phi Delta Phi in province convention assembled at Kansas City, Mo., March 31, 1917, representing the States of Texas, Oklahoma, Kansas, Colorado, Nebraska, and South Dakota, pledges its support to the President and our Congress in upholding American rights against all violators thereof by whatsoever means they may deem necessary.

Mr. THOMPSON. I present petitions in the form of telegrams and resolutions passed by the Kansas State Normal School, of Emporia; the Saline County Patriotic Defense League, of Salina; and of Elks lodges at Fort Scott, Emporia, Great Bend, and Wichita, all in the State of Kansas, declaring faith and allegiance and pledging support to the President and the Congress of the United States. I will not take the time to have them read, but I should like to have them printed in the RECORD, and where the petitions are signed by more than one person, I wish the first signature to be shown and the number of signatures.

There being no objection, the petitions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EMPORIA, KANS., April 3, 1917.

Senator WILLIAM THOMPSON,
Washington, D. C.:

Resolved, That Emporia Lodge, No. 633, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, hereby pledges our President its loyal and unwavering support in this grave crisis in the life of our Nation.

O. L. JILLSON,
Secretary Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, No. 633.

FORT SCOTT, KANS., April 4, 1917.

Hon. W. H. THOMPSON,
Washington, D. C.:

Greetings. In times like these we know no party, no creed, no division. The flag of our country is now over our altar, and we have all sworn to stand by it, and we will all stand by you and our President, to a man. Done by the order of the lodge, Fort Scott, Kans., April 3, 1917.

C. W. CRAIN,
Secretary Scott Lodge, No. 579,
Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

EMPORIA, KANS., April 6, 1917.

Senator WILLIAM H. THOMPSON,
Washington, D. C.:

We pledge our loyal support to the President and Congress of the United States in this supreme struggle to bring peace and safety to all nations, and to make the world itself at last free.

KANSAS STATE NORMAL SCHOOL.

GREAT BEND, KANS., April 4, 1917.

Senator W. H. THOMPSON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR BROTHER:

"Whereas by the request of the grand exalted ruler we are met in special session for the purpose of expressing our loyalty to the President of the United States in such action as he shall take in the present national emergency: Now, therefore be it

"Resolved, That Great Bend Lodge, No. 1127, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, hereby renews its allegiance to the Government of the United States of America and the flag of our country; and be it further

"Resolved, That we hereby pledge our support to the President and Congress in such action as they may deem essential for the protection of our country and maintenance of its honor and integrity."

CHAS. LISCHSKY, Exalted Ruler.
STANLEY HILL, Secretary.

WICHITA, KANS., April 4, 1917.

Senator THOMPSON,
Washington, D. C.:

The Elks' 1,000-strong host heartily indorse President Wilson's policy of preparedness and appreciate your support of him, and strongly recommend any resolution which tends to protect the honor, glory, and defense of our beloved country.

E. L. BROOKS, Exalted Ruler.

SALINA, KANS., April 3, 1917.

Hon. W. H. THOMPSON,
Washington, D. C.:

The Saline County Patriotic Defense League assures you of its devotion to the flag and the principles it represents, and that it is now preparing itself for actual military training, to be thereby better able to meet any eventuality requiring its service, and we are authorized to inform you that such services are at the disposal of the Government.

F. D. BLUNDON,
President of the League.
JAMES A. KIMBALL,
W. L. GANSSLE,
RALPH ANDERSON,
Committee.

Mr. THOMPSON. I also present resolutions adopted at a conference of the Eleventh District Rotary Clubs, offered by Rotarian George T. McDermott, of the Topeka (Kans.) Rotary Club, pledging their undivided and enthusiastic support to the administration, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution of conference of Eleventh District Rotary Clubs, offered by Rotarian George T. McDermott, of the Topeka (Kans.) Rotary Club, and passed at Tulsa, Okla., on March 20, 1917.

Whereas on this 20th day of March, 1917, this country is horrified by the news that the war lords of a great empire have shot down the American flag while that flag was protecting American lives and legitimate and peaceful commerce; and it now seems inevitable that this Nation shall be plunged into the cataclysm of war which has stunned the conscience of the world: Now, therefore be it

Resolved by the Eleventh District of Rotarians in conference assembled, That in event the American Nation becomes engaged in the world war now being waged across the seas, each club of this district give its undivided and enthusiastic support to the administration of this Government; and that, laying aside all other things, the first and best endeavors of each club here assembled shall be directed to the achievement of industrial and military efficiency, and, by precept and example, encourage that rigid economy necessary to such achievement; and to offer to the President of the United States the assistance of such clubs throughout the struggle; all to the end that the civilization which has come to us from the Cross of Calvary shall not perish from the earth.

Be it further resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States and to each Member of Congress from the States of Oklahoma, Missouri, and Kansas.

M. L. ALDEN, Chairman.
ROBT. L. MORTON,
FAY THOMPSON,
THOMAS E. WAGSTAFF,
W. F. STAHL,
Committee on Resolutions.
ROBERT STONE,
District Governor.
ADOLPH SCHOENHERR,
Secretary of District Conference.

Approved:

ARCH C. KLUMPH,
President of International Association of Rotary Clubs.

Mr. THOMPSON. I also present telegrams from the rotarians of the first and second congressional districts of Kansas, in attendance at the organization of the Lawrence (Kans.) Rotary Club, and also resolutions adopted at a mass meeting of citizens of Stafford, Kans., and vicinity, declaring faith and allegiance and pledging support to the President and the Congress of the United States, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objections, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LAWRENCE, KANS., April 8, 1917.

Hon. WM. H. THOMPSON,
The Senate, Washington, D. C.:

At the organization of the Lawrence, Kans., Rotary Club on one of our country's most momentous days, Friday, April 6, the Rotarians in attendance from the first and second congressional districts of Kansas subscribed to the following oath of allegiance and directed that a copy be sent to the President, the Senators, and the Congressmen from the first and second districts of Kansas:

"I, mindful of the solemn duty which confronts my country, hereby renew my undivided allegiance to the Government of the United States and reconsecrate myself to its great principles of justice and equality, and I do hereby solemnly swear that I will support the Constitution of the United States and the State of Kansas and obey all lawful commands of those in charge of the affairs of my Government; and in furtherance of this obligation I hereby pledge my whole-hearted support to the President of the United States in his efforts to preserve to posterity the blessings of civilization."

Mr. JAMES. I present a letter from citizens of German birth, which I desire to have printed in the RECORD together with other resolutions adopted by various organizations of Kentucky, pledging loyalty and support to the Government.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LOUISVILLE, KY., April 5, 1917.

Senator OLLIE M. JAMES,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Both Louis and I want to express to you our appreciation and gratitude at the fairness, sentiment, and feeling you displayed in your forceful and splendid indorsement of President Wilson's call to our country to enter a war which he has so long and so patiently evaded.

In our personal talks with you at different times, you have said to us how deeply the President felt the responsibility resting upon him and how hard he was striving to keep our country from being forced into this most unfortunate and bloody war, and we can and do sympathize with him in this hour of stress.

It is fortunate for the foreign-born citizens of our State that they have such a spokesman as you, and I only wish your eloquence and belief could reach every native citizen. There are, unfortunately, some who allow their prejudice and patriotism to overshadow their usual clearer vision, and in their enthusiasm and fervor attribute lack of American principles to loyal American subjects. Forbearance is a virtue that should and must be cultivated now in order to prevent any and all estrangements of the people of our country during the trying times to come.

During the past two and a half years it was only natural that citizens of this country had, and showed, a preference for that nation, in conflict, from which they sprung or immigrated. To do otherwise would have been unnatural; but, now, that our country has been forced to take part, the loyalty of all of these citizens, be they of German, English, French, or other birth, is, in the main, true to their new country and flag, and the few isolated instances of disloyalty should not be held against the many.

I speak of this at such length because even Louis and I have been slandered and accused of disloyalty and sedition, and such attacks mischievously or maliciously, but always secretively made, have caused us sorrow, more than anger, but we feel that those that know us do not question us. As to those who do not know us we need not care what their opinions are. It would be laughable if it were not serious, but we have been reported arrested, put under bond, and the Lord knows what all and, unfortunately, these reports have spread throughout the State and we receive letters daily asking us of the source of such reports and assuring us of the unbelief of them; but, like chaff before the wind, they are carried from place to place and, you may be sure, they lose nothing in volume or otherwise in the carrying.

Please pardon the length of this letter, but you know and understand us and we want you to know how we appreciated your speech.

With kindest personal regards from us both, I am,

Yours, sincerely,

OTTO SEELBACH.

LEXINGTON, KY., April 6, 1917.

Senator OLLIE M. JAMES,
Washington, D. C.:

DEAR SENATOR JAMES: I am inclosing herein the resolution adopted by the Get In And Get Out Club, composed of 100 of the youngest professional men in the city, at a special meeting for that purpose.

And I assure you you have the support of all the young men here in any course you may suggest to the Senate that will preserve the honor and integrity of the country.

Very respectfully,

GET IN AND GET OUT CLUB,
By JEFF T. JONES,
Corresponding Secretary.

Resolved, That we, members of the Get In And Get Out Club, of Lexington, Ky., regardless of whether war ensues between this country and Germany, or any other foreign power, do favor the immediate adoption by the United States Government of an approved system of universal and mandatory military training, providing for the disciplining and training of the youth of America, with subsequent liability to active service, and thus create a ready, efficient, and dependable reserve force for the national defense; and

Resolved, That we urge upon the President and Congress the prompt enactment of legislation which will adequately provide for such a system of universal and compulsory military training and the adoption at the same time of measures designed and calculated to secure the safety of the Republic and the maintenance of its integrity and honor both at home and abroad; and

Resolved, That we pledge to the President and the Government of the United States our loyal, cordial, and unfaltering support in the present crisis and solemnly declare, without condition or reservation, that we are for free America first, last, and at all times; and

Resolved further, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the President and to the Senators and Representatives from Kentucky in the National Congress and that a copy be also furnished to the press.

COVINGTON, KY., April 6, 1917.

Hon. OLLIE JAMES,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

HONORED SIR:—

Whereas our country is on the verge of a great crisis, upon the outcome of which depends the future welfare of our Nation; and

Whereas we approve the stand that our able President has taken and are united in our support of President Woodrow Wilson and his policies pertaining to international affairs: Therefore be it

Resolved, That Old Kentucky Lodge, No. 1359, Loyal Order of Moose, located at Covington, Ky., do hereby indorse our President and his international policy and stand firmly and solidly behind him and give him our hearty support; and be it further

Resolved, That we spread this motion upon our minutes; and be it finally

Resolved, That we send a copy of these resolutions to Hon. Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, and copies to United States Senators OLLIE JAMES and J. C. W. BECKHAM and Hon. A. B. ROUSE, our Representative in Congress.

Fraternally,

TRACY PALMER, Secretary.

COVINGTON (KY.) LODGE, NO. 314.
BENEVOLENT AND PROTECTIVE ORDER OF ELKS.
Covington, Ky., April 6, 1917.

Senator OLLIE JAMES,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am inclosing herewith a copy of resolution adopted by Covington Lodge of Elks at a meeting held last night upholding the course of the President and pledging him the loyal and active support of the lodge.

Yours, very truly, R. T. VON HOENE, Secretary.

Whereas our country is now facing a crisis which demands not only the undivided loyalty of all its citizens but their outspoken support of those directing the affairs of our Government as well; and

Whereas from the very nature of its organization the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks is under a peculiar obligation to help quicken the spirit of American patriotism: Therefore be it

Resolved at a regular meeting of the Covington (Ky.) Lodge of Elks, No. 314, held April 4, 1917, That this lodge fully indorses the patient and determined course of our President, Woodrow Wilson, in seeking to preserve American rights by peaceful means, and, the possibilities of negotiation having been exhausted, that it firmly stands behind him in every step he has taken to maintain those rights, including the breach of diplomatic relations with Germany and his address to Congress on April 2 and pledges its loyal and active support to the President and the Congress of the United States in whatever action they may take to uphold the rights, welfare, dignity, and the honor of America; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President and the Senators from Kentucky and the Representative from this district.

THEO. VON HOENE,
H. G. MEINERS,
GEO. E. PHILLIPS.

ASHLAND ROTARY CLUB,
Ashland, Ky., April 5, 1917.

Hon. OLLIE JAMES,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At a recent meeting of the Ashland Rotary Club I was directed to extend to the President and Representatives in Congress the unwavering support of its members in all efforts to uphold the honor of our country and their readiness to render any service and make any sacrifice demanded by the needs of the Nation.

Very respectfully, yours,

CHAS. B. DICKSON, Secretary.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, April 5, 1917.

Senator OLLIE JAMES,
Washington, D. C.

Dear SENATOR JAMES: I was instructed by the executive committee of the Federation of Churches of Cincinnati and Vicinity, which includes the churches of Covington and Newport, to send you the inclosed set of resolutions and to express to you our appreciation of the patriotic stand you have taken in support of the President.

With personal good wishes, I am,

Very truly, yours, FREDERICK L. FAGLEY.

THE POSITION OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH OF CINCINNATI AND VICINITY WITH REGARD TO THE PRESENT NATIONAL CRISIS.

Whereas the President of the United States has, "with a profound sense of the solemn and even tragical character of the step" he was taking, declared a state of war to exist between Germany and the United States; and

Whereas there is much confusion in the minds of many as to the Christian ethics of war and the relation of the Christian Church thereto, the Federation of Churches of Cincinnati and Vicinity desire to give expression to what it believes is the mind of the spirit within its members in relation to the great crisis confronting the Nation.

We must remind ourselves that there are inevitable differences of conviction and judgment among equally good and patriotic men, and it is not to be expected that there will be unanimity of feeling as to the righteousness of this war. We have no desire to defend one or to deplore another set of honest convictions. We are chiefly concerned that we shall maintain the Christian spirit of love and brotherliness in the presence of differences of judgment and of interpretation of the mind of Christ, our common Lord.

As Christians we can not but lament the necessity for war. As a method of determining the course of history, it carries us back to the days before civilization dawned, to the method of the jungle; in its appeal to physical force rather than to moral suasion, enlightened reason, and spiritual idealism it is subversive of the fundamental principles of the Christian religion. Christianity seeks to win men by love; its ends are constructive and not destructive; its method is self-sacrifice. Even in the time of war, and however strongly convinced of the inevitableness of the present situation, the Christian Church will continue to bear witness to its high hope of the coming of a day of the Lord when men shall learn and resort to war no more.

But we are in the dilemma of the great prophet-statesman of Israel who first uttered the clear hope of a day of universal peace, who, in his messages to his people, alternated visions of the ideal with the fearful realities which surrounded him in his nation's life. The Christian ideal can be realized only by slow progress, and to admit that we have not yet progressed to the realization of the ideal is not to be disloyal to it or to deny its desirability. The sad fact confronting us is that our Lord Christ has not yet come in triumph into the political kingdom of this world. Wrong and injustice and oppression must still be dealt with in individuals and in nations. The State must punish its individual criminals. We would that there were no criminals. And if we admit that fact, must we not allow a nation to resist by physical force a criminal government which attempts to inflict violence and injustice upon it? We would that there were no criminal nation. And so the time unhappily has not yet come when physical force, even from the practical Christian viewpoint, can be replaced wholly by the moral and spiritual appeal.

We may take courage in that the Christian ideal is so far realized that a war of offense is unqualifiedly condemned. And while perhaps no war is to be justified from the standpoint of the absolute Christian ideal, one can not read with an informed and unbiased mind President Wilson's message to Congress without feeling satisfied beyond the shadow of a doubt that from the standpoint of Christian morality relative to the stage of our present human development this Nation's course with reference to the German Government is completely justified. As Christians, therefore, with the vision of peace in a world at war, under the burden of the provocations of the Nation, and with a realization of the necessity to defend our liberties and to resist intolerable crimes against God and man, we can not, we dare not, condemn this war, much as we love peace and pray for its universal reign. Indeed, if we catch the spirit of the splendid idealism of the President's message, and feel anything of his sincerity in his interpretation of the high spirit and the unselfish purpose of the Nation in meeting with the challenge of the German Government without rancor and without vengeance, we feel assured not only that our cause is just but that it is Christian in aim and motive. Without hypocrisy or self-delusion, we may in an exalted Christian spirit of sacrifice accept the burden the Nation lays upon us in the defense of honor and freedom and in the promotion of the principles of democracy and of permanent peace throughout the world.

We would, therefore, urge upon the members of our churches every possible cooperation with the Government in promoting the efficiency of its war measures, in lending aid to soldiers and sailors through the work of the Red Cross Society, in promoting economic welfare by the cultivation of vegetable gardens, and in whatever other way appeal may be made or opportunity offered. We recommend that rooms in church buildings and parish houses be placed at the disposal of communities and groups of people who may desire to meet together for united effort of whatever kind. And, above all, we urge that all our work and plans be consecrated by a spirit of deep seriousness and with the sense of grave responsibility as to all that is involved in the war, and that to this end special meetings for prayer as well as for work be held, so that we may be saved from bitterness, hatred, and the spirit of revenge, and from everything unworthy of the high motives and aims to which the war is undertaken, and that we may unite our petitions to Almighty God "that overruling the counsel of men, setting straight the things they can not govern or alter, taking pity on the nations now in the throes of conflict, in His mercy and goodness, showing a way where man can see none, He may vouchsafe His children healing peace again, and restore once more that concord among men and nations without which there can be neither happiness nor true friendship, nor any wholesome fruit of toil or thought in the world, praying also to this end that He forgive us our sins, our ignorance of His holy will, our willfulness and many errors, and lead us in paths of obedience to places of vision and to thoughts and counsels that purge and make wise."

Mr. FLETCHER. I present a resolution adopted by the Board of Trade of Tampa, Fla., and a resolution adopted by the City Council of Gainesville, Fla., which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution adopted by Board of Trade of Tampa, Fla.

Whereas the improvement of waterways of this country is one of the most vital needs of the Nation for the development of its commerce, both in peace and in time of war; and

Whereas at this particular time the development of our waterways is one of the most important pieces of work that the Federal Government could undertake; and

Whereas the rivers and harbors bill which failed to pass during the last session of Congress was the most constructive piece of legislation ever attempted along this line, and its failure to pass meant that millions of dollars' worth of work would be left uncompleted at the end of the fiscal year, which would necessitate additional expense in taking the work up anew when appropriations are again made: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Tampa Board of Trade urges our Representatives in Congress to use every effort to have a bill, in substance, similar to the one drafted at the last session of Congress and passed by the House of Representatives enacted into law at this special session of the Sixty-fifth Congress; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to our Representatives in Congress and to the Chief of Engineers, Washington.

Passed this 2d day of April, 1917.

Hon. D. U. FLETCHER, Senator,
Hon. PARK TRAMMEL, Senator,
Hon. FRANK CLARK, Congressman,
Washington, D. C.:

DEAR SIRS: I have the honor of herewith handing you copy of resolution passed by the City Council of Gainesville, Fla., in regular session Monday night, April 2, 1917.

May the God of our fathers guide you in your actions for the sake of humanity at this great trying time.

I beg to be, yours, very truly, JOS. E. WAUGH,
City Clerk, Gainesville, Fla.

Resolutions.

Whereas the Hon. Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States, has repeatedly protested against the unlawful acts of the German Empire resulting in the destruction of property and loss of lives of American citizens engaged in peaceful trade; and

Whereas such protests have been unheeded, and the German Empire has declared its purpose of continuing its unlawful course and conduct; and

Whereas the President has determined that the honor of the United States required the severance of diplomatic relations with the German Empire and the assembling of Congress in extraordinary session to determine the future course of the Nation: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the city council of the city of Gainesville, Fla., hereby commend and approve most heartily the course and determination of the President as announced as evincing the highest wisdom and patriotism.

Resolved, That Congress should record its united support and approval to the end that the President be supported in all his efforts to maintain the honor, welfare, and just rights of this country against German encroachments.

Resolved, That all citizens of our city should give expression to such sentiments of loyalty and patriotism that Congress and all people may know that the rights of the American people must not be invaded by any nation and that American patriotism and loyalty neither knows nor tolerates either a divided allegiance or less than the highest measure of duty; that it recognizes but one flag and one country, giving to one a sublime loyalty, to the other the full measure of human endeavor—that one shall never be sullied and the honor of the other shall never be smirched.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be forwarded to the President, the Senators from Florida, the Hon. FRANK CLARK, the Representative from this congressional district, and copies be furnished the newspapers of this city by city clerk.

Mr. LODGE. I present a concurrent resolution passed by the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and also certain resolutions from towns in Massachusetts pledging support to the President. I ask that they may be printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, 1917.

Resolutions favoring the establishment of universal military and naval training.

Resolved, That the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts in general court assembled recommend the immediate establishment by Congress of an adequate system of universal military and naval training under the direction of the National Government; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent by the secretary of the Commonwealth to the President of the United States, to the presiding officer of each branch of Congress, and to each Senator and Representative from Massachusetts in Congress.

In senate adopted March 29, 1917.

In house of representatives adopted, in concurrence, March 30, 1917.

BOARD OF SELECTMEN,
Ashland, Mass., April 5, 1917.

Whereas the President of the United States of America has called Congress into extraordinary session to take action on a war resolution against the Imperial German Government: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the citizens of Ashland, Mass., in town meeting assembled, do hereby solemnly pledge their support to the President and Government of the United States of America to any action they deem necessary to maintain and protect the honor and safety of the American people and of the Government of the United States of America.

THE REPUBLICAN CLUB OF MASSACHUSETTS,
Boston, Mass., April 5, 1917.

Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting of the executive committee of the Republican Club of Massachusetts held this afternoon the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"Whereas the German Government, although solemnly bound by treaties of friendship to the United States, has for many months destroyed the lives and property of American citizens upon the high seas, has sought to array against us other nations, and has by intrigue and criminal conspiracy in our very midst rendered it impossible for us honorably to live longer at peace with it; and

"Whereas the President of the United States has called the attention of Congress and the country to these facts in an address worthy to take its place among our ablest state papers: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, The Republican Club of Massachusetts, an organization of twenty-five hundred members of the Republican Party, believing that party differences have no place in our foreign relations, hereby gladly and unreservedly pledges its support to the President and Congress of the United States in every measure they may take to uphold the independence of the United States, to secure that honorable treatment that we are entitled to receive from every other nation on earth, and to insure the safety and liberty of our citizens in their legitimate occupations throughout the world; be it further

"Resolved, That since it is apparent that these ends can only be secured by war, we believe that our Government should forthwith provide for universal military enrollment and training, for the organization of our vast industrial resources, and for every other honorable method of conducting the most speedily successful and therefore most humane warfare; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to the President of the United States and the Senators and Representatives of Massachusetts in Congress."

Yours, sincerely,

CHARLES H. GLIDDEN,
Assistant Secretary.

Resolutions passed by an audience of 1,500 Melrose citizens, at Memorial Hall, Melrose, Mass., on Sunday afternoon, April 1, 1917.

We, the citizens of Melrose, in mass meeting assembled, realizing the solemn crisis for ourselves and for our country that is now upon us, do hereby urge upon the President of the United States and upon all others in authority the selection of advisors and officials, regardless of political affiliations or personal relations, who shall bring to the Nation's need power, capacity, and trained understanding.

And, recognizing the fact that we can not pay for patriotic devotion, we hereby express our conviction that those who serve country and humanity in the Army and Navy should receive adequate compensation for such service, and we do hereby pledge ourselves and our possessions to the defense of freedom for our own citizens on land and sea, and to the service of all people who seek freedom in the common fellowship of nations and the brotherhood of man.

Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At the annual town meeting of the inhabitants of the town of Milford, Mass., held March 5, 1917, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"Whereas the purpose of President Wilson to take all necessary measures to see to it 'That this Republic do not perish from the face of the earth, and that it be a government of the people, by the people, for the people'; and

"Whereas by the constituted law of this land he has sought congressional support therefor, which has not been granted him through the unpatriotic acts of a few sworn officers of the Republic in the United States Senate: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the citizens of Milford, Mass., in annual town meeting assembled, That we pledge him our loyal support and sympathy in this national crisis, which he is trying to avert in the interest of all humanity.

"Resolved, That we, when the safety of this country is in danger, are neither Republican or Democrat, neither native born or alien, but are all supporters of the stability of this Government and of its head.

"Resolved, That we have only censure for those who have not patriotism enough to yield private opinion to public welfare.

"Resolved, That we heartily commend our great Senators, HENRY CABOT LODGE and JOHN W. WEEKS, for their splendid support for the measures propounded for national defense by President Wilson.

"Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to President Wilson, Senator LODGE, Senator WEEKS, and be given to the press."

The following resolution was adopted by the board of control of the Hasty Pudding Club (founded 1795, Harvard University) on the 3d of April, 1917, and ordered to be spread upon the records of the club:

"Resolved, That the present attitude maintained by the Government of the United States toward the Government of the German Empire on account of its indefensible actions on the high seas and elsewhere is correct in the light of international law and justified by the usage of civilized peoples in protecting national honor and national freedom.

"That our Government, in simple duty to the principles it rests upon and in obedience to its alliance with democracy throughout the world, must range its every resource on sea and on land against those forces which, having conspired for a generation to betray the peace of Europe and sacrifice humanity to despotism, now oppose and insult American rights and destroy American lives.

"That in undertaking to reestablish its individual freedom our Government should pursue such courses in alliance with the entente nations as will not only attain this end but will permanently assure mankind, so far as human vision can provide, against a recurrence of the evils which to-day halt civilization and threaten its very being.

"That the Hasty Pudding Club of Harvard College pledges its unwavering and loyal aid to the Government of the United States in its guidance of our people in their purpose, and for the better execution of this pledge, suspends indefinitely, such of its normal activities as do, and may be considered to, detract from the fullest possible application of its members to the service of our country; and finally

"Resolved, That the sense of this resolution be given adequate publicity, to the end that the echo of patriotism be increasingly heard from the universities throughout the length and the breadth of our land."

Recognizing the gravity of the present international situation as disclosed by the President in his message to the Congress of the United States of America; and

Whereas the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks has since its birth exemplified in its ritual and its services devotion to American ideals; symbolizing throughout the period of its existence service to country, this order with unswerving fidelity has made the flag the emblem of its cardinal virtue.

Recognizing that the flag fluttering from every masthead in all water routes of commerce and discovery expresses in the history it has wrought the declaration that the ocean is a highway in common for all nations and all peoples, that these Stars and Stripes have spelt in the glory of achievement the freedom of the seas; and

Whereas it appears that a foreign power autocratically assumes an abridgement of this principle, and in pursuance of its object has ruthlessly destroyed American property and lives: Be it

Resolved, That we, disciples of the flag that has known no butchery or oppression, no coercion or tyranny, the emblem that never waded through slaughter with lust of empire, the symbol that never destroyed a sister nation for vanity or gain, herewith approve the course of the President and offer the services of Lowell Lodge, No. 87, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, wherever and whenever they may be of aid and comfort to the Government: Be it further

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes and copies be forwarded to the President of the United States of America; the Senators from Massachusetts; the Hon. JOHN JACOB ROGERS, Congressman from this district; the Hon. James E. O'Connell, mayor of Lowell and chairman of the committee on public safety; grand exalted ruler of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; and to the public press of Lowell.

Mr. NEW. I present a memorial from the General Assembly of the State of Indiana, favoring the placing of a suitable and appropriate monument over the grave of Gen. William Henry Harrison, the ninth President of the United States, at North Bend, Ohio, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF INDIANA,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, Ed Jackson, secretary of state of the State of Indiana, hereby certify that the annexed pages contain a full, true, and complete copy of concurrent resolution No. 1 of the General Assembly of the State of Indiana, approved March 1, 1917, as the same appears on file, as the law directs, in this office.

In testimony whereof I hereunto set my hand and affix the great seal of the State of Indiana. Done at my office in the city of Indianapolis this 2d day of April, A. D. 1917.

[SEAL.]

ED JACKSON,
Secretary of State.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE STATE OF INDIANA.

Concurrent resolution 1.

A concurrent resolution memorializing the Senators and the Members of Congress representing the State of Indiana in Congress to vote for a bill now pending to provide a suitable and appropriate monument over the last resting place of Gen. William Henry Harrison, the ninth President of the United States, at North Bend, Ohio, and the care of his burial place.

Whereas the body of Gen. William Henry Harrison, the ninth President of the United States, and the governor of the Northwest Territory, comprising the present States of Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, and Minnesota, rests in a simple tomb overlooking the Ohio River, without a monument and without any marking whatever, at North Bend, Ohio, near the site of Gen. William Henry Harrison's log-cabin home, and without any suitable recognition of the great military, patriotic, and industrial work of Gen. William Henry Harrison in the protection and development of the United States, and particularly of the great Central West; and

Whereas an appreciative Nation has by appropriate monuments and the care of the burial places frequently given deserved recognition and honor to former Presidents of the United States and their services to the country and its people; and

Whereas the long, arduous, and valuable service of Gen. Harrison rendered the country and its people in pioneer days as governor of the Northwest Territory in the development of the States comprising the now great Central West, and especially in the protection given the pioneer settlers from the Indians and in defeating the great Indian uprising headed by Indian Chieftain Tecumseh, in the Battle of Tippecanoe, in Indiana; as a general in the Army of the United States in the War of 1812, in saving Detroit and Toledo and driving the British from the States comprising the Northwest Territory, and administering to their forces a severe defeat in the Battle of the Thames, in Canada; as a Senator of the United States; in the diplomatic service of the United States, and as President of the United States, justifies recognition by a suitable and appropriate monument over his last resting place and the care of his burial place by a grateful Government; and

Whereas a bill has been introduced in the Senate of the United States and is now pending having for its sole purpose and object the erection of an appropriate monument over the last resting place of Gen. William Henry Harrison, at North Bend, Ohio, and the care of the burial place hereafter by the Government: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That the Legislature of the State of Indiana do cordially and earnestly indorse the purpose and object of a bill now pending in Congress to erect an appropriate and deserved monument over the last resting place of Gen. William Henry Harrison, the ninth President of the United States, and to provide for the care of the burial tract, and that the General Assembly of the State of Indiana requests the Senators and Representatives from the State of Indiana now serving in the Congress of the United States to vote for the bill and use their solicitous efforts toward its passage: Be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Indiana be directed to send a certified copy of these resolutions to each Senator and Member of Congress from the State of Indiana; be it further

Resolved, That the governor of the State of Indiana be requested to send a certified copy of these resolutions to the governors of the States of Illinois, Michigan, Minnesota, and Wisconsin, the other States once a part of the Northwest Territory, with a request that the resolutions be transmitted to the legislatures of these States, to the end that they pass similar joint resolutions for the purpose of appropriately honoring the memory and valuable services of Gen. William Henry Harrison in protecting and developing the Northwest Territory, now so important a part of the United States, and as the ninth President of the United States.

D. FRANK CULBERTSON,
Senator.

Approved March 1, 1917.

J P. GOODRICH, Governor.

Mr. NEW. I present petitions from various patriotic organizations in the State of Indiana indorsing the attitude of the President and of the Government at this time and pledging support and fealty. I ask that they be printed in the RECORD and referred to the appropriate committee.

There being no objection, the petitions were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., April 6, 1917.

Hon. H. S. NEW,
Senate, Washington, D. C.:

On motion duly seconded and carried the Caroline Scott Harrison Chapter pledges its loyalty to the President of the United States and asks our Congressmen and Senators to uphold the hands of the President in every way in this crisis, because we believe that the United States is going to war and fight for democracy and liberty and to aid our sister Republic, France, and repay the debt that we have owed the 4,000 Frenchmen under La Fayette, Rochambeau, and De Grasse when they came to help us in our struggle for liberty and democracy. We have voted for universal service and preparedness, and we offer our services again to our President.

S. E. H. PARKINS,
Regent Caroline Scott Harrison Chapter, D. A. R.

ANDERSON LODGE, NO. 29, B. P. O. E.,
Anderson, Ind., April 4, 1917.

Be it resolved by Anderson Lodge, No. 209, of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of Anderson, Ind., That we are unreservedly in favor of putting our country in shape to protect the rights of its citizens anywhere on earth, and that we pledge ourselves to our country's defense in the present crisis; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be mailed to United States Senators NEW and WATSON, Congressman VESTAL, Grand Exalted Ruler Rightor, and that the resolutions be wired to President Wilson.

Adopted at a session of Anderson Lodge, No. 209, Wednesday evening, April 4.

BENJ. F. ALFORD,
Exalted Ruler.

We, citizens of the United States assembled in mass meeting at Princeton, Ind., publicly declare our firm adherence to the ideals of the founders of this Republic, as the same are indicated by our national history and traditions and are set forth in our Federal Constitution, and to the fundamental principles of liberty, equality, and justice that are the inheritance of every American, whether native or adopted.

We insist upon national honor and national self-respect, and it is our unqualified conviction that the maintenance and preservation of these is a prime duty of government.

We assert, without reservation or qualification, that the constitutional rights of American citizens should protect them on our borders and go with them throughout the world, and that every American citizen residing or having property in any foreign country is entitled to, and must be given, the full protection of the United States Government, both for himself and for his property.

We indorse unreservedly every course of action on the part of our National Government, whether past, present, or future, designed for the preservation and upholding of the rights of our citizens, under the laws of nations, upon the high seas, and insist upon the employment of the powers and resources of the Nation to the extent requisite to their maintenance.

We entertain no resentment toward the German people, and for the great body of our fellow citizens of German birth or descent our sentiments are of profoundest respect and confidence.

We denounce in the fullest sense of the meaning of the word the Hohenzollern autocracy and the monstrosity called "Prussianism" as inimical to the cause of free government throughout the world and as the source and cause of the frightful state under which the peoples of Europe are groaning at this time, and we deem it to be the duty of every free people, in defense of their own liberties, to withhold from these every form of countenance, encouragement, and aid.

We hold that property of citizens of the United States upon the high seas has been destroyed by the action of the Imperial Government of Germany wantonly, piratically, and in contempt of international law and usages; that American citizens have been injured and murdered cruelly and without reasonable pretense of justification; that our commerce has been hampered and destroyed and that this Nation and its flag have been insulted in wanton defiance of the obligations of justice, decency, and international usage.

We are persuaded that the ultimate end and object of the Imperial Government of Germany, in the inciting and prosecution of the great war in Europe and in its unjustifiable conduct toward the United States and its citizens, is the overthrow of Republican institutions and the reestablishment in the nations of the world of autocratic governments.

We indorse the severance of our diplomatic relations with the Imperial Government of Germany, and it is our mature conviction that the indignities suffered by this Nation and its people, the present menace to free institutions throughout the world, and the dictates of our own national self-respect demand that this Nation shall enter upon a state of war with that Government, and we approve the steps that have been taken by our National Government to this end.

We believe that war means war, and it is teh earnest hope of our people that when war against the German Government shall be begun this Nation shall strike, strike first, and strike hard, to the end that our enemies and their institutions shall be overthrown without delay and the peace of the world shall be restored upon a basis of permanency.

Mr. NEW. I also present a telegram in the nature of a petition from the Commercial Club of Gary, Ind., praying for a vigilant prosecution of the war with Germany, for universal military training, and for the adoption of an equitable method of Army conscription, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GARY, IND., April 5, 1917.

Hon. HARRY S. NEW,
Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Resolutions adopted at a meeting of Gary Commercial Club on Wednesday evening, April 4.

Germany stands convicted before the court of the family of nations of having commenced the most terrible war in the history of the world, and in the prosecution thereof has ruthlessly violated all the rights of neutral nations, humanity, and international law, citizens of this country having been deliberately murdered; the flag of this country no longer affords protection to our citizens as against that country; our neighbors are encouraged to war against us; the hospitality of the country is repaid by the invasion of spies; our Nation was founded and has been maintained on the principle that it was its duty to protect its citizens against the aggressions and violations of their rights by other nations; "A million for defense, but not one cent for tribute," "Once an American always an American," "Our man alive or your man dead," are words typical of the spirit of the Nation; our President has advised the Congress of the United States that he can not secure a discontinuance of the war waged against this country by Germany without a recourse to arms, and has further advised it that a state of war shall be declared to exist with Germany in order that he may be able to secure our country and its citizens their rights and that the sacred rights of democracy and of all mankind may be vindicated: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this body unreservedly indorse the action of the President of the United States and his address to the Congress on April 2, 1917; and be it further

Resolved, That it is the sense of this body that the war upon which this country is entering should be prosecuted with all the strength of the Nation, and to that end the Congress should provide for a system of universal training and an equitable method of Army conscription; and be it further

Resolved, That the action of this body be communicated to the Hons. HARRY S. NEW and JAMES WATSON, Senators, and to the Hon. WILLIAM R. WOOD, Representative.

GARY COMMERCIAL CLUB.

Mr. NEW presented a petition of sundry citizens of Elkhart County, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation to found the Government on Christianity, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KELLOGG presented petitions of sundry citizens of Minnesota, praying for relief from the high price of binder twine, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Minneapolis, Minn., praying for the passage of the so-called daylight saving bill, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Benson, Minn., remonstrating against the use of Federal aid on only trunk roads and State roads, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. BRADY. I have received a telegram from the Joint Committee of Common Defense of Spokane, Wash., and Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, representing the citizens of eastern Washington and northern Idaho relative to the establishment of an aviation station, offering the ground, and proposing to furnish five or more aeroplanes for war purposes at the expense of citizens and civic bodies of the two States, which I ask may be read.

There being no objection, the telegram was read, as follows:

COEUR D'ALENE, IDAHO, April 8, 1917.

JAMES H. BRADY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The Joint Committee of Common Defense of Spokane and Coeur D'Alene, representing the citizenship of eastern Washington and the panhandle of Idaho, desire to equip and establish an aviation station and to furnish five or more aeroplanes for war purposes at the expense of citizens and civic bodies of our two States. We ask if a school of aviation can be established here with Government supervision or approval. Both cities offer free adequate grounds for this purpose. Please confer with War Department and advise by wire what can be done, how to proceed, and if aeroplanes are available.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I present petitions and resolutions from various societies in regard to universal military training and supporting the policy of the President. I ask that they may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the proper committee.

There being no objection, the petitions and resolutions were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PLAINFIELD, N. J., March, 1917.

Hon. JOSEPH S. FRELINGHUYSEN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: We, the undersigned, citizens of Plainfield, N. J., and vicinity, regardless of our past political affiliations, unite in urging you at the approaching session of Congress to give your unqualified support to such form of resolution concerning the relations of this country with Germany as the President may in his address to Congress recommend, having full confidence that such action as he may recommend will fully comply with the demands of the honor and interests of this country, as well as of our duty to the cause of humanity, civilization, and international justice.

If such action as the President may recommend should lead to war, we believe that such war should be prosecuted with all the vigor this country can muster, not as an independent enterprise but in cordial cooperation with the entente allies for the defeat of the common enemy.

In any event, we urge your unremitting support for the prompt passage, among other things, of legislation establishing a system of universal military service under Federal control. We believe that this is necessary for the national defense in addition to such other legislation as may be necessary to authorize the formation of a volunteer army for immediate use should the country become now involved in war.

Finally we pledge you our loyal support in all measures which may be taken to uphold the Government and provide for a vigorous prosecution of any war in which the country may become now involved.

Respectfully, yours,

GEO. C. MELLICK
(And others).

Resolution by Dr. R. B. Glasgow.

Whereas we view with serious apprehension the unfortunate international complication that will probably involve our Nation in a war, the cost, course, and outcome of which no man can foresee: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Board of Chosen Freeholders of Burlington County, N. J., That, while we recognize the gravity of the situation, depreciate the same, and pray for peace, nevertheless we are determined to do our whole duty as citizens, and we hasten to tender our earnest sympathy and assurance of active support to President Wilson and the Congress of the Nation, in whose wisdom and judgment we have entire confidence, an expression of which sentiments we hereby record; and be it further

Resolved, That the clerk of this board be, and hereby is, directed to remit certified copies of these resolutions to the New Jersey Members of the United States Senate, to Hon. ISAAC BACHARACH, Member of Congress from this district, and to Joseph P. Tumulty, private secretary, Executive Mansion, Washington, D. C.

A true copy.

HARRY HAWKINS, Jr., Clerk.

Adopted April 4, 1917.

Resolutions adopted at the patriotic mass meeting held in Englewood, N. J., March 24, 1917.

Whereas Germany has destroyed our ships, murdered our citizens, restricted our commerce by illegal submarine warfare, and attempted to array against us the friendly powers, Japan and Mexico, in a plot to dismember our Nation; and

Whereas by these and other hostile acts Germany is now virtually making war against us, the United States:

Resolved, That we approve the action of the President in severing diplomatic relations with Germany, in deciding to arm American vessels, and in calling Congress in extra session;

Resolved, That we call upon our Government for prompt, vigorous, and courageous leadership in the immediate mobilizing of the entire naval, military, and industrial strength of the Nation, including the augmenting of our Army and Navy for the effective protection of American rights and the faithful discharge of America's duties in the present crisis;

Resolved, That we urge upon Congress the immediate enactment of a universal military-training bill providing for a permanent national defense based on the duty of every able-bodied citizen to share in the protection of his country and in the maintenance of its high ideals;

Resolved, That we declare our deep conviction that the principles of national conduct governing Germany's actions in the present war are inconsistent with the principles of democracy and with the purposes and aspirations of this Republic, and we hold that the time has now come when it is the duty of this Nation to take part in the common task of defending civilization and human liberty against German military aggression; and

Whereas our Government insevering diplomatic relations with Germany gave notice that further overt acts of war would be forcibly resisted, and said overt acts have been committed in the sinking of the Laconia, the City of Memphis, the Illinois, the Vigilancia, and other vessels with the loss of American lives: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we call upon Congress as soon as assembled to declare that by the acts of Germany a State of war does now exist between that country and the United States.

The following was unanimously adopted at a mass meeting of the Young Men's Hebrew Association of Perth Amboy, N. J., Tuesday evening, April 3, 1917, on the occasion of the memorial services in honor of the late Falk Younker, national field secretary of the Associated Young Men's and Young Women's Hebrew and Kindred Associations:

"Resolved, That the members of the Young Men's Hebrew Association of Perth Amboy, N. J., in meeting assembled, hereby affirm their loyalty and love for America and all it stands for; that we pledge ourselves to aid in the protection and defense of our homes and country, and, when called upon, to serve our cause with fidelity and devotion.

"We are in accord with the action of the President of the United States, and urge our Representatives in Congress to uphold him in his noble efforts; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to Senator WILLIAM HUGHES and United States Senator JOSEPH S. FRELINGHUYSEN and to Mayor John F. Ten Broeck, of Perth Amboy."

Resolutions adopted at regular session of Englewood Lodge, No. 1157, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, held in Englewood, N. J., March 30, 1917.

Hon. JOSEPH FRELINGHUYSEN,
The Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

SIR:

Whereas Germany has destroyed our ships, murdered our citizens, restricted our commerce by illegal submarine warfare, and attempted to array against us the friendly powers Japan and Mexico in a plot to dismember our Nation; and

Whereas by these and other hostile acts Germany is now virtually making war against us, the United States:

Resolved, That we approve the action of the President in severing diplomatic relating with Germany, in deciding to arm American vessels, and in calling Congress in extra session.

Resolved, That we call upon our Government for prompt, vigorous, and courageous leadership in the immediate mobilizing of the entire naval, military, and industrial strength of the Nation, including the augmenting of our Army and Navy, for the effective protection of American rights and the faithful discharge of America's duties in the present crisis.

Resolved, That we urge upon Congress the immediate enactment of a universal military training bill providing for a permanent national defense based on the duty of every able-bodied citizen to share in the protection of his country and in the maintenance of its high ideals.

Resolved, That we declare our deep conviction that the principles of national conduct governing Germany's actions in the present war are inconsistent with the principles of democracy and with the purposes and aspirations of this Republic; and we hold that the time has now come when it is the duty of this Nation to take part in the common task of defending civilization and human liberty against German military aggression; and

Whereas our Government in severing diplomatic relations with Germany gave notice that further overt acts of war would be forcibly resisted, and said overt acts have been committed in the sinking of the Laconia, the City of Memphis, the Illinois, the Vigilancia, and other vessels, with the loss of American lives: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we call upon Congress, as soon as assembled, to declare that by the acts of Germany a state of war does now exist between that country and the United States.

Respectfully, yours,

JOHN J. CLARK,
Exalted Ruler.

RIDGEWOOD, BERGEN COUNTY, N. J.,
April 2, 1917.

Hon. JOSEPH S. FRELINGHUYSEN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The following resolution was unanimously adopted by the citizens of Ridgewood and vicinity in mass meeting assembled to the number of about 800, on Saturday night, March 31, 1917, and we were instructed to forward the same to you:

"Resolved, That we affirm our loyalty and support to the President in any action he may take to uphold American rights on land or sea, and to defend our honor, our peace, our liberty, and our homes; and be it further

"Resolved, That we earnestly urge the President and Congress to favor the immediate adoption of the system of universal military training and service, as expressed in the Chamberlain bill, which we believe to be the only proper system of defense for a democracy."

Yours, with respect,

D. A. GARBER,
Mayor of Ridgewood, Chairman.
R. T. WILSON,
Secretary.

FREEHOLD, N. J., March 28, 1917.

We, the undersigned, believing in the development of young men to become highly efficient in whatever task may be undertaken by them, and believing that military service is one of the methods in the development of the young men for these tasks, request you to do all in your power to secure the prompt passage of a bill adequately providing for universal compulsory military training and service.

DAVID VANDEWIER PERRINE

MORRISTOWN, N. J., March 31, 1917.

Hon. JOSEPH S. FRELINGHUYSEN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The undersigned American citizens, residents of Morris County, N. J., actuated by sincere patriotism, love of country, and humanity, wish to urge you to consider with an open mind the various plans that have been worked out by students of international law, peace organizations, etc., for honorably preserving this country from the scourge of war.

Some of these plans which we earnestly hope will be discussed in Congress are:

(1) Joint commission of inquiry and conciliation.
(2) Conference of neutrals.
(3) Mediation.

We are not students of international law, but statements that have been brought to our attention in regard to the above lead us to believe that there are honorable ways to keep out of this European war, and our natural instincts of humanity and democracy cry out to our Representatives to spare no efforts to that end.

We feel that we are not alone in the above views and we want to urge others who feel the same way to make their opinion felt at Washington.

Most cordially, yours,

ALFRED A. LEWIS
(And others).
PASSAIC, N. J.

Hon. J. S. FRELINGHUYSEN,
Washington, D. C.:

We submit the following for your consideration and guidance:

Pending recognition of the fact by Congress, our country is practically at war.

We therefore are in favor of—

1. Compulsory universal service in the Army or Navy, with promotion to various grades of command through capacity and meritorious service only.

This is covered by the Chamberlain bill.

2. Aeroplanes are the eyes of the Army and Navy; without them both arms are helpless. Bulgaria has twice as many aeroplanes as the United States; Canada appropriates $80,000,000 for aeronautics—contrasted with our $20,000,000. Admiral Peary says this should be at least $100,000,000. We must have a department of aeronautics, with the most efficient organizer obtainable as its representative in the Cabinet.

3. Industrial preparedness to insure the proper production of all supplies in the quality, quantity, and time of delivery required. Purchases by the Government to be made on the basis of cost plus a normal rate of profit fixed by Congress, with rigid regulations for the maintenance of quality, with drastic penalties for their nonobservance.

4. The citizens doing their part as outlined above, and giving life and service to the support of the country, have the right to expect that the Government shall place at the head of the different departments the men who are best fitted by brain power and experience to meet America's need, irrespective of creed and party. This idea has been carried out in England and France by the so-called coalition cabinets.

PETER E. ALLIOT
(And others).

To the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

As an American, faithful to American ideals of justice, liberty, and humanity, and confident that the Government has exerted its most earnest efforts to keep us at peace with the world, I hereby declare my absolute and unconditional loyalty to the Government of the United States, and pledge my support to you in protecting American rights against unlawful violence upon land and sea, in guarding the Nation against hostile attacks, and in upholding international right.

Mr. WEEKS presented resolutions adopted by the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, favoring universal military and naval training, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented petitions of the Fish and Game Association of Lowell and of sundry citizens of Ashland, in the State of Massachusetts, offering support to the President, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Massachusetts, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GALLINGER. I present a telegram from the Christian Herald indorsing the "Pinchot plan," so called, as safe, sane, and loyal. I ask that the telegram be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., April 2, 1917.

Hon. JACOB H. GALLINGER,
Washington, D. C.:

We heartily indorse the Pinchot plan as a safe, sane, loyal, and just method of distributing the burdens and costs of war. In behalf of patriotic Christian Americans in all sections who are loyal to the Government the Christian Herald appeals to you in this crisis to stand fast for this high ideal.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Mr. NELSON presented petitions of the Commercial Club of St. Cloud and of the Six Thirty Council of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Cloquet, in the State of Minnesota, offering support to the President, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. KNOX presented a petition of the Maritime Exchange of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the passage of the so-called river and harbor bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CUMMINS. I send to the desk a telegram submitting resolutions adopted at a mass meeting of citizens of Des Moines, Iowa, relating to war, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DES MOINES, IOWA, April 4, 1917.

Senator A. B. CUMMINS,
Washington, D. C.:

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted at a mass meeting of 10,000 citizens of Des Moines to-night:

"Whereas the greatest war in the world's history is now being waged between democracy and constitutional governments on the one hand and autocracy and despotic governments on the other hand; and

"Whereas in spite of the efforts of this Nation to maintain an attitude of neutrality and fairness to all the belligerent nations, the German Government, without excuse or justification, has repeatedly made war upon the United States, resulting in the murder of our citizens, the destruction of our ships, and the paralysis of our commerce; and

"Whereas every promise made to the United States has since been broken, and almost every day brings some new outrage and some new violation of American rights, with further loss of American lives and further destruction of American property; and

"Whereas the German Government, while professing friendship for our people and while the German ambassador was enjoying the hospitality and protection of our Government, was guilty of attempting, by secret plots, to create war between this Nation and a great nation with whom we are at peace and amity; and

"Whereas the German Government is now engaged in a world propaganda of national race prejudice and hatred; and

"Whereas the German Government has flagrantly thrown her international agreements; considered her treaties as but scraps of paper; ruthlessly invaded and made war upon Belgium, a nation she was in honor bound to protect; and disregarded in a most shameful and brutal manner the rights of neutrals; and

"Whereas she now stands as the exponent of the doctrine of force and militarism, and is now proclaiming and pursuing a war of ruthlessness and frightfulness; and

"Whereas the triumph of these policies will be subversive of the principles of free institutions and free governments for which our forefathers fought and which our boys in blue died to defend; and

"Whereas the rights of neutrals, the principles of free institutions, the cause of humanity, and the peace of the world are now in jeopardy as a result of Prussian militarism: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we heartily indorse the message of the President in urging Congress to declare that a state of war now exists between the German Government and our own Nation, and we here and now, with a full realization of the consequences of our acts, declare that the time has arrived when America can no longer suffer these outrages against her citizens, against her commerce, and against her sovereignty, and that she can no longer remain indifferent to the rights of humanity, the cause of freedom, and the permanent peace of the world; therefore be it

"Resolved, That we call upon our Government to immediately mobilize the entire resources of the Nation and to use every means necessary, both defensive and offensive, consistent with the principles of international law, to protect the honor of our Nation and the rights of our citizens, whether upon land or sea; and be it

"Resolved, That we urge upon Congress the immediate enactment of a universal military training bill, based on the duty of every able-bodied citizen to share in the protection of his country and in the maintenance of its high ideals; and be it

"Resolved, That Congress immediately provide for the creation of a separate department of aeronautics, to give our country the great air fleet which its importance deserves and its safety requires; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted to the President of the United States, to our Senators, the Hon. ALBERT B. CUMMINS and the Hon. WILLIAM S. KENYON, and to each of our Congressmen."

JOHN MACVICAR,
Mayor of Des Moines, Chairman of Meeting.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I present resolutions, which I send to the desk, adopted by students of the State College of Washington and other organizations, offering their services to the Government in this emergency, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PULLMAN, WASH., April 4, 1917.

Senator MILES POINDEXTER,
Washington, D. C.:

Whereas there has never been a well-defined military policy of the United States, and such as the Nation has had has been adopted to serve a temporary purpose and has always proved unreliable, faulty, and inefficient, resulting in a useless sacrifice of life and treasure and prolonging of wars; and

Whereas the Nation has never been adequately prepared for war, and such preparation as we have had has been based upon a fallacious supposition that men may be trained for war when war is imminent; and

Whereas preparedness is an insurance against war; and

Whereas all citizens of the land owe the same obligation to defend the Nation as the Nation does to protect its citizens; and

Whereas the Nation is made of all nationalities, many of whom have not had an opportunity to become acquainted with its traditions, duties, obligations, and ideals; and

Whereas we believe that universal military training is the only solution of these problems, and that this will be of inestimable value in the moral, mental, and physical development of our people: Therefore be it

Resolved by the cadet corps of the State College of Washington, That we give our unqualified approval of and support to universal military training as proposed by the General Staff; and be it further

Resolved, That copies be furnished the press and the Washington delegation in Congress.

CLARENCE W. LAIRD.

MONTESANO, WASH., April 4, 1917.

MILES POINDEXTER,
Care Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

Whereas the United States to-day faces the greatest crisis of half a century and must defend its national honor and liberties against a foreign foe, it becomes the duty of all true Americans to pledge their loyalty to our Government and as a united Nation face calmly the issues which have been forced upon us: Therefore be it

Resolved by the citizens of Montesano here assembled, That we heartily approve of the action of President Wilson and our Government in declaring a state of war after exhausting every effort to maintain peace with honor and pledge our lives and resources to the cause of our country; and be it further

Resolved, That plans for universal military training are indorsed and approved.

B. G. CHENEY,
Chairman Citizens' Mass Meeting.

EVERETT, WASH., April 2, 1917.

Hon MILES POINDEXTER,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

Everett Spanish War veterans pledge support to the President of United States in maintaining American honor and protecting American citizens at home or abroad. We know what war means, but will face it again rather than tolerate murder and piracy. This answers Emergency Peace Association's local advertisement.

CHAS. A. TURNER,
Adjutant Camp 9, Spanish War Veterans.

SPOKANE, WASH., April 4, 1917.

Hon MILES POINDEXTER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The lumber manufacturers of the inland empire are unanimously back of the President and the Congress of the United States, and similarly in favor of universal military training. We urge your cooperation and support.

WESTERN PINE MANUFACTURERS' ASSOCIATION.

PULLMAN, WASH., April 5, 1917.

Hon MILES POINDEXTER,
Washington, D. C.:

Whereas the United States of America faces a crisis demanding the united support and whole-hearted cooperation of every man and woman in this Nation; and

Whereas the associated students of the State College of Washington have the utmost confidence in the wisdom and courage of the national leaders at Washington; and

Whereas the associated students of this college, in common with the students of colleges and universities throughout the land, are desirous of offering their best services in this time of need: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the students of the State College of Washington, individually and collectively pledge to the Nation the full strength of our powers, to be used in any way the National Government shall direct: And be it

Resolved further, That this resolution shall be incorporated in the minutes of the associated students of the State College of Washington and that a copy shall be forwarded to the Washington Representatives and Senators at Washington.

THE ASSOCIATED STUDENTS OF WASHINGTON STATE COLLEGE.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask to have printed in the RECORD resolutions adopted by J. T. Stuart Camp, No. 1294, ex-Confederate Veterans, of Van Buren, Ark., supporting the action of the Government in declaring a state of war between the United States and Germany.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions introduced by Capt. John Steward, W. T. England, Sam R. Chew, members of the camp of Ex-Confederate Veterans, and unanimously adopted by said camp.

Whereas the Congress of the United States of America by joint resolution did, on the 2d of April, A. D. 1917, declare a state of war to exist between the Government of the United States of America and the Imperial Government of Germany; and

Whereas this state of war has been forced upon the United States by the said Imperial Government of Germany, manifesting by diverse overt acts a disregard for the property and lives and rights of the citizens of the United States of America upon the high seas; and

Whereas we, as patriots and sons of patriots of the United States of America, believe that our rights as free men, and our dignity as a people and a Government, should be protected, maintained, and perpetuated at all cost of treasure and lives; and

Whereas we, as a unit, most unqualifiedly indorse and commend our most excellent President, Woodrow Wilson, in his efforts to maintain our dignity and freedom as a people and as a Nation, and the action of Congress in so declaring said state of war to exist: Therefore be it

Resolved, That T. J. Stuart Camp of Ex-Confederate Veterans, in the city of Van Buren, in the State of Arkansas, do hereby pledge to the President and to the people of the United States of America our lives, our fortunes, and the lives and fortunes of our sons and descendants for the successful termination of this war that has been forced upon us; and be it further

Resolved, That while our physical bodies are somewhat impaired by age, yet our love of country, our loyalty to the principles and purposes of our Government, burns within our hearts as fervently, as brightly, and as hopefully, and with the same earnestness and devotion as it did to the cause we fought for and lost; and be it further

Resolved, That we, as a camp of Ex-Confederate Veterans, in official meeting assembled, do hereby tender to the President of the United States our services, jointly and severally, and that we hold ourselves ready and willing at a moment's notice or command to go where and when we may be ordered in service of our common country in any capacity; and be it further

Resolved, That our commander and adjutant immediately mail over their official signatures a copy of these resolutions to Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, and to JOE T. ROBINSON, our senior Senator, for such action as they may deem necessary to be taken in the premises.

CERTIFICATE.

We, the undersigned, David W. Brodie, as commander, and Charles T. Ward, as adjutant, of J. T. Stuart Camp, No. 1294, of Ex-Confederate Veterans, at Van Buren, in the State of Arkansas, do thereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and perfect copy of the resolutions passed by said camp in an official meeting of said camp had and held in said city of Van Buren and State of Arkansas on the 3d day of April, A. D. 1917.

Witness our official hand, as said commander and adjutant, at Van Buren, in the State of Arkansas, on this the 3d day of April, A. D. 1917.

D. W. BRODIE, Commander.
CHAS. T. WARD, Adjutant.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 13) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and I submit a report (No. 3) thereon.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am also directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 14) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, to report it with amendments, and I submit a report (No. 4) thereon. I desire to state that as soon as the morning hour has been concluded I shall ask to have these bills taken up for consideration in the order in which I have reported them.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 5) thereon.

DESTRUCTION OF WAR MATERIAL AND TRANSPORTATION FACILITIES.

Mr. OVERMAN. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report unanimously, without amendment, the bill (S. 383) to punish the destruction or injuring of war material and war transportation facilities by fire, explosives, or other violent means, and to forbid hostile use of property during time of war, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the words "war material," as used herein, shall include arms, armament, ammunition, clothing, food, supplies, stores, and all other articles of whatever description requisite to, or intended to be used in connection with, the conduct of war by the United States, as well as all machinery and other articles and accessories required for or connected with the production or manufacture of such war material.

The words "war premises," as used herein, shall include all buildings, grounds, mines, or other places wherein such war material is being or is intended to be produced or stored; and all forts, arsenals, navy yards, camps, prisons, or other military or naval stations of the United States.

The words "war utilities," as used herein, shall include all railroads, electric lines, roads of whatever description, railroad bridges, railroad stations and terminals, wharves, docks, piers, shipbuilding yards, canals, canal locks, steamships, all other ships and vessels, automobiles, trucks, wagons, or any other means of transportation whatsoever whereon or whereby such war material or any troops of the United States are being or intended to be transported either within the limits of the United States or upon the high seas, and all dams, reservoirs, aqueducts, water and gas mains, and pipes, structures, and buildings, whereby or in connection with which water or gas is being or intended to be furnished to the United States, and all electric light and power, telephone and telegraph plants, poles, wires, and fixtures, and wireless stations, and the buildings connected with the maintenance and operation thereof used or intended to be used to supply light, power, or facilities of communication to the United States.

The words "United States" shall include all territory and waters subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

SEC. 2. That whoever in the United States, during time of war, shall willfully injure or destroy by fire, or by use of explosives, or by other violent means, or shall attempt so to injure or destroy any war material, war premises, or any war utilities, as herein defined, or any building or other property of the United States, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 30 years, or both.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. KNOX submitted an amendment authorizing the President of the United States to appoint Brig. Gen. Chambers McKibbin, United States Army, retired, to the position and rank of major general on the retired list, intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill (H. R. 13), which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. ROBINSON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,500,000 for prosecuting work of flood control in accordance with the provisions of the flood-control act approved March 1, 1917, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 11), which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for a fish hatchery at San Marcos, Tex., from $7,500 to $15,000, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 11), which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. NELSON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 for a contribution to the Forest Service for the purpose of constructing a bridge across the Mississippi River at the Cass Lake Indian Reservation in the State of Minnesota, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 11), which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. HUGHES submitted an amendment authorizing the President of the United States to appoint William Henry Armstrong a captain in the Porto Rico Regiment at the rank and place he occupied at the time of the termination of his service, intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill (H. R. 13), which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. STONE. I submit an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to cancel the assessment of $13,252.21, being income tax on profit on the sale of Charles L. Freer, of Detroit, Mich., in the year 1915 of 12,095 shares of Parke, Davis & Co.'s stock, and so forth, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 11). I move that the amendment may be first referred to the Committe on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STONE subsequently, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the foregoing amendment, reported favorably thereon and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed, which was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON THE CONDUCT OF THE WAR.

Mr. WEEKS. I send a joint resolution to the desk and ask to have it read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 25) providing for the appointment of a joint committee to be known as the joint committee on the conduct of the war was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That a joint committee shall be appointed composed of six Members of the Senate, including four Democrats and two Republicans, and six Members of the House of Representatives, including three Republicans and three Democrats, to be known as the "Joint Committee on the Conduct of the War." The membership of such committee shall be designated by the respective committees which select the members of the regular standing committees. Such committee shall sit during the sessions or the recesses of Congress, shall make a special study of the problems arising out of the war, shall confer and advise with the President of the United States and the heads of the various executive departments, and shall make report to Congress from time to time in its own discretion, or when requested to do so by either branch of Congress. Such committee shall have power to act by subcommittee or otherwise, and to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses, and to employ such clerical, expert, and stenographic assistance as shall be necessary; and to pay the necessary expenses of such committee there is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $50,000, to be paid out upon the audit and order of the chairman or acting chairman of said committee.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, it is my purpose to ask that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules. Before doing so I wish, however, to say that this is following the general course which was followed by Congress during the Civil War. It furnishes a direct connecting link between the executive and the legislative branches of the Government.

It seems to me that we should correlate all the forces of the Government and all the forces in civil life for the purpose of supporting the Government at this time. It is reported in the press that we are to be asked to appropriate vast sums of money, five or six billion dollars, without any direct indication where and how that money shall be expended. I believe that it is a part of the duty of Congress to have some knowledge of the methods of expenditure and to determine whether the expenditure is being made in accordance with the purposes of Congress.

This is no reflection on the President or on the Secretaries whose departments will have the expenditure of the money, but we are extremely careful in ordinary times to make specific every appropriation and require by law that the money shall not be spent for any other purpose. We are going into a great war, and it appears to me that we should take every precaution to prevent any improper expenditure of money and to keep before the people at all times the methods which are being taken to expend these large amounts of money, as well as the conduct of the war in every particular.

I ask that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I question whether the joint resolution ought to be referred to the Committee on Rules. It is not usual to refer legislative measures to the Committee on Rules. It involves a very important matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is the rule. The Senator from Missouri can move to refer the joint resolution to some other committee.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, the joint resolution proposes by an act of Congress to create a new committee, and it seems to me that the Committee on Rules is the appropriate committee to which the joint resolution should be referred. If it should not go to the Committee on Rules, I should like to know to what committee it should be referred.

Mr. REED. The joint resolution relates to and deals with appropriations, and it seems to me very unusual for such a resolution to be referred to the Committee on Rules. However, I shall not make any further objection to its reference.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, there is so much confusion in the Chamber that I can not understand what the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is saying.

Mr. REED. I shall not press the objection, though it seems to me to be an unusual proceeding; but if the author of the joint resolution especially wants it to go to the Committee on Rules and the Vice President thinks it ought to go there, I shall not make any objection to such reference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Rules.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] be appointed on the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico in place of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], and that the Senator from Illinois be appointed on the Committee on Interoceanic Canals in place of the Senator from Louisiana. In other words, the Senators simply exchange places on the committees, the Senator from Illinois coming to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals and the Senator from Louisiana going to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico. I ask that the changes may be made, and that the assignments to those committees be made in accordance therewith.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of New Mexico in the chair). Without objection, that will stand as the order of the Senate.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. MARTIN, Mr. SHAFROTH, and Mr. WARREN conferees on the part of the Senate.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no further bills or resolutions morning business is closed.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the Army appropriation bill, which was reported to the Senate this morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and will be stated by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 13) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois.

WAR WITH GERMANY—GERMAN-AMERICANS.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I appreciate the Senator from Oregon, chairman of the Military Committee [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], yielding to me at this time, knowing, as I do, the importance of the measure which he has in charge and recognizing that the demand of the time calls for its expeditious passage. My purpose is to address the Senate upon the main question that is before the consideration of the American people. If the Senate can find it compatible to its convenience to give me attention I shall greatly appreciate it.

Mr. President, when the joint resolution was before this body calling for its decision as to whether or not it would declare war against Imperial Germany, conditions which you understood prohibited that I could express myself at that time of the views which I feel I owe to the constituency I represent; to myself, and to this body. I tender my thanks to the committee in charge of the affairs of this Senate, including the chairman, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], for arranging for me this privilege this morning.

Mr. President, I have been struck with a certain course of conduct displayed in different parts of this country from those who call themselves American citizens, which I hope will have no duplication during the serious hours in which we are to deal with the important questions governing the conflict now impending upon us. I refer to the insults visited upon certain Senators of this body.

In the discussion on the war resolution Senators arose on this floor and expressed their opposition to the joint resolution, and gave their reasons, such as they held as were sufficient for that opposition. It must be assumed, sir, that these Senators were responding to the sentiment of the constituency for which they spoke. That therefore it was their State speaking. But, sir, whether that be the just presumption or not, that such conduct of offense should have come from any citizen, as we read of in the public press—the sending of contemptible and insulting messages, tokens, and emblems to a Senator—because his views happen not to comport with the views of some other man, is as destructive of liberty of free speech in this Government as if a direct assault by official power had been made upon it. Those Senators opposing the resolution were wrong, as I see it; yet I may be wrong, as they see it; and any set of men who would attempt to bring this body in contempt by casting humiliating insinuations against a sovereign Senator, because of the expression by him of his honest views, discloses either ignorance of the dues to the office or lack of common good manners as American citizens. Who are these men so indecently assailed? Are they men unknown?

NORRIS, of Nebraska, ever doing kindness for the downtrodden; GRONNA, of North Dakota, the constant champion of the oppressed farmer; LA FOLLETTE, of Wisconsin, who has led the cause of public purity against corporate corruption. The Senators represent their respective States. They have expressed from their convictions the views which possess them. They have done such openly, with courage and great ability. Long may they continue to do such that when wrong the expressions themselves may prove it by the test of opposition. Their clean and noble careers in public life ought to assure exemption from insults hurled at them from any source merely because of the differences which they may entertain with their fellow Senators or with some of their fellow citizens.

On this side of the Chamber Senator LANE, of Oregon, the man of charities everywhere; Senator VARDAMAN, of Mississippi, the poet-statesman ever fighting for the oppressed, two distinguished Senators whose lives like unto those of the Senators on the Republican side I have mentioned, have shown them worthy of the regard of their fellow men, and their views entitled to the respect of their fellow Senators. These Senators should be accepted amidst us as Senators speaking the solemn voice of their people, to whom they are responsible. Knowing their lives as we know them, their services as we have beheld them, we welcome them in the enjoyment of that privilege and bid them continue, however much we shall differ with and oppose their contentions.

Then, here to my right, sits my eminent friend, long of years, my friend and counselor: the eminent Senator from Missouri, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations [Mr. STONE]. He finds it agreeable to differ with the committee over which he presides with dignity and capacity. He finds it necessary to his convictions to oppose the majority of his side; but can it be possible that the hour is upon America when, because of such differences held by a Senator, he is to be pilloried in the public estimate as unworthy of that which is vouched to the meanest citizen of the land—the respect for the sincerity of his convictions? I have known Senator STONE; we have all known him through many of these years of public service—Congressman, governor, Senator. Surely we can say of him, as was said of Dentatus by the elder Brutus, "He has grown gray in the service of his country, and for that, if there be nothing higher, he should have been exempt these spears cost from such unworthy hands." Hereafter may this custom of reflecting upon the motives of a Senator or deriding the expression by him of his honest opinions be more honored in the breach than in the observance.

Sir, we beheld at the close of the debate on the solemn resolution the proof to the world that this was a Christian country. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] brought the proceedings to a close by bowing his head in submission to the great Captain of us all, and breathed to his colleagues a prayer that the Father of our mercies and our destinies might guide us where we would do no wrong. It was a courageous act. The only similar instance to this I know of in parliamentary history is when Lord Brougham, in the trial of Queen Caroline, knelt before the lords, tendering his invocation to God that they do justice. I join in the prayer of that eminent Senator. I pray that like the pearl brought by the Peri to Heaven's gate it may lie at the feet of the Master, and light in its radiance a Christian course for this distinguished tribunal. I pray that no action shall ever be had here or in any part of this land that in the after days our fellow citizens of our country may behold was the throttling of free speech before men. Sir, without the fullest freedom of honest utterance by men in public counsel liberty will perish and the Republic fall. The only way the views of an opposition can ever be tested as to their correctness is that they may be expressed in all fullness. Then, sir, when rejected by trial the defeated can join the majority; consoled in having been fully heard and overruled, the minority have but the one duty before them—their country. So here in this presence may I be bold enough to express the hope that each of us may turn to this Chamber in after days, saying, as did Edmund Burke to Parliament at the close of the impeachment of Warren Hastings:

> This great assemblage, this sacred house, may it long remain as it has been founded the refuge of liberty, the guardian of right, and the protection of mankind everywhere within the constitutional justice for which this realm has been established.

Mr. President, we therefore speak on the "state of war," a subject any man might well hope to avoid. But, sir, in the course of the affairs of life and of the civilization of mankind we have not been able, sir, either to avoid or to defeat war in the processes of civilization. The prayers of the Christian multitudes of the world have ascended to God; the tears of mothers raining over their first born, the entrances of the homes bearing messages of mourning for the dead, the stricken cities, the wasted fields, the blood upon the walls of life have all been meaningless, and their influences fall for naught up to this hour. There seems, sir, to have been no method learned of mankind by which great wrongs can be redressed and great rights enforced save by that process of the arbitrament of blood. God speed the day when this form of atonement shall give place to a Christly adjustment of the differences of peoples by love, not by the sword. May we all soon exclaim "Put away the sword, States can be saved without it."

Mr. President, when war broke yonder in Europe we beheld the carnage with horror, contemplated it with all the thrill of sadness that could tremble a suffering soul. We of America prayed that we might be delivered and that the flames of that conflagration would not light our canopy of peace. But, alas, sir, conditions have decreed that our hopes be blasted, our prayer be not granted. We did not desire war. We knew the full meaning of the "canker of a calm world and a long peace," but we sought no destruction of it through a war that would mean the desolation of our lands. Every patience was exerted by those in authority, every endurance suffered by our countrymen, every indulgence by the legislative body, every partisan aspect buried in patriotism and absorbed in affection for our country, all to avoid conflict. More, sir—every affront was overlooked, insults borne, injuries endured, protest after protest against it all multiplied from us, one upon the other, yet all without avail. Conditions forced upon us that which we would have avoided but which has been decreed otherwise. It is war.

I have no doubt, Mr. President, that as the debate from day to day shall proceed in this distinguished body and legislation such as brought forward by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, is brought before the body, there will arise differences. They will be from some on this side against others on this side; there will be the differences among the side of my distinguished opponents—only opponents in time of partisan conflict. These differences will be voiced, in one temper or another, in differences as to ways and means; but I know I do no violence here if I say that each of us will say unto ourselves, as the ghost said to Hamlet:

> But, howsoever thou pursuest this act,
> Taint not thy mind, nor let thy soul contrive
> Against thy mother aught.

So, sir, we stand, our mother at war with her assailant. Shall it be asked, What is the wrong the redress of which we so unitedly now decree? What is the wrong? Scholars around me recall that in the debate between Æschines and Demosthenes at the event when Æschines, espousing the cause of Philip invading Greece, said that "for peace and security it were better that there be no longer protests against Philip." Then added Æschines, "What is the alarm?" when Demosthenes responds, "What is the alarm? Is it not enough that Macedonia would come to Greece, through her Philip, and conduct the affairs of our own land over our own protests?"

So, sir, we answer the query of "what is the wrong?" It is, sir, that a country, imperial in form, speaking through its voice of iron and sword, has decreed that we here in America shall conduct our life within the limitations prescribed by it, and that if we decline or protest we will then take the consequences of death, inflicted by the blow of its own hands. Imperial Germany, sir, has drawn an area of civilization about the world and prescribed unto us that without that only shall we exist. That if we dare come within it, upon our heads, it will launch the curse of the Prussian dynasty—death and destruction.

Mr. President, the eminent junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], in a splendid arraignment of the wrongs done America by the Prussian dynasty, presented a catalogue against which no man can offer defense, and in this arraignment recited those offenses which no brave people could endure, no honorable man accept. In this it has been disclosed—as had been disclosed often by the record of facts—that the commerce of our country equal to two-thirds of our foreign trade, the rights of our shipping, the privileges of our citizens are to be denied their just dominion upon the earth. Sir, the very opening chapter of God's holy laws, prescribing the charter of our creation, informs us that God gave to man dominion over the sea and the land; but it is for us in Christian America to behold that one part of the civilization of the world, through imperial power, repeals the law of Almighty God, and amends the ordinances of heaven by placing a limitation upon the dominion that God gave His children by denying to one portion of them—America—the privileges of the earth.

Sir, it was against this audacious assumption that we raised our revolt. It was against this affront to civilization that we uttered our protests, multiplying one upon the other until finally, when toleration could not longer be indulged and patience from manly men had revolted, we set forth to the trespasser wherein our wrongs could not longer continue and informed them if they continued their infliction we must remedy them by the force of arms.

Mr. President, it is at this point, sir, I acknowledge that I may become tedious in presentation of detail and impose upon the generosities of my attentive colleagues——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Go right along, as long as you will; we all want to hear you.

Mr. LEWIS. Sir, when the decree of our course was made, when it was inevitable—as inevitable it was—there came the voices of resentment and accusation against us from those against whom our decree was leveled. Mr. President, I am to speak of these. I am attracted by what is being charged now against us, and it is to these charges—for reasons to which I will in a few moments advert—that I address my attention.

The spokesman of the Prussian military dynasty, Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg, delivers his speech in the Prussian Diet, called the Reichstag, and charges upon the United States of America that we have violated every principle of international law, and, in order that we may find occasion to make an assault upon Germany, violated the express statutes of our own land. All this, said he, done without a precedent in our history, without a Governmental parallel in our conduct. Says the distinguished chancellor for that Empire, "Wilson breaks the law to make war." Says he: "They sent out their ships with naval gunners, with directions that they fire on any of the German ships upon which they could get a drop." "Congress," continued he, "could not validly delegate this power; it was denied by Congress," says this distinguished authority, "and yet the President has gone ahead defining the rights and dictating this procedure."

Mr. President, the eminent chancellor proceeded to point out that we did these things with a view of making war on Germany and forcing Germany to make war on us. He charges before the civilization of Europe that the things we did in arming the ships had no precedent in all the practice of America and were in direct violation of the international law. Continuing, says he, the conduct is unknown in their parallel in all practices of the world, and were, he charges, in direct breach of the statutes of our own land providing against such.

My distinguished colleagues on both sides of this body, I am not so much concerned in this speech as to its effect upon the German people in Germany. I am not without understanding of its purpose there; nor can I say truthfully that were I situated as is the eminent chancellor I might not have resorted to similar tactics. But I am concerned, sir, for the effect of this address upon the German citizens of my country; those who I know are loyal; those who I know wish to serve their country. I can not permit them to be deceived by the charge that this, their adopted country, has done an act without parallel in all its history. That it has done a thing unprecedented in international law and without a single forerunner in the history of civilization. I will not permit them to be put in a position where they may whisper to their children that to make war on their mother country Germany; this America discriminated against it, and chose it for assaults the like of which had no justification in the law of nations, and were in violation of the direct statutory prohibitions of America.

One of the objects of this speech, sir, is too clear to me, as it is to you all. It is to discourage the German citizen in America from feeling any obligation to America to serve her either by word or deed. It is to infuse into the hearts of a certain honorable set of men in this country of German blood the feeling that we have so wrongly assailed their motherland as to release them of every obligation of support of us and to place them in the ranks, if not of open disloyalty, at least of secret, obstruction. The young sons of the Germans who come from loyal, but because they, too, believe the charges in this speech. for I deplore to tell you, Mr. President and Senators, that of the 11 German publications of great eminence in this country 7 have published this address and circulated it throughout this whole land for its influence—not that these journals are disloyal, but because they, too, believe the charges of this speech. They circulate it among their German constituency here. Millions of these German born will read this speech, believing its indictment. They will hereafter be educated to our alleged wrongs against Germany—charging us with doing the thing we did as without precedent and in violation of honorable practice. All for the purpose of a direct assault on them because they were Germans!

Mr. President, the charge of the distinguished chancellor is untrue. The assertion made by the eminent authority is without foundation in fact. I can not let it in this unrefuted state go to my own native American, far less to that other loyal set of men, the German-American, who only want to know that we were right, and without regard to their German nationality will be found loyal to America.

What, then, sir, were the reasons we placed the guns upon the ships? It was, sir, to protect the American commerce upon the public highways of this world, of which we were a part. There could be no free country without a free commerce. There could be no independent and prosperous Nation as long as we allowed its resources to be throttled and denied access to the markets of the world. When the assaults were made upon our commerce—and made by the force of arms—there was but one way in which we could meet it. It was as though a footpad or an outlaw should be met in the highways when he is threatening the life of the innocent passer-by. The innocent citizen is authorized to carry arms to defend himself against such assault, and arms himself. Was not that natural, sir? Was not that human? Was it not the course which has ever been taken, notwithstanding the statement of the eminent chancellor, and despite these prominent German papers throughout this country that have unwittingly published to the contrary for its effect upon our countrymen?

The history of our country informs us that in 1805 President Jefferson sent to the United States Senate, through the Secretary of State, the protest of France and Britain against our arming ships for the protection of our commerce; but Mr. Jefferson in no wise protested nor in any wise intimated to this distinguished body that it should interdict or prohibit the course as one that was wrong.

It was then, sir, that John Randolph, in the House of Representatives, referred to the situation in words which I am about to read. And let it be remembered, sir, that John Randolph was no friend of France. John Randolph was at that time an advocate of Britain. He was so friendly to her course that he was glad to encourage America to emulate her. But, keeping in mind the duty which America really owed to herself, says he:

> France is at war with England; suppose her power on the Continent of Europe no greater than it is on the ocean. How would she make her enemy feel it? There would be a perfect nonconductor between them. So with the United States and England; she scarcely presents to us a vulnerable point. Her commerce is carried on, for the most part, in fleets; where in single ships, they are sound and well armed—very different from the state of her trade during the American war, when her merchantmen became the prey of paltry privateers. Great Britain has been too long at war with the three most powerful maritime nations of Europe not to have learnt how to protect her trade.

Yet, says the eminent chancellor, as he would have it, the very act itself of ours in following this history was without precedent!

Mr. President, may I call attention to the fact that far from being unprecedented with us it is the opposite. In 1862—while we were at war, it is true, between the Union and the Confederacy—there were threats of foreign ships giving evidences of a raid upon the commerce of America.

These foreign ships were not involved in any war with us at that time, but, sir, these ships then plying between Aspenwall and New York manifested to the United States from their officials the fear that these threats would culminate in assaults upon them. They asked for protection exactly as was asked here in the very hour a few days preceding our arming our ships.

What transpired then under the administration of Abraham Lincoln—truly the just? Sir, I present to you that Gideon Welles, the then Secretary of the Navy, answered the communication, saying:

> The department will gladly assist the company in this object. It will furnish rifle guns for them and a sufficient number of seamen to work them, the company subsisting at their expense the seamen. It will also, if desired, appoint the commanders of the steamers acting masters in the Navy, but without pay.

Then, Mr. President, as I read you from the official record of the Union and Confederate Navies of the war, reported in volume 1, page 193, we find that we promptly equipped the vessels with guns, commanded them with officers of our Navy, and governed them with gunners under our command. Yet, sir, says the eminent chancellor, such things were unknown, and that we did the things we lately did in arming our ships without precedent.

Mr. President, I dare say here to this eminent body that the real reason why on this day the cloud of war hangs over America and in its flaming flashes threatens to consume the Imperial Government of Germany is because her leaders have found it agreeable to dissemble the truth to their people. If the truth had been told Germany by that certain class of men who assumed to lead the German people of America and had the truth been told the people in Germany by their rulers in Germany there would have been no fateful tragedy such as impends over civilization at this hour. Nor, sir, would there have been the lowering passage of this cloud of fire across the horizon of this my America!

Ah, but, sir, it is ever true, may I recall, as the Delegate Jacoby, in the national convention in Berlin, November 2, 1848, said to King Wilhelm of Prussia the Fourth: "Das ist das unglück der Könige dass sie die Wahrheit nicht hören wollen." So say we, it is ever the misfortune of kings that they will not listen to the truth.

Mr. President, on this day that I avail myself of the privilege of this body, I shall speak the truth as I see it and as I know it from the history of my country and of Germany. Not that I hope, sir, to reach those German Government heads or military commanders in Germany but that I shall reach the constituency for which I speak and which by their grace I am permitted to represent in my State of Illinois. I assume to bring to your attention that one-fourth of the population of Illinois are those of whom it may be said are German. They are loyal citizens, faithful neighbors, beloved friends. From the American schools many of them have drawn their education. Many of them have come from foreign lands to make their homes in my splendid State. They only need to be told the truth, that they may know what their rights are and what wrongs have been done by the imperial masters of their own mother country to this, their now adopted home. It is to this I am to speak. It is to them that I shall at home frequently speak. And here in this presence I want to say to every man who has sent me a message of the kind that good manners would have forbidden, that respect for the position I occupy would have prohibited, that a sense of their obligation to citizenship would have made impossible—I forgive it. I will never allude to it. I understand the unhappy nature wounded in the contemplation that it must make war either upon its adopted homes or upon their native country. I feel how this horror could have induced them in such a moment to conduct which otherwise could never have come from their noble natures.

Then, sir, to them what is the truth of the right for which we stand? I answer, sir, we stood upon our bond. We stood upon our contract. Our contract was the treaty we made with Germany by which the trade of this land should be permitted in every country, though that country may be at war, so long as we remain neutral.

Senators, as you will see in a moment from me, Germany had a very principal object in entering into this contract; but I call to your attention some words of it which in the haste of the presentation on the war resolutions were omitted by the eminent Senators who discussed the causes justifying the adoption of the resolution.

I ask you for a moment's consideration. The 1785 contracts made with Germany, called a treaty, contained as article 12:

If one of the contracting parties should be engaged in war with any other power, the free intercourse and commerce of the subjects or citizens of the party remaining neuter with the belligerent powers shall not be interrupted.

From one treaty to another there were amendments and changes. The treaty of 1785 expired by limitation. A new one was negotiated in 1799. The article 12 was only amended in other respects than that to which I called attention. The treaty of 1799 also expired, and the treaty of 1828, you will recall, was then entered into, and that is still in force. In that we find the same clause repeated, as it had been repeated a number of times by Germany, and that is the precise situation in which the United States to-day is by her contract. By the bond we entered into our right to sail those seas and deliver our commerce was established, apart from our natural right as a part of the world.

Senators, may I not ask you, you have given much attention to this subject, why has it never occurred to the reigning princes of Germany to recall that in the war of 1871 between Germany and France we served the nations of the world? Bismarck raised no such protest then as is now under the same conditions raised by Bethmann von Hollweg. Von Moltke raised no such issue as was presented by the eminent commanders under the Kaiser. Why? We were serving France with supplies and France was fighting Germany. They were materials that would come from any neutral.

We served Germany while she was fighting France. Neither Germany nor France registered to America a protest against our rights then founded upon the conceded law of nations and treaties between them.

Why is it that not until now does Germany raise her voice against a treaty which under the previous parallel conditions has never had a protest leveled against its fulfillment? Then, sir, let it be remembered there were reciprocal profits which Germany was deriving under the treaty.

Do you not recall, Senators, our own history, when we were in war with Spain? Germany was a neutral. She served Cuba covertly and openly. Our protests against the munitions being delivered were of no avail, because she contended they were for the nonneutral portion, to defend themselves against those who at that time were rising against their homes. Germany served with her commodities the officers of Spain, the army of Spain, the ships of Spain. We not only could not protest under this arrangement but by the laws of nations it would have been futile.

Then, sir, Germany served Spain in Europe by providing her every form of ammunition, every form of munitions, every form of supplies for her neutral populations, her nonbelligerents, as well as those actively engaged in the conflict against her. She had the right and she availed herself of it.

In the Philippine Islands, while we were there seeking to suppress the insurrection and revolution against us, Germany, availing herself of this treaty, served there our enemies to our very face, because of her privileges as a neutral nation.

Clearly it must be, Senators, that the new motive which invited this new form of opposition by the Prussian commanders has for its reason something else than the foundation which the eminent chancellor assumes to assert that is the right under international law.

Mr. OWEN. And in Mexico, too, recently.

Mr. LEWIS. It is suggested to me by the eminent Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] that the history of our Government discloses that Germany was likewise availing herself of her privileges to serve Mexico while we were in conflict with peoples of that land.

But, sir, let this be said to her credit and in justification: She was, so far as serving the neutral population with the necessities of life, as much within her right as we contend that we were within ours.

Mr. President, I ask you now, sir, to contemplate a moment what it was that Germany did when she was in conflict over her rights of trade as neutral? I call to your attention, sir, the history of her attitude in the Boer war. Here I must take issue from the eminent and patriotic Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], who, from his bold point of view and the impulse of his heart, can not agree with the policy for which I speak—that of the necessity of declaring war. We turn to ascertain what was the position of Germany then under this very treaty.

As the eminent Senators who sit around me know, this treaty made with the United States in 1828 was but a copy word for word of a treaty Germany had with Britain upon similar subjects. We exacted that it should be copied literally in order to avoid confusion and that our trade with Britain and Germany as to governing regulations in the event of conflicts should be in harmony. Literally, then, the treaty with Britain was the very treaty which previous to our declaration of war existed with Germany.

Under that treaty let us note what Germany did in her dealings with Britain. The Boer War was on. The ships of Germany were on their way affording supplies to the Boers. Britain seized these ships upon the water. Some of them were taken as prizes to her ports. The ship called the Bundesrath was carried into Durban. From that began the dispute between the two nations. Germany, through her representatives, addressed Lord Salisbury. Mark you, Count Hatsfeldt, the German representative in London, says:

I am further instructed to request your excellency to cause explicit instructions to be sent to the commanders of British ships in African waters to respect the rules of international law, and to place no further impediments in the way of the trade between neutrals.

Then, Mr. President, the disputation continued. It reached to a state where the nations themselves through their heads were compelled to recognize it. Then Count von Bülow, one of the predecessors of Chancellor von Hollweg, addressed himself as chancellor to the Reichstag setting forth what he felt were the rights of Germany. He said:

We strove from the outset to induce the English Government, in dealing with neutral vessels consigned to Delagoa Bay, to adhere to that theory of international law which guarantees the greatest security to commerce and industry and which finds expression in the principle that for ships consigned from neutral States to a neutral port the notion of contraband of war simply does not exist.

Count von Bülow summarized the action of the German Government by concluding:

We demanded, in the first place, the release of the steamers. * * * In the second place, we demanded the payment of compensation for the unjustified detention of our ships and for the losses incurred by the German subjects whose interests were involved. * * * Thirdly, we drew attention to the necessity for issuing instructions to the British naval commanders. * * * We trust that the English naval authorities will not again proceed without sufficient cause in an unfriendly and precipitate manner against our ships.

Then, sir, what was the further course of Germany? It may be interesting to realize that she did that thing which to-day she debars to us. When Britain persisted in assailing her ships in the waters of South Africa, Germany, through her naval authorities, authorized the shipping lines then running to South America, as well as issuing privilege to other shipping lines to arm their ships. Germany issued instructions, copies of which I shall put in the RECORD, to these companies—as they were naval auxiliaries—that they arm their ships fore and aft to defend themselves against any assaults that might be made upon them in the seas while they were in the prosecution of neutral trade.

Sir, shall it be said that she was not right? That she was right is borne out by the law of nations and the practice of civilized people. But shall it be said by the eminent chancellor before the Reichstag to be repeated here in my country to the misconception and delusion of that loyal set of Germans in this country that the thing we did was without precedent, not within law, without authority in the law of nations or in practice, when Germany upon her record has availed herself of the very form to accomplish the very purpose of protection which we have adopted?

Senators, be not constrained to the thought that there is anything new in all this claim of privilege of the seas. There seems to have never been a civilization that did not adhere to this practice for the preservation of its lifeblood—commerce. Scholars of the Old Bible, early edition, will recall I Kings, chapter xxii, from the 48th verse and the interesting recital.

Jehoshaphat made ships of Tarshish to go to Ophir for riches; but they went not; for the ships were broken at the sea by the enemies at Ezion-gaber.

Then said Ahaziah, the son of Ahab, unto Jehoshaphat, Let my servants with their spears go with thy servants in the ships. But Jehoshaphat, trembling lest the whole enemy would come upon him, would not.

And Jehoshaphat slept with his fathers and was buried with his fathers and the ships knew not Ophir.

Truly "there is nothing new under the sun." Mankind still repeats its performances after the instinct of human nature—for its self-preservation, and in the same form as in the past.

How splendidly rises to mind the letter that Cicero wrote to Atticus when Cicero was in extremis, saying to the friend of his soul: "Governments, like all organized creations, have their time to perish and to fail, as mankind has to live and to fall; but no surer test of their decay is ever than that when they surrender the instincts of the heart, the impulses of the soul, the preservation itself of life." This, sir, was all there was in the creed of all this conduct.

Sir, I turn to the last charge of the eminent chancellor, not, as I say, Senators, that I hope my voice may reach the imperial land to correct the error made there, but that it in my own country shall reach those to whom I must speak, and whom I speak that they may read the truth. The eminent chancellor, Mr. President, said that we violated an express law in order that we could do the thing that would make war on Germany by placing arms upon these ships. The eminent chancellor quotes certain views of officials in this country and refers to the Federal statute of 1819.

Mr. President, right here now I wish to deny that there is any law anywhere that prohibits the arming of ships by the Government for their defense. The statute of 1819 is not a prohibitive statute. It is a permissive statute, merely permitting certain private companies that were known to place, at their own expense and under their control, guns upon their ships. The statute had no relation whatever to the Government. How could it have relation to the Government? Before the sight of the just God, where is that government in civilization that could agree by law to never defend itself? The exercise of such an attempted abdication would be so insulting that it would reduce the Nation to contempt and to the contumely where it should rest for its life if it presumed such pusillanimity of conduct. That this Nation would ever have undertaken it, all of us will dispute. That it would ever have entered upon such a craven course all will deny.

Then what was the statute of 1819? It was a statute merely to authorize these private concerns at their own expense and instance to place guns upon their ships by their captains or by their owners. The provision in the statute that there should be no firing upon the ships of certain nations referred to action by those private companies; but, sir, in this case of our action we did not arm the ships by private persons. We ourselves as a Government armed them; we manned their arms by our Government. If there was a Senator on this floor in the intense zeal of his nature who really presumed that that statute could have any application to the Government, then I invite his attention to the words of it.

The statute prohibits those within its provisions from firing upon the vessels of a nation "in amity." Will it be contended by the eminent chancellor of Germany that a country with whom we had disrupted every relation, whose ambassadors had been sent to their homes, whose representatives had been returned to their native land for the violation of our domestic laws, in everything from trespass to incendiarism and then to murder, was "in amity" with the United States? Surely, sir, we recall Webster's speech, as we have it from Fourth Webster's works, referring to the French spoliation claims. He is alluding to the disruption between this country and France—which, however, had not brought us to war—and when referring to the fact that our relations had been severed, he said:

> While there was no war, there was no amity; our relations were not amicable.

Moore, in his International Law, the opening chapter upon nonamicability, headlines it under the title "Nonamicability; the breaking off of diplomatic relations."

Shall it be conceived for a minute that we could have been within that statute? The Supreme Court of the United States in Moore against the United States (161 U. S.) specifically defines "amity" in our relations with foreign nations when it says the word "amity" in the treaties means friendship, peace, good feeling. Therefore, surely it must be seen that this statute could never have had any application in any wise whatsoever to the German Government at the time the President of the United States, as Commander in Chief of the United States Army and Navy, authorized, through the Secretary of the Navy, the placing of guns on these ships for the protection of themselves, as has been the practice of this Government and of every other civilized Government under similar circumstances as those which surrounded our vessels, and this for all civilized time.

Mr. President, how could it have been otherwise? Can it be possibly contended by the chancellor in the Reichstag, by the scholars of law, by the eminent German press in our country—by any source of American citizenship—that America could have ever agreed to refuse to defend herself and her people? That she contracted to abandon her property, desert her commerce, or relinquish any step that would be necessary for the maintenance of the sovereignty of this Republic? Certainly not; such is the indulgence of the impossible. Still, sir, it is gravely contended by sources in this land, and out of it, that our doing of the act, so founded in the law and custom, was an affront upon Germany and an assault that justified her in the destruction of our ships, the demolition of our commerce, the murder of our people, the dishonoring of our country, and the humiliation of our Republic.

Yet, too, a distinguished source, for whom I have great respect in knowledge and ability, the eminent Senator from Wiscontin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] drew the deduction, from such information as he had of the international law and the conditions, that "we had not a leg to stand upon." Surely, the eminent Senator must recognize, when he realizes the facts upon a closer investigation, that not only have we legs to stand on, but that we stand as a body upon the great, broad, and universal foundation of a nation's right to self-defense.

It is claimed, sir, by respectable authorities in this country—and I see now it is set forth in Germany—that because we did not resent the wrongs of Britain toward us we forfeited our right to oppose the wrongs of Germany. Let this be understood: I recognize the doctrine that where we are not neutral to one country we can not claim the benefits of neutrality from the other, but that is as far as the punishment has ever gone. No scholar of international law has ever assumed that we forfeited the right of self-defense; for if that were once maintained, a country need only assert that we did not oppose the violations of neutrality of another country as its excuse for murdering us, thereby throwing upon us the burden to prove otherwise before we could assert our right to oppose the wrongs done us. Surely it can not be urged seriously, as it has been urged in words, that we did not have the right of that self-defense.

I here say, however, I do not approve the course of Britain. I condemn it. She had no right to rifle the mails of America. She had no right to seize our ships of commerce and take them into English ports while they were on their way to neutral ports of Europe. She had no right to visit upon us the several indignities one after another; but the reply of hers must be that of Napoleon to Poland: "C'est la guerre. C'est la guerre. Que voulez-vous? C'est la guerre." "It is war; it is war. What will you have? It is war." It is ours to reckon with that later.

But, sir, because we did not find it agreeable to resent the course of Britain in the way that we should, shall it be said that there was a right on the part of Germany to murder my people of America? Britain took property; Germany took life. There alone, if need be, rests the distinction which we can rest upon. If my eminent friend, the Senator from Wisconsin, says, as he did say in his able speech, that Germany when she agreed to all our protests to cease the submarine warfare reserved the right to return to it, I answer that she may reserve for herself, but we can not recognize her right to reserve the privilege to murder Americans; nor can we recognize the right that she should reserve the privilege to destroy the commerce of this country, drive us from the open sea, and rob us of our equal rights. We ever reserve the right to preserve ourselves.

Behold, sir, our situation. Five hundred bodies of our citizens floating upon the waters of the world, their corpses drifting to every port and every strand; their beloved ones knowing not where they are. They are to-day, sir, devoured in the depths; they have been set upon by the mysterious animals of the hundred leagues beneath the sea. Their bodies gone beneath, their souls taken their ascent above—their faces can no longer be seen, nor their voices heard. They were killed by Germany. They are dead for no wrong that one of them ever committed against Germany. Not one of their hands was ever lifted against Germany; none of their voices ever proclaimed against her or one of her citizens; but for that they availed themselves of the privilege of a citizen of the world they died as a penalty.

Shall it be said, sir, that I, as a citizen of my country, shall remain silent as against these atrocities, because, forsooth, there are those who may bring before me precepts along which they think our governmental conduct has not gone sufficiently exact. Shall for this puny contention I be asked to waive the demand for justice to my country? I answer—I decline. I reply, never!

Mr. President, I have a word that possibly is unnecessary here. I have been frank to say to you who have been so indulgent with me that my purpose, as much as I am honored with your audience, is not wholly to address you; but is also to bring to the attention of others what I shall say. Sir, what will be the effect upon America of a dead and withered commerce if under the assaults of Germany it should be allowed to continue? Let me answer, sir, if it could be Germany to-day with success, why not Britain to-morrow. If Britain with success, as concerns the European seas, she and Germany, then, in common purpose, driving us from the Atlantic, why not Japan and China on the next day drive us from Asia and the Asiatic seas? Then, sir, by that example of the great, why not the lesser ones assail us until finally every vestige of American commerce is swept from the seas of the world by those who would drive us off that they may remain masters of the sea. Then, how would we stand, sir? Our position would be this: with our commerce stricken from the seas by our own supineness, by our cowardice and ignoble surrender, with every nation in the world taking license from our surrender—our pusillanimity—we would then, sir, be imprisoned within the confines of our own Republic.

What, then, must follow? Sir, we could not long subsist upon ourselves. The next step would be that affecting the farmer. His grain must wither in the field, for it could not profit him to gather it and harvest it in his bins. That must rot. Also must decay that already in the bins where it has been gathered, for that there can be no profit in the shipment. He therefore withers in poverty for want of patronage of his husbandry. The toiler has no longer enough occupation, for the factories can no longer sell their products abroad; and when the factories are closed the toiler walks the streets without occupation. He is then in want and in need. The citizen of the country finds himself humiliated, bowed down in depression, his land in panic, for throughout all this country, sir, would come, as there must, the natural result—universal bankruptcy. Then, when such is before us, where stands the citizen? Ashamed of his land, degraded at home by his own acts, dishonored abroad, poverty stricken at his door, his children in want, his wife in need, his country humiliated before the earth—all by his own acts of cowardice, and yet he calls himself an American!

Hear the exclamation of Fisher Ames, the Revolutionary patriot, upon a condition similar to this, when he stood before the House of Representatives of Congress. In his speech upon our relations with Britain, on April 28, 1796, he said:

> What is patriotism * * * but the venerable image of our country's honor? Every good citizen makes that honor his own and cherishes it not only as precious but as sacred. He is willing to risk his life in its defense and is conscious that he gains protection while he gives it. For what rights of a citizen will be deemed inviolable when a State renounces the principles that constitute their security? Or, if his life should not be invaded, what would its enjoyments be in a country odious in the eyes of strangers and dishonored in his own? Could he look with affection and veneration to such a country as his parent? The sense of having one would die within him; he would blush for his patriotism, if he retained any, and justly. * * * He would be a banished man in his native land.

Sir, it must be plain that we could not have endured the final result of such a course without inheriting that which is pictured by that eminent patriot and which we know would have been the direct result of our own conduct—humiliation, disgrace, and before the world hishonor. Yet, sir, the eminent Senator said that we have not a foot to stand on!

Senators, in a last phase, in which I wish to address myself to those who shall have occasion to read my remarks, I invite you to an aspect more sad to me than agreeable. Sir, these assaults which I condemn—made upon America—were being made at a time when little would humankind dream that such could ever have been entered upon. We had for years sought to persuade these opponents against making the assaults upon our country. Yet, sir, despite our efforts they continued. Now, contemplate these last attacks. Remember that despite all of these assaults, despite all these outrages and wrongs, this, your America, speaking through your spokesman, the President, sought peace for the belligerents and addressed a letter, an official communication, to the purpose of which the Senate gave your approval. The President of the United States addressed this communication to the countries of Europe, seeking from them the expression of the terms upon which they would have peace. His position could be well stated in the words of Charles James Fox, uttered at the time of the consideration of the overtures of peace to Napoleon Bonaparte, when he said, "That the country that would not express the terms upon which it would make peace clearly showed that it was not sure of the ground upon which it stood."

Thus the President of the United States addressed his communication to the warring countries of Europe seeking peace. At a time when we were being assailed by Germany, we sought peace in her behalf. We sought this peace out of our spirit that appealed for peace. We sought it out of a heart that rebelled against war. We sought it out of a soul that cried for harmony and good will among mankind. Yet, sir, it was at this time, while this humane undertaking was being directed by the President, that Germany, through the Prussian dynasty, assailed us with murderous assaults.

Mr. President, I was one of those among many others who did all that could be done to have peace. I raised my voice wherever I could against those things which I felt would eventually lead us where war would be the result. Every Senator on all sides here, differing only as to method and details, struggled for peace, and in the heart of his Christian nature prayed that it might be. But while we were seeking it for Germany, behold, sir—let us dwell for a shocking moment, sir—what happened? I speak of the events of recent history. My eminent opponents know that I am not speaking in a partisan attitude now. As between us all partisanship in this conflict "deep in the bosom of the ocean's buried." But we do know that the influences in Germany, while this administration was seeking peace in her behalf, conspired with influences in this country calling themselves German—and they proceeded through the aid of money and intrigue—to endeavor to defeat the President of the United States in his reelection, not on any principle of local government, which they would have had a right to do, but willingly joined with those whose opposition to the President was that he did not make war on Germany, these joined with those whose grievance was that the President did not make war to destruction of Germany. These forces calling themselves Germans, declining the opportunities to obtain peace, in vengeance made common cause with those whose cry was "destroy Germany." This they did that by that partnership they might destroy the President.

And yet, sir, let us behold, after the election there was no resentment in the heart of victorious Woodrow Wilson. It was to this body—this Senate—that he came, and from the chancel of the Senate presented to this distinguished body his renowned declaration wherein he sought for the Governments that were at war, peace, and proclaimed his policy of "peace without victory." To Germany went the message that he would have rescued her from the humiliation of defeat or the loss of triumph, so anxious were we that peace should be had, and peace without victory. Yet it was while this was pending—while we, her friends, her advocate, were drawing down upon our heads the curse of Britain and France, who charged us, through their public press and their public voices, with being an ally of Germany. To accomplish the purpose we had started out to achieve, peace, we brought upon ourselves the censure and the condemnation of all the allies. It was while all of this was being borne by us that the Prussian dynasty ordered our death as a return for the service of sacrifice in Christianity we were doing Germany.

Surely, surely there is no German citizen of this, my country, living in America, professing his fealty to God and his devotion to America, who can give that action his approval. I mention it that the world such as I represent that may read my views may understand how to my heart the revolution in my feeling came when I could behold such ingratitude and such perfidy.

But, sir, even then I can go one step further with these war lords of Germany. I can understand, sir, how the shooting by a submarine of a belligerent ship—say one of Britain—which might have carried American passengers could have readily transpired and an American be killed. I can understand, sir, the equity of the claim that we ought not to go to war because that American had imperiled his country by taking passage upon the ship of a belligerent. In that, from my point of view, there is merit, I acknowledge. But, sir, what shall be said when these ships, carrying the American flag, its stars unfurled to the breeze and lighted by the sun by day, gleaming with their sister stars in heaven at night—the ship wearing upon the bow and at the stern—fore and aft—her name as American; are crept upon as does the midnight assassin steal upon his victim in the dark, and shot to death without warning, without opportunity to escape, without one word that could give chance of life to the innocents who were aboard? And these, as it afterwards develops, carrying not an ounce of ammunition, not a vestige of that which could be called contraband, with not an enemy of Germany aboard, none but the friends of that United States who were then seeking peace for Germany, and peace without victory from her opponents? Where is the German fellow man in America or in Christendom who can mitigate, far less justify, that dark and bloody deed? Where is the noble nation but cries to heaven in the shrieks of the victims for the deep damnation of their taking off?

Ah, sir, in that dark night, in the distant seas, miles and miles from home—there they are; little children floating with their pale faces upward, where the Christ that has ever welcomed little children could at least beckon their souls to His bosom. Manly men, poor humble sailors, whose only purpose was to gain a living, little dreaming of warfare against any human being; there they are, lifeless upon the waves, never again to see the humble place which they called home. Mothers and children to bid farewell forever—no wrong done by these poor seamen. Yet, sir, in hundreds, there these American seamen lay, a sacrifice to but their duty and patriotism to their own country; and dastardly and inexcusable as that act of murder is, up to this hour these princes and war lords of Prussia, who live by the sceptre and will die only by the sword, have neither renounced the deed, expressed regret for the act, or expressed pity for the dead. Shall it be said, as to this, that we have not a leg to stand on, as my eminent friend the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], would have as the text of his valiant defense?

Mr. President, you can readily see that there was nothing else that this country could do than what she has done. Could she, sirs, accept these situations supinely, and surrender before the world, making herself contemptible before mankind, and stand humiliated before her own children as unworthy of longer existence in a world of civilized lands?

It was the elder Pitt, sir, speaking of your country and mine, Mr. President, referring to America in the House of Parliament, who said:

I rejoice that America will not do that thing which only slaves could have done; for, if she can be the slave that they would have her, she would be fit material to make slaves of others.

We could not be such slaves that we could endure the atrocious murder of our people, at a time when we were befriending its assailants, without raising our voice and our hands in deadly protest; aye, sir, even if it means to the death. Without such protest there could be no freedom in America, no justice in the United States, no sovereignty in this Republic.

Therefore, when the eminent chancellor would have this country understand that we had no cause for war and would have that go out to the loyal German citizens of this country, I refute it upon the record, and before it say: "There is the ocular proof" that no nation in the world could have endured so long, much less longer, than we.

Sir, we are not making a war of revenge. We are not striking with vengeance against the German people. It has been scoffed by certain German press in this land that we make this distinction. I behold that among the leaders of the Prussian military dynasty that they frown and sneer at the suggestion of the distinction. The form of this statement is ours, but the phrase is theirs. We adopt it—not that we do not mean it, but we take their distinction, for the parallel situation was characterized by them as we characterize it here ourselves—a war against emperors, not against a people forced by emperors to do their bidding.

Mr. President, in 1870 France, to please the vagary and whim of the little lady from Spain who had become the wife of the Emperor, laid her hand hard upon the shipping and commerce of Germany in the ports of Havre and Marseille. Germany protested, and France then visited further indignities that she might have what her Empress called "her little war." Then, sirs, it became necessary for Germany to defend herself against the aggressions of the Emperor of France, and, with one affront borne until another, she dismissed the minister from France who had been accredited to Germany, as we dismissed for similar affronts from Germany Count von Bernstorff. Then Germany announced the necessity of war against France. But one of the very first announcements by Bismarck was, "We are not warring against the French people, but against the Emperor." He recognized, as we recognize in Germany, that it was not the people who wanted such conflict with their friends. Then, sir, when this war which Germany waged against France was in process we hear Von Moltke, writing of it, frankly say to the world:

The war of 1870–71 arose from just such relations. A Napoleon on the throne of France was bound to establish his rights by political and military successes. * * * The liberal spirit of the epoch was opposed to the autocratic government of the Emperor, * * * and one fine day the nation was informed by its representatives that it desired war with Germany.

Then, when finally the people of France were compelled, of course, to follow the order of the Emperor—as the humble people of Germany, for whom we speak and unto whose sad hearts we send our sympathy, are being called on, of course, to follow the orders of the German Emperor—then, says Von Moltke, adverting to this sadly:

The inhabitants of that district also became troublesome. The Government had provided them with arms and organized a general rising. The Germans, who up to that period had made war on the Emperor alone, were now forced to use their arms against the people.

Sir, it is therefore their distinction, rightfully made, which we adopt. It is the Emperor of Germany and his war lords against whom we have been forced to defend. Those who, having drawn the sword of war against us, force us to draw ours, which has slept so long in the scabbard. We do it that we might defend our rights and maintain the honor of our country, not against the German people but against the Emperor; and we, too, as did Von Moltke then—before Germany grew to this autocratic point of emulating Napoleon—bemoan if it shall be necessary that the arms put in the hands of the German people shall ever assail America, that she may have to vanquish them in death.

Mr. President, war is upon us. The loyal German of this country will take his stand. I know him. He lives in a little home all around the great West in the places of which I speak and where I live. He is a quiet, law-abiding citizen. The catalogues of the criminal courts show less of him than of many other nationalities. The divorce courts know him not at all. He pays his debts, he attends his church, he educates his children, he carries poetry in his heart, art in his nature, and in his genial kindness is always complacent to mankind, and only when driven to strife will he take it up. He longs to be loyal; he wants to be faithful—a true friend, a loyal citizen, and a Godly man.

Then, sir, it is this hour wherein he is to be tested. But we have no fears of that test. He will remember when he is serving his country, America, that the Englishman made up the armies of the American colonies against England in 1776; That the victory over England made a nobler England because of his fight for liberty for America against his mother country. By that fight and its victory he taught his motherland the universal ballot and brought her to a theory of democracy, educated her in republicanism, by which the children of his successors in after days enjoyed the liberty for which he gave his sacrifice as an Englishman under the colonies of America.

These loyal Germans will contemplate that the Frenchmen who came as Huguenots in the Carolinas and the French Catholics in Louisiana opposed the imperial power of France and joined this their adopted country in conflict against her in 1813 and 1814 to protect America—to war against the imperial rulers of France. These loyal Germans will remember that when France was vanquished by America, behold France took a new form and was new born, and it was through the sacrifice here that the Frenchman in America taught his mother France to never again persecute by oppression or injustice. The Frenchman in America taught France how she had to follow the lessons of her revolutions and do justice to men.

Oh, these Germans who were Germans on yesterday are Americans to-day. They will realize as they fight under the flag of America for America they also fight for a Germany that will transmit to the children of their kinsmen in the land from which they came a new spirit and a reconsecrated people. There will be a new ruling class who will again recognize the power of democracy and justice, taught them by the sons of the fathers who had fled from the persecution of a motherland to the liberty of their adopted one.

So, sirs, they have nothing to regret. Senators, the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], probably the eminent Senators from Iowa, and my eminent colleague, Senator SHERMAN, and myself more wholly represent in Congress more of the Germans in America than any other representative in Congress. For that, sir, I wish to speak in condemnation of how cruel it is that these masters—the spirits of an imperial dynasty—should have brought upon the children of their fatherland, upon the children of their adopted land the miserable fate with which they are to be inflicted. Theirs is now to war either against their motherland for their adopted country or to war against their adopted country for their motherland. In either way their poor hearts are to be torn to bleeding as their children look to their faces of father and mother and demand the answer to the question, Which way?

Then, sir, to be put, as they must, under suspicion as long as they live amongst us; to have their children under the ban of accusation as long as they live; to feel themselves under a cloud; to feel themselves as pariahs—as Ishmaelites—with their hand lifted against all and all hands lifted against them. Sad, unhappy people. Is there a noble man who occupies a seat here whose heart will not bleed for the future state of those who will now be in misery and agony whatever may be the lot they shall choose to cast?

I say, sir, it was not America which brought upon them this destiny. It was their forebears who, under the guidance of military mania for destruction and death, wrought upon them this havoc.

Sir, we contemplate them this day. These Germans of our land are tested in their devotion. For myself, sir, I have no fear that they will not prove in the test the loyalty which we certified and which the President of the United States conceded in his message when he referred to those who as long as they were loyal should have exception of every form of the heavy hand of war. He knew that he could depend upon all of them save those few who have been made the confederates of spies and accessories in espionage, conspiracy, incendiarism, and murder all for the lack of understanding upon their part, let us believe, as to where their fealty lay; being misguided by not having the truth as we see it. This deception upon them is still being continued against them by distinguished representatives of the German Government in its imperial councils. This ignorance of the facts on the part of our German-Americans is the author of their confusion. Yet let us believe, sir, all will yet come well.

Mr. President, yesterday was in the calendar of saints and religion what we call Easter. It is a day when the land is flowered with lilies and splashed with lilacs. It marks that era when the Christ of humanity rose and all the world echoed, "He has risen." He arose that He may prove to all the earth that He died that men might live and that He lives again that men might not die, but have eternal life.

Sir, if it be true, as true it be, that the Christ died that men may live, so, sir, men must die that nations may live. But, sir, they, too, rise again in the cerements of grandeur to behold their country in the vigor of glory reincarnated and reborn by their sacrifice made for liberty, justice, and immortality.

So, sir, we proceed this day sadly, but we proclaim the necessity for war. The die is cast, and in the words which the President of the United States closed the final sentence of his message, adopting the inspiring sentence of Martin Luther, "We can do no other"; and it is this which is now before us.

Mr. President, I have done. This Senate, as has been its custom, characterized its patience with its usual generosity to me.

I have presented this record as I see it for myself and to those who may be interested in the truth of our position.

Our cause is one in which the loyal German citizen has the heart of 1848, when Schurz led the forces for liberty. It, sir, is the cause when Franz von Siegel, together with Schurz, led its cause for justice and freedom in America. It is the cause that Herkimer and Von Steuben gave all they had for. The cause of 1776. To-day again, behold us, ours is the spirit of 1776; the German amongst us—now all American—his is the heart of 1830 and 1848. Together we will move to the accomplishment of justice for America that we may do no wrong to any other.

Mr. President, there have been differences between our distinguished sides, the Democrats and Republicans. There have been differences in the past so grave and serious as to have sent us to clash in war—the sons of the South against the sons of the North. They poured their blood freely in single stream that from their sacrifice the Union might live.

Sir, there are no differences in this hour. We are truly together. Whatever grievances then existed have all been appeased, and to-day to our countrymen we point the way to speedy triumph. It is in her unity of action, in the harmony of purpose, in the devotion of our countrymen to the one single object—victory to our country in the cause of justice. This as our watchward we now throw out before the world, and to the beholding earth and in reply to every question of why and wherefore of our cause, we reply "This is America. It is United America, all one, all together."

Mr. President, it was my lot, sir, to be in Russia on the day of the first Duma, when unhappily the building gave way under an assault and many were borne out dead. There came out of the ruins of the building a lost picture of Vereshchagin. I bring it to your attention as I bring my remarks to a close. It is entitled "The Conquerors." On the canvas they move forth out of the gloom; there is Attila, there is Genghis Khan, there are Sylla, Pompey, and Cæsar. Then, sir, in the caravan are those who in the shadow would emulate the example of these mighty murderers of men and civilization. They twirl on their lances the heads of babies; they trample beneath the iron hoofs of their horses the screaming mothers; they bear down and drive through with their spears the fleeing men; and in blood and death devastate the land.

They come on—these conquerors—making cobblestones of the heads of the decapitated thousands—they are the mad captains of war conquest.

Hidden in the dust are the crouching forms of those—long the foes of each—the poor peasant. One a mother in blouse of blue, one a man in coat of red. They were the hereditary enemies from their tribes. They beheld each other—when the blue said to the red, "What, you here? Yes; and you, my sister." She said, "I am here. Look and behold those who come." He says to her, "We have been enemies too long. Come, behold them. There is our enemy. We must upon them or we will be under them. Come, give me your hand—together." She says, "Yes; against those together we fight for children, for home, for country." He cries, "Then together let us go against them, that we may live." Then, sir, for us it is together—for home, for children, for country! To-day, you of the blue, you of the gray—the brown men from Porto Rico, the yellow men from the Philippine Islands, the loyal men of all nationalities—all for America. It is the call—together—for home, for children, for country—that we may march again to vindicate before the world the dream of Lincoln—the realization of a Government that shall be by the people, of the people, for the people, and shall not perish from the earth.

I thank you. [Applause by the Senators.]

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of House bill 13, the Army appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 13) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for action upon the amendments of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALSH in the chair). Without objection, the request of the Senator from Oregon will be granted unanimously.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, under the subhead "Office of the Chief of Staff," on page 4, after line 22, to insert:

Relief of Matthew E. Hanna, late captain, Tenth Cavalry, United States Army: That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Matthew E. Hanna, late captain, Tenth Cavalry, United States Army, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $532.18, which amount is hereby appropriated, being the amount of money expended by him as special disbursing agent from an allotment from the appropriation for contingencies of the Army, 1912, to pay the unusual and extraordinary official expenses of the special mission of Army officers detailed by the President and the Secretary of War to witness the autumn maneuvers of the German Army in 1911, and which amount was deposited by him in the Treasury of the United States from private funds.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 12, to insert:

Relief of Maj. Powell C. Fauntleroy, Medical Corps, United States Army: That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Maj. Powell C. Fauntleroy, Medical Corps, United States Army, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $601.40, which amount is hereby appropriated, being the amount of money expended by him from an allotment of funds of the Quartermaster Corps, 1913, furnished him for the purpose of paying expenditures incurred as an official observer of the War Department of the Turko-Balkan War, and which amount was deposited by him in the Treasury of the United States from private funds.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 6, to insert:

Relief of Lieut. Col. George O. Squier, Signal Corps, United States Army.—That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Lieut. Col. George O. Squier, Signal Corps, United States Army, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $41.46, which amount is hereby appropriated, being the amount of money expended by him as military attaché to the American embassy at London from an allotment of the appropriation, contingencies, military information section, General Staff Corps, 1913 and 1914, and which amount was deposited by him in the Treasury of the United States from private funds.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 13, to insert:

Relief of Capt. Sherman Miles, Field Artillery, United States Army.—That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Capt. Sherman Miles, Field Artillery, United States Army, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $57.95, which amount is hereby appropriated, being the amount of money expended by him as military attaché to the American legation at Bucharest, Roumania, from an allotment of the appropriation, contingencies, military information section, General Staff Corps, 1913, and which amount was deposited by him in the Treasury of the United States from private funds.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 7, to insert:

Credit in the accounts of Maj. Henry L. Newbold, Seventh Field Artillery, United States Army.—The accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized and directed to allow and credit in the accounts of Maj. Henry L. Newbold, Seventh Field Artillery, United States Army, the sum of $319.37, disallowed against him on the books of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 7, to insert:

Credit in the accounts of Col. Jesse McI. Carter, Cavalry, United States Army.—The accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized and directed to allow and credit in the accounts of Col. Jesse McI. Carter, Cavalry, United States Army, the sum of $352.23, disallowed against him on the books of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 13, to insert:

Credit in the accounts of Lieut. Col. T. Bentley Mott, United States Army (retired).—The accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to allow and credit in the accounts of Lieut. Col. T. Bentley Mott, United States Army (retired), the sum of $55.33, disallowed against him on the books of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 20, to insert:

For reimbursement to First Lieut. William C. Short, Sixteenth Infantry, Secretary of the School of Musketry, Fort Sill, Okla., of money expended by him in the purchase of two motorcycles for the use of the school, $531.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of the Chief Signal Officer," on page 10, line 22, after the word "otherwise," to strike out "$9,000,000" and insert "$11,800,000," so as to make the clause read:

Signal Service of the Army: For expenses of the Signal Service of the Army, as follows: Purchase, equipment, and repair of field electric telegraphs, radio installations, signal equipments and stores, binocular glasses, telescopes, heliostats, and other necessary instruments, including necessary meteorological instruments for use on target ranges; motorcycles and motor-driven vehicles used for technical and official purposes; professional and scientific books of reference, pamphlets, periodicals, newspapers, and maps, for use in the office of the Chief Signal Officer; war balloons and airships and accessories, including their maintenance and repair; telephone apparatus (exclusive of exchange service) and maintenance of the same; electrical installations and maintenance at military posts; fire-control and direction apparatus and material for Field Artillery; maintenance and repair of military lines and cables, including salaries of civilian employees, supplies, general repairs, reserved supplies, and other expenses connected with the duty of collecting and transmitting information for the Army by telegraph or otherwise, $11,800,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 24, after the word "than," to strike out "$8,000,000" and insert "$10,800,000," so as to make the clause read:

Provided, however, That not more than $10,800,000 of the foregoing appropriation shall be used for the purchase, manufacture, maintenance, operation, and repair of airships and other aerial machines, buildings for equipment and personnel, and other accessories necessary in the Aviation Section; and for the purchase, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles which may be necessary for the Aviation Section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 18, to strike out:

Provided further, That the sum of $1,000,000 may be expended out of the appropriations for aviation provided by the act of August 29, 1916, for the acquisition, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, of sites and construction of buildings for aviation schools.

And, at the top of page 12, to insert:

Provided further, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to acquire, by purchase, donation, or by condemnation, such land sites throughout the United States as are immediately necessary for the permanent establishment of aviation schools, aviation posts, and experimental aviation stations and proving grounds for the United States Army.

Provided further, That in order to carry this legislation into effect the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to use such portion as may be necessary of the $13,281,666 appropriated for the Signal Service of the Army in the act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917: Provided, however, That not more than $4,500,000 shall be made available for this purpose: Provided further, That the funds thus authorized for use in the purchase of land sites may also be used for the improvement and preparation of land and waters contiguous thereto; for the construction, maintenance, and repair of permanent barracks, quarters, stables, storehouses, magazines, administration buildings, hangars, sheds, shops, garages, and other permanent buildings necessary for the shelter of aviation troops, public animals, stores and equipment, and for administration purposes; for the purchase of all equipment and material necessary for the installation, operation, and repair of all water, sewer, electric-light and electric-power systems; for the construction of roads, walks, and wharves; for the disposal of drainage; for the clearing, grading, rolling, seeding, dredging, and otherwise improving and preparing land and water sites; for rental and lease of grounds for aviation fields, camp sites, and other military aviation purposes; for rental and lease of buildings or portions of buildings for occupation by aviation troops, and for use as storehouses, offices, shops, garages, and for other military aviation purposes; for the purchase of office furniture and office equipment; for the purchase and installation of special equipment, supplies, and accessories necessary for the establishment of experimental stations and proving grounds, aviation schools, and aviation posts; for the purchase of such textbooks, books of reference, scientific and professional papers, periodicals and magazines, and the purchase of modern instruments and material for theoretical and practical instruction in all experimental stations and proving grounds and aviation schools and aviation posts: Provided further, That the funds thus authorized for these purposes shall be available until expended: And provided further, That not more than $600,000 of the foregoing sum shall be used for the purchase of land.

Mr. WEEKS. I have an amendment to the amendment which I desire to offer.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I would very much prefer if the Senator would wait until the committee amendments have been disposed of, and then amendments to be offered by Senators will be in order.

Mr. WEEKS. This is an amendment to the committee amendment, and I supposed that this was the time to offer it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Very well, that is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of New Mexico in the chair). The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the words "United States Army," page 12, at the end of line 6, insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of the foregoing appropriation shall be expended for the purchase of aviation fields if it is found practicable to lease suitable sites for such purposes on more favorable terms.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection to that amendment; but I suppose it refers to the appropriations hereafter made, and should come later on in the bill.

Mr. WEEKS. I feel quite content that the chairman of the committee should make any change of that character which he thinks necessary in inserting the provision. It seems to me that this is the place where the amendment should come in.

My purpose in offering the amendment is that I have been informed that there are available aviation fields which would be leased to the Government on long terms without any material, if any, compensation, and it seemed to me under those circumstances instead of purchasing these fields we should make leases. I am quite willing, however, to have the amendment inserted at such place as the Senator from Oregon may think proper.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am not opposing it at all; but the Senator will notice that it refers to the preceding appropriation, and no appropriation is made preceding the amendment to the amendment. All the appropriations are made subsequent to the place where the amendment to the amendment is proposed to be inserted. I have no objection to the amendment, and if it is not in the proper place we will fix it.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Oregon that it seems to me the proviso ought to go in after line 21, on page 13. That is where the appropriation has been made.

Mr. President, while I have the floor I should like to say a word on this subject. I suppose it is contemplated that we will have quite a number of these grounds.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes. It was shown, I will say to the Senator, by Gen. Squier, Chief of the Aviation Section, that they are wholly unprepared as to the grounds and as to the machines, too.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I understand. I am reminded of the fact, as I understand it, that in Mexico, where we undertook to use the machines, on account of the altitude they found that it was not practicable, and they had to devise different machines and make changes. I presume the Government will have aviation stations in various parts of the country and at different altitudes, and there are a good many places where such grounds could be had on the public lands of the United States.

I suggest to the Senator that it would be a good idea, it seems to me, to have some amendment inserted that would make provision by which the Secretary of the Interior would have authority, on the request of the War Department, to set aside public lands that could be used for that purpose. I should like to inquire whether there is anything in the bill to that effect?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, when Gen. Squier, the head of the Signal Service, was before the committee, he stated that the department had to some extent examined several places in the West which were located in different altitudes in the Rocky Mountains and elsewhere which had been brought to its attention, and that there were many places where the public lands might possibly be used for this purpose. He stated that that matter would come up later in a definite way, as to the transportation facilities for getting in and getting out, and so forth. I rather think that the Secretary of War already has authority to so use the public lands.

Mr. NORRIS. I was in doubt about that. I very much doubt whether he could set public land aside for such a purpose. If he has authority to do so, then no legislation is necessary.

Mr. WARREN. Undoubtedly an order from the President would cover the matter.

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly he could set aside the land for some other purpose, and it might then be used for this purpose; but I can not see any objection, at least, to a definite statement in the law giving authority to set aside the public lands for this specific purpose; and it seems to me that ought to be done.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I quite agree with the Senator from Nebraska; but I wish to call his attention to the fact that the President already has a right, under the law, to make such withdrawal. He may do so under the act of June 10, 1910, I think.

Mr. NORRIS. But has the President the authority to do so for this purpose?

Mr. SMOOT. He has authority to withdraw lands for this purpose.

Mr. NORRIS. Then there is no legislation necessary to specifically give such authority.

Mr. SMOOT. No such legislation is necessary.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, I fully agree with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] that this amendment should be adopted. We discussed this matter very fully in the committee; and after the discussion in the committee we were informed that there were several places where we could secure ground free of charge. This morning I had read into the RECORD a telegram offering not only to furnish the ground for this purpose, but also to furnish funds to equip at least five machines. There is no question but that the people of this Nation are very much in favor of encouraging this arm of the Army whenever they can, and I believe they should have that opportunity—that is, the opportunity of furnishing any ground for Government use along these lines which they may desire to furnish. For that reason I sincerely hope that the amendment will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 14, after line 2, to insert:

Provided further, That hereafter nothing in section 25 of the national defense act of June 3, 1916, shall be held to prevent the detail of an officer in the aviation section of the Signal Corps.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 7, to insert:

Provided further, That hereafter mileage to officers in the Aviation Section, Signal Corps, traveling on duty in connection with aviation service shall be paid from the appropriation for the work in connection with which the travel is performed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether or not his committee considered the proposition of making a separate bureau of aeronautics; as to whether or not they thought that service could be conducted under its present management; that is to say, partly under the office of the Secretary of War and partly under the office of the Secretary of the Navy, they being greatly pressed with the enormous business they have in hand and unable to give a subject of this vast importance attention until after all other matters have been attended to. I understand that at the beginning this service had a divided authority in England and likewise in France, but that afterwards it became necessary, in order to make a success of this great arm of the service, to place it under a separate bureau, so that it might have separate attention and full attention. I understand that there is at this time a separate bureau in England for the management of aeronautics, and that they have appropriated a vast sum of money—possibly as much as a hundred million dollars in England alone—and that they have as many as 10,000 machines operating at this time. Probably they have the same number of machines engaged in that service in France, with a like appropriation. I was wondering whether or not the matter had been considered by the Committee on Military Affairs or whether or not it was deemed that the service could be managed, vast as it is and important as it is and will be, so far as this country is concerned, under divided authority.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that, so far as it has been possible to establish a separate bureau, it has been done in the department itself. Gen. Squier has recently been assigned to take charge of the aviation section of the Signal Corps. I think that, with our present facilities for aviation, under its present management it can be handled without the creation of a distinctively separate bureau; but as aviation grows I am satisfied that there will have to be some additional legislation in order to handle this most important branch of the Army.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, is it not true that Gen. Squier, who is at the head of Army aviation, has nothing whatever to do with naval aviation?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is entirely true; he has nothing to do with naval aviation.

Mr. WATSON. So that there is no joint board in the management of one service of aviation?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There is none at all. I am in line with the thought of the Senator. I think that what he suggests ought to be done, and probably it will have to be done a little later on, as these preparations are made.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Oregon, having the pending bill in charge, if in the hearings there was any proposition to create a department of aeronautics at this time? Has there been a proposition from either the War Department or the Navy Department recommending the creation of such a bureau?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There has not yet been. There was no discussion in the Senate Committee on Military Affairs on that particular subject, nor do I think it was discussed in the other House; at least, I do not recall that it was. I understand that there is a bill now pending for that purpose, but it has not been discussed in either of the committees, nor do I know that such a bill has been reported.

Mr. SMOOT. I think such a bill has been introduced both in the Senate and in the other House; and I should judge from the telegrams which I have been receiving for the last few days that the senders of such telegrams were under the impression that the substance of the bill would be offered as an amendment to the pending appropriation bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No suggestion of that kind has come from either the Department of War or the Navy Department.

Mr. SMOOT. It has not been recommended by either department?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] is quite right about the statements which have been made by correspondents to different Senators. I think they received the impression which he states from the bill which was offered in the Senate. It had been the intention of the committee to take this matter up as a separate measure. That will certainly have to be done; but the committee, after discussing the matter, came to the conclusion that it would be better to take it up as a separate measure rather than to offer it as an amendment to the pending bill.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, undoubtedly the question asked by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] opens a field which may be wisely considered, and the suggestions which he makes should undoubtedly be given consideration. In the present status, however, I think I am justified in saying that there is the closest harmony between the head of the Aviation Corps of the Army and the similar officer in the Naval Establishment. In the purchase of machines and as to all other matters which relate to that service, so far as can be done under present conditions, the work will be carried on in an economical and businesslike way.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I understand that to be purely voluntary.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is entirely voluntary.

Mr. WATSON. There is nothing in the law requiring that. It occurs to me that this service is of such vast importance that it ought to have special attention. We have now, as I am told, about 100 machines for use in the entire Army, and those are all training machines. I understand that we have not a single battle aeroplane. Of course, we all understand the vast importance of this particular arm of the service. The only reason why I was making the inquiry was to ascertain whether or not the subject had been discussed or whether or not it was in the line of future activity so far as relates to the work of the committee.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, under the head of "Pay of the Army, Quartermaster Corps," subhead "Officers of the line," on page 15, line 15, after the word "line," to strike out "$11,500,000" and insert "$12,500,000," so as to read:

For pay of officers of the line, $12,500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after the word "service," at the end of line 16, to strike out "$2,000,000" and insert "$2,153,373.91," so as to read:

QUARTERMASTER CORPS.

OFFICERS OF THE LINE.

For pay of officers of the line, $12,500,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be paid to any officer of the line of the Army who shall be appointed or promoted in violation of any of the terms next hereinafter specified: That of the whole number of officers of Cavalry, Field Artillery, Coast Artillery Corps, Infantry, and of Engineers serving with the enlisted force of the Corps of Engineers necessary to fill vacancies created or caused in said arms of the service by reason of the second increment, authorized in said arms by act of Congress approved June 3, 1916, not more than one-fourth shall be appointed or promoted until, exclusive of enlisted men belonging to said arms on June 30, 1916, at least one-fourth of the second increment of enlisted men authorized for said arms by said act shall have been enlisted; not more than one-half of said whole number of officers shall be appointed or promoted until at least one-half of said increment of enlisted men shall have been enlisted; and not more than three-fourths of said whole number of officers shall be appointed or promoted until at least three-fourths of said increment of enlisted men shall have been enlisted. And all officers promoted in accordance with the terms of this proviso shall take rank, respectively, from the dates on which their promotions shall have become lawful under the terms of this proviso. Additional pay to officers for length of service, $2,153,373.91.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after the amendment just adopted, to insert:

Provided, That all general officers shall hereafter be of the grade of major general with the existing relative rank, the senior one-third of whom shall have the pay and allowances of that grade, and the junior two-thirds the pay and allowances now authorized by law for brigadier generals, which latter grade is hereby abolished: And provided, That the Chief of Staff while so serving shall have the rank of general and take precedence over all other officers of the Army; and of the general officers commanding the three territorial departments in the United States which may be designated by the President or commanding the land forces in the Philippines, Hawaiian Islands, and Panama Canal Zone not more than three, in the discretion of the President, shall while so serving have the rank of general and not more than three the rank of lieutenant general; and, in the discretion of the President, one of the two general officers of the General Staff Corps may have the rank of lieutenant general while so serving, but in no case shall there be more than three officers of that rank: Provided further, That the pay of a general officer while serving with the rank of general and the pay of a general officer while serving with the rank of lieutenant general as hereinbefore provided, shall be, respectively, $10,000 and $9,000 per annum, with such allowances as may be fixed by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That should a general officer while serving with the rank of general or lieutenant general as hereinbefore provided be retired from active service, he shall be retired with the rank and the retired pay to which he would be entitled had he not been serving with the rank of general or lieutenant general.

Provided, That persons who have heretofore held commissions in the Regular Army and are recommissioned by the President under the terms of section 24 of the act of Congress approved June 3, 1916, shall be so recommissioned as additional officers.

Provided further, That no colonel of Cavalry, Field Artillery, or Infantry shall be assigned or attached to any regiment of those arms while such regiment is in command of another colonel assigned or attached thereto.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota, Mr. WEEKS, and Mr. VARDAMAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, I do not desire to take up time, but I should like to ask the chairman of the committee, or some member of the committee who understands this amendment, to give an explanation of it. I am not quite able to understand the provision commencing in line 17, page 16, with regard to general officers, and so forth.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, before an explanation is made I should like to offer an amendment to that provision which I am going to submit and discuss later on if it should be necessary. I ask to have it read and pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the proposed amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out after the word "That," in line 23, page 16, down to and including the word "rank," line 11, page 17, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

The Chief of Staff while so serving shall have the rank of general and have precedence over all other officers of the Army: Provided further, That in the discretion of the President general officers commanding military departments, including the assistant chief of staff, either in continental United States or in the Philippines, Hawaii, or Panama, while so serving may have the rank of lieutenant general: And provided further, That, except as a result of conspicuous service while in contact with the enemy, no appointment shall be made to the grade of lieutenant general other than in the order of lineal rank as borne on the Army Register.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me for interrupting him, I join in the request of the Senator from South Dakota for an explanation of the pending proviso, my purpose being, if the explanation is given and is not satisfactory, to make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if the chairman of the committee will permit me, I desire to say a few words in explanation of this amendment, unless he desires to take the floor at this time.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I should be very glad to have the Senator from Wyoming proceed.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I ask for order. This is a very important matter, and we are all hungry for light on the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will request that order be preserved on the floor and also in the galleries.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, in the make-up of the Army there are various grades of officers from lieutenant to general. Beginning at the bottom, the grades are second lieutenant, first lieutenant, captain, major, lieutenant colonel, colonel, brigadier general, major general, lieutenant general, and general. In time of profound peace, when the Army was small, the offices of general and lieutenant general were for the time being done away with; and so the highest officer we now have in the service is a major general. Under the arrangement of armies in this country and others, so far as brigadier generals are concerned, ours is the only country where that rank is now found, except in the way of what might be called brevet rank. Instead of brigadier generals and major generals there are the ranks of major general, senior grade, and major general, junior grade, the same as in the case of rear admirals in the Navy. Rear admirals in the Navy are of two grades, namely, senior and junior, and they draw pay corresponding with that of major general and brigadier general in the Army, respectively.

In the Navy one half of the rear admirals have rank corresponding to major general in the Army and the other half draw the lesser pay and have junior rank, drawing pay corresponding to the pay of brigadier generals. This proposition is more modest than that of the Navy and is more economical. The entire expense of the changes involved in this provision could not exceed $18,000 a year on the present organization basis. It provides that of the whole number of the present brigadier and major generals of the Army, added together, one-third—instead of one-half, as in the Navy—shall draw the pay of senior and two-thirds shall draw the pay of junior major generals. It does not disturb the relations now existing as to pay, except that it gives two or three more brigadiers the pay of major general.

Formerly the pay of a general was $13,500, the pay of lieutenant general $11,000, the pay of major general $8,000, and of brigadier general $6,000. This provision for temporary bestowal of rank allows the pay of a general to be only $10,000 and that of a lieutenant general $9,000 while so serving. When retirement time comes these officers are to retire at only their basic rank and pay of major general.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. WARREN. I yield to the Senator with pleasure.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does the Senator think that this adds to the efficiency of the Army, or is it simply for the purpose of increasing the salaries of officers?

Mr. WARREN. I do believe it will add materially to the efficiency of the Army. If, indeed, a major general should command the different units all the way up—a division, an army corps, or an army—then why should not a lieutenant or why should not a captain command all the different units up to a brigade? It is a matter of greater responsibility as compared to lesser responsibility.

I was about to say that a brigade is composed of three regiments and is commanded, under our present system, by a brigadier general. Under the plan proposed it would be commanded by a major general of the junior rank. A division comprises three brigades or, we will say, nine regiments and is the command of a major general. An army corps consists of three divisions or more, and should be under the command of a lieutenant general. An army, which may consist of two or three or more corps, should be under the command of a general.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. Is it the proposal to abolish brigades in the organization of the Army?

Mr. WARREN. No.

Mr. NELSON. Then, we are still to have regiments, brigades, divisions, and corps?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. Why not retain the rank of brigadier general, then, for the commanding officer of a brigade? Why have two sets of major generals, one major general commanding a division, another major general commanding a corps, and another major general commanding a brigade? Why is not a brigadier general the appropriate officer for a brigade, so long as we retain that organization in the Army?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, that opens up the subject rather broadly. If the Senator thinks there is an inconsistency in a major general being assigned to two bodies of troops of different size, what must he think when it goes all the way up, so that every body of troops, in proportion of every size, from above 3,000 men up to an army of 100,000 or more men, would also be in command of an officer with only the rank of a major general regardless of size of command, with all the responsibility and expense, and so forth, and without extra pay or emoluments in recognition of his service? It was thought by the committee—and I think the Senator will concur in that view—that an officer having a large command of that kind ought to have at least some higher rank than one who has command of a division of nine regiments or less.

This provision is patterned very largely, Mr. President, after the make-up of the armies in foreign countries, and, furthermore, it is very much like the organization of the Navy. When the naval appropriation bill passed in 1915 it provided that there should be three admirals, corresponding to the rank of general, and three vice admirals, corresponding in rank to lieutenant generals in the Army. In a later act, which passed August 29, 1916, provision was made for another admiral in the Navy.

Now, this provision is temporary. It simply provides that the President may designate some of the major generals, not to exceed three, who may act as generals and receive $10,000 a year during the pleasure of the department or of the President. He may also temporarily appoint three as lieutenant generals, to receive $9,000, which is $1,000 more than they receive as major generals. It seems to me it is rather inconsistent for us to undertake to restrict the higher officers to the same grade as when the Army was small in time of peace, and when the commanding officers were of lower rank, especially now, when we are at war and expect to raise large armies.

I have heard one Senator say that he is very much attached to the title "brigadier," and we ought never to change it. Well, perhaps so; but that Senator in serving as a cadet and being ready to go out in the Civil War, as he was, and as others of us did, had to use a muzzle-loading rifle, the butt of which he put on the ground, then drew the ramrod, took the cartridge from his belt, and went through the motions of Hardee's tactics, or others, as to loading and firing those old-time muskets. That is the way our men fought at that time, shooting one ball at a time and taking several minutes to load. I think it is about as consistent that we should go back to that system as that we should be hidebound and not be willing in some measure to keep up with the improvement of the times and with the practice of other countries.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, does not the Senator think that we would be in a very much better position if we should pay a little more attention to the old ways of doing things—not in the conduct of armies, perhaps, but in matters of economy?

Mr. WARREN. Did the Senator hear me say that the highest possible expense—it may never cost a dollar; it rests entirely with the President—of this provision can not exceed $18,000 a year, and does not the Senator think we might get that much benefit from it?

Mr. VARDAMAN. But what is the necessity for the provision? The Senator does not think it is going to add to the efficiency of the Army, does he?

Mr. WARREN. I most certainly do. Does the Senator expect men to do their best when an officer who may have command of a few soldiers on an island or of one or two regiments has the rank and emoluments of an officer who has command of an army?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I will tell the Senator that there is just as much patriotism and as much efficient service in the man who gets $15 a month as in the man who gets $10,000 a year.

Mr. WARREN. Well, Mr. President, I do not care to discuss that part of it, because it needs no discussion.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WARREN. I will.

Mr. NELSON. I call the Senator's attention to the fact—of course, the Senator knows about it—that practically this bill provides for four full generals, the Chief of Staff and three other generals, and then, in addition to that, it provides for three lieutenant generals. All the other general officers will be major generals, with no break between colonels and major generals. Is not that the effect of the bill?

Mr. WARREN. No, Mr. President; the effect of the bill is as the Senator has stated, except it does not provide for a single additional general or lieutenant general, except as it simply gives the President the privilege of delegating to six of the major generals of the Army this temporary rank, which carries with it, for the time being, in the case of a general $2,000 a year additional, and in the case of a lieutenant general $1,000 a year additional over the present pay of major general.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. I call the Senator's attention to the proviso at the bottom of page 17, line 23, which reads as follows:

Provided, That persons who have heretofore held commissions in the Regular Army and are recommissioned by the President under the terms of section 24 of the act of Congress approved June 3, 1916, shall be so recommissioned as additional officers.

Does not that provide for additional officers?

Mr. WARREN. That is not part of what I am discussing at all. That is to provide that, in recommissioning a brigadier general as a major general of the junior rank, the date of commission shall be as provided in the national-defense act. The Senator will notice there that it refers to the defense act.

Mr. McKELLAR. That provides also for additional officers.

Mr. WARREN. The defense act provided for certain officers to be commissioned as "additional officers." This does not add anything really. That is no part of the equation about which we are talking.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will ask the Senator this question if he will yield to me——

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does not the Senator think it would be better to have this legislation brought forward in a separate general bill rather than in an appropriation bill at this time?

Mr. WARREN. No; Mr. President, I do not. I want to say that this is a matter in which I have no greater interest than has any other Senator. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] asked that the item be explained, and I hope to proceed to explain it as I understand it; but this is a matter that has been estimated for and was urgently placed before the committee by the Secretary of War, who made a special trip here to ask that this be done and that it be done in this bill, because in arranging military affairs in outlying territories, as well as here at home, there would naturally be, under the present circumstances, a greater number of troops, increased responsibility, and so forth.

When I was interrupted I was just alluding to what was done in the Navy. When that naval bill came up, in which it was provided that half of the rear admirals should be of the grade corresponding to that of brigadier general and half of the grade corresponding to that of major general, the then Senator from Florida [Mr. Bryan] unhappily not now a Member of the Senate—had charge of the bill. I raised this question of whether that was not unfair to the Army; and that Senator and others who were at that time interested in the naval bill acceded to the proposition, but asked that we not put it on the naval bill, which I considered entirely proper. Since then the Naval Affairs Committee and the Navy have been well satisfied with the arrangement, and have added another officer, a temporary admiral. They find that they get better administration.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, was it not argued in favor of increasing the rank of naval officers that it was done because our naval officers were most frequently in foreign lands, and when they were there they had to suffer the humiliation of being inferior in rank and position to the naval officers of other countries who had these increased ranks? That was the special argument, as I recall it, that was offered in the House in favor of the increase in naval ranks. Now, that does not apply, as it seems to me, here—certainly not to the same degree that it did to the Navy.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator is correct about that, as to the purpose then reported; but it does apply, and applies perhaps more than the Senator thinks, especially when the Army officers of other countries come, as they do, to our shores and are entertained and taken in charge by our Army officers; and it applies when the Army and Navy meet in councils on strategy boards and elsewhere. At this time, when the liability is so apparent that we may have troops in another and foreign country, should we humiliate our officers by asking them to go into these councils where they are not equal, and others are all above them? You see, the others are major generals of the junior and senior rank, as we now purpose to make ours. They have even higher officers than lieutenant generals and generals. They have their field marshals and other higher places or grades. It is no creation of mine, but it has seemed to me that it is entirely proper and entirely consistent, and just as consistent that we have those upper grades—and we had them formerly—as that other countries should have them.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WARREN. Allow me to finish this expression. They were embodied in the laws of America heretofore; and I happen to know—though I do not care to discuss that matter—it was against my wish, and for reasons that I thought were personal, that those offices were done away with.

As I remarked before, you have to stop somewhere. You can not hold all at one rank. If so, you might as well hold them all at the grade of major. Now, the man who has the proper spirit, as the Senator from Mississippi says, knows that he is going to do his duty anyway. But it is not doing the Army justice; it is not putting our officers on the proper basis with the officers of armies of other countries; it is not putting them on the proper basis between man and man that we should deny, at the present time, when there are wars and rumors of wars, that which has been heretofore granted and that which every other country grants in a very much greater measure than what we are asking for.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, if it will not interrupt the Senator——

Mr. WARREN. I yield to the Senator now.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I should like to ask the Senator, if it is a mere matter of social prestige, why not make the promotions with the same pay that they would receive if they were to retain their present grade? Do not tax the American people for the social prestige of a very few men.

Mr. WARREN. So far as the money is concerned, the money value of officers is different in different countries. Their salaries are different and their costs are different. Now, formerly the generals had the salary for life; they had it when they retired, or three-quarters of it. In this case it is not asked that when they retire they shall receive any greater pay than the regular rank of major general carries. It is of that temporary nature which we in a way employ now as to certain positions. For instance, in the case of the superintendent of public buildings and grounds, it matters not whether he is a captain or what he is; he draws the pay of a colonel. He draws it while under that detail because of his greater responsibilities; he has greater risks, financial and otherwise. Take the superintendent of West Point: That superintendent is sometimes a captain; he is sometimes a major general; but he always receives pay not less than that of a colonel while he is there.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. WARREN. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There is a general statute fixing this Army organization now; is there not?

Mr. WARREN. Up to certain points.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then of course this would be subject to a point of order, if a point of order were made, because it changes a general law.

Mr. WARREN. Not at all, I think.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It does not make any difference where they are put in, of course, if they become general statutes applying to the organization of the Army.

Mr. WARREN. Well, this is not a general statute in that sense, because this provides, as those two that I have just mentioned, temporary extra pay for the extra responsibility. It is a specific instruction following the appropriation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I suggest that this amendment go over for the present. I have no doubt myself that it will be subject to a point of order if anyone of us wishes to make the point of order upon it. I should like to examine it a little further before I make that point.

Mr. WARREN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have no doubt it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. WARREN. I rose to explain the matter, as the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] very properly asked that it should be explained.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just one question?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. I call his attention to the first line on page 17:

And of the general officers commanding the three territorial departments in the United States which may be designated by the President—

And so forth.

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Evidently since this bill was prepared there has been a change in the number of departments; and I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that this would probably not have the effect that it was intended to have if it should be passed now.

Mr. WARREN. I am glad the Senator called my attention to that; but the Senator from Massachusetts, whom I do not see in his seat now, has an amendment to offer, when we come to the final consideration of the matter, that will cover that ground.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, inasmuch as it has been requested that this amendment go over, I want to supplement what the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] said, and say to the Senate that this did not originate in the committee at all. It not only came down with the written request of the Secretary of War but his written request was followed by his personal presence before the committee, with the request that it be made a part of this bill, not because of the social prestige that it gives to the officers, as suggested by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN], but to equalize the rank of men in the Navy and men in the Army.

For instance, there is no reason why an admiral should outrank a major general. Of course it does not amount to much to the man who reads about it in the paper; but when these men come together, here is the oldest and most numerous branch of the service that sits at the foot of the table, while the Navy, the younger branch of the service, has precedence. It means a good deal to the officers of the Army as well as to the officers of the Navy. The rank of brigadier general formerly corresponded to the rank of commodore. The rank of commodore has been abolished in the Navy, so that the brigadier general has no equal in rank in the naval department.

Mr. President, in order that the whole thing may be considered together when it comes up for consideration again, I am going to ask to have inserted in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of War discussing the situation at length and giving his reasons for wanting the matter inserted in the bill, and with it a memorandum from the General Staff and the names of the officers, with their several ranks, so that taken together the Senators will have no difficulty in ascertaining just what the purpose of this amendment is from the department itself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the matter referred to will be inserted in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

FEBRUARY 12, 1917.

Subject: Bill to equalize grade between the Army and Navy.

Attached hereto will be found two lists, "A" and "B." List "A" shows, in the left-hand column, the present commissioned strength in the grades of major general and brigadier general in the Army, arranged according to rank in their respective grades. In the right-hand column will be found the same names arranged according to their rank when they are recommissioned in accordance with the terms of this bill. List "B" is the corresponding list for the Navy.

The bill will be best explained to members of the Senate Military Committee by inviting their attention to its several effects, as follows:

1. It abolishes the grade of brigadier general, a grade which is either nonexistent in modern armies or retained only for the purpose of conferring honorary rank. The corresponding grade of commodore in the Navy was abolished by act of Congress approved March 3, 1899.

2. It requires that all officers of our Army in the grade of brigadier general be recommissioned in the grade of major general, in their present relative order of rank, from the date of the approval of the act. The execution which the act will receive is indicated in list "A."

3. Following the naval precedent it grants to officers in the upper half of the grade of major general the pay of that grade. The effect will be to grant increase of pay to 10 brigadier generals, making a total of 20 major generals in the Army entitled to draw the pay of that grade. Attached list "B" shows that there are 21 rear admirals in the Navy at the present time drawing the pay of rear admiral.

4. It creates the ex-officio grade of general for the Chief of Staff. It creates the ex-officio grades of general and lieutenant general for the commanding generals of three territorial departments within the United States, and for the commanding generals of the troops in the Philippine Islands, Hawaii, and the Canal Zone, the selection of the three territorial departments within the United States and the designation of the particular commanding generals for these departments and for the troops in the Philippine Islands, Hawaii, and Panama being left to the discretion of the President. The President is authorized to give the rank of lieutenant general to one of the two general officers acting as Assistant Chiefs of Staff, but in that event the number of lieutenant generals to be assigned to territorial commands must be reduced from 3 to 2.

5. It reduces the pay of general from $13,500, as now fixed by law, to $10,000, and the pay of lieutenant general from $11,000 to $9,000, following the precedent of Navy legislation.

6. The proposed bill creates inequality in favor of the Army in one regard. The last sentence of concluding section 3 in the bill gives to officers of the Army, who are retired by operation of law while serving in the ex-officio grades, the right to retire with the rank and pay of said ex-officio grade, whereas under the naval statute Navy officers holding these ex officio grades, who are retired by operation of law while serving therein, are not entitled to retirement in said ex officio grades, but are limited to retirement in the grades shown by their permanent commissions.

JANUARY 16, 1917.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
House of Representatives (and Senate).

SIR: I am transmitting herewith for the consideration of your committee a draft of a bill which has for its object the equalization of rank in the higher grades between the Army and Navy. As you will recall, the appropriation bill for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, approved March 4, 1915, provided the grade of admiral for the commander in chief of the Atlantic Fleet and the commander in chief of the Pacific Fleet, and the commander in chief of the Asiatic Fleet, and for the second in command of each of these fleets the grade of vice admiral. The last appropriation bill for the Naval Establishment approved August 29, 1916, provides for a chief of naval operations, who, under the terms of the act, has also the rank and title of admiral.

The following table shows the present status in regard to rank in the higher grades of the Army and Navy and includes only officers of the line in each case:

ARMY.		NAVY.
0 generals	corresponding grade	4 admirals (temporary).
0 lieutenant generals	corresponding grade	3 vice admirals (temporary).
7 major generals	corresponding grade	21 rear admirals.
21 brigadier generals	corresponding grade	No corresponding grade in Navy.

Present authorized strength:

OFFICERS.
Army (the authorized strength given above for the Army includes the first increment of increase only. When the Army reorganization is completed, in 1920, its authorized strength will consist of 11,327 officers and 208,338 men)	7,141
Navy	3,000
ENLISTED MEN.
Army	137,214

It will be noted from the above that the highest grade now existing in the Army is that of major general, which is two grades below that of the grade of admiral, of which the Navy now has 4, and one grade below that of vice admiral, of which the Navy now has 3. In the grade of major general the Army has 7, and the Navy, in the corresponding grade of rear admiral, 21. In the grade of brigadier general the Army has 21, there being no corresponding grade in the Navy. This inequality of rank in the higher grades, accentuated by the recent legislation for the Navy referred to above, is due to the fact that Congress has, I think wisely, given the Navy the grades commensurate with the commands exercised, thus giving a modern organization, which corresponds to the other navies of the world, to the naval service, but has not as yet done so for the Army, the branch of the service committed to my charge.

The draft of the bill herewith places the officers of the Army in the two higher grades on identically the same status as to number, rank, and pay as in the Navy. This is to be effected by abolishing the grade of brigadier general, which corresponds to the former grade of commodore now abolished in the Navy, and transferring the present brigadier generals to the grade of major general. The grade of brigadier general has ceased to exist as a permanent grade in practically all the principal armies of the world. In the British Army it is sometimes conferred upon officers for local and temporary reasons, but is not a permanent grade. In the French Army "generals of brigade" and "generals of division" rank, respectively, with the major generals and lieutenant generals of other armies. As a rule, in foreign armies major generals command brigades (6,500 men), lieutenant generals command divisions (17,000 men), and generals command army corps (40,000 men).

It is proposed, following the present naval law, that the upper half of the new list of major generals receive the pay and allowances now allowed by law to major generals, and the lower half the pay and allowances now allowed by law to brigadier generals. To conform to the present naval law the Chief of Staff of the Army and three other generals are given the temporary rank of general and three the temporary rank of lieutenant general; the pay on the active list in each case to be the same as that for admiral and vice admiral in the Navy, to which these two grades correspond.

The draft of the bill herewith authorizes the President to assign the three generals and three lieutenant generals to command the three most important territorial commands in the United States or to command the land forces in the Philippine Islands, the Hawaiian Islands, or the Panama Canal Zone. As drafted, the law would assure an officer of the temporary grade of general or lieutenant general being in command of our three important over-sea garrisons. Provision is made that one of the general officers on the General Staff, while so serving, may be designated by the President in his discretion as one of the three lieutenant generals authorized in the act.

I wish to strongly emphasize that without legislation giving the Army equalization of rank in the higher grades with that of the Navy the branch of the Government of which I am in charge will be done an obvious injustice, the detrimental effect of which to the Army is too clear to require more than a statement. All the reasons which have been urged for the creation of these grades in the Navy so as to efficiently handle the units properly composing a command to be under the direction of such officers of the Navy are present in at least an equal degree in the Army. As Congress, after a full consideration of the subject, wisely decided on the desirability of giving the Navy these grades in order that it may be properly and efficiently officered, for similar reasons it should now provide similar grades for the Army.

The embarrassment which arises in either branch of the service when brought in contact with officers of foreign services of superior grade to any existing in our services is identical; but the constant embarrassment arising between the two services because of disparity of rank is too apparent to call for more than mention. If in all those joint matters in which the Army and Navy are concerned the Navy, by reason of the possession of the superior grade, is entitled to outrank the Army, the Army must perforce regard itself and be looked upon as a subordinate branch, and this is too inequitable a situation to be contemplated with equanimity.

I trust that the proposals herein discussed will meet with the favorable consideration of your committee and Congress.

Respectfully,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, may I add a word in connection with what the Senator said? Is it not a fact that it not only equalizes the rank for social and business intercourse, but it does equalize in some degree the rank according to the number of men composing the command?

At the time those letters were written there had not transpired circumstances that made war imminent. Now war is imminent, and there is almost the dead certainty that we are going to have very large bodies of men incorporated in the Army. In fact, the press is full of statements to this effect; and we have had directly from the War Department notices that men are going to be needed in numbers running into the hundreds of thousands, if not millions. Now, it is entirely inconsistent that we should have an officer whose rank is that controlling a division of only nine regiments where we are liable to have twenty times that in an army; so that there should be added to what the Secretary of War has said this great inequality in rank that will occur if we even organize these armies.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, I regret that the question asked by me has taken up so much of the valuable time of this body this afternoon. I am not posted on matters of this kind and assure you that my only object was to get information as to the purpose of the amendment. The explanation of the distinguished Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, is entirely satisfactory, so far as I am personally concerned, as to its object and purpose.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, before this matter goes over I want to make a brief statement. I agree with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] that this amendment is clearly subject to a point of order. It is general legislation.

Now, how is our Army composed? It is composed of battalions, regiments, brigades, and divisions. Every division, I take it under the plan of our Army now, is supposed to be composed of three brigades and each brigade of three regiments. Now it is proposed to put the commanders of brigades—of which there will be three in every division—on the same level, or give them the same rank, as the commander of a division.

Mr. WARREN. Oh, no, Mr. President; this amendment does not do that.

Mr. NELSON. It makes them major generals. You might as well go to work and make all the officers of a regiment colonels, instead of having lieutenant colonels and majors.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator allow me for a moment?

Mr. NELSON. I will yield in a minute. I hoped that when we had Army legislation here we would do something else than just to build up the rank and pay of officers. I yield now to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator was a Member of the Senate when the same thing was applied to the Navy. They are all rear admirals. Half of them are of the junior grade and half of the senior grade. It will be the same with the major generals.

Mr. NELSON. That is no argument at all. I always thought it was a great mistake that we abolished the rank of commodore in our Navy, Mr. President. No naval officers had a finer record in our old Navy than those who had merely the rank of commodore; and some of our brigadier generals in our Army during the civil War, and before that, in the Regular Army, did heroic service. I do not want to see the rank of brigadier general abolished, and I did not like to see the rank of commodore in the Navy abolished. We ought to have retained that rank, which was near and dear to the sailors of the old Navy; and I think it is a great mistake to leave out of our Army the rank of brigadier general as long as we have brigades in the Army. Let a brigadier general command a brigade and let a major general command a division; and then if you have an Army corps, if you want to go a step higher, have a lieutenant general in command of an Army corps. Then you will have a logical and fair order of rank in the Army.

It seems to me, as I said a moment ago, that it is as preposterous to establish this as to make the majors, colonels, and lieutenant colonels of a regiment all colonels. You might as well have every regimental officer a colonel.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. You might as well abolish everybody from captain to colonel and make your majors all colonels.

Mr. NELSON. Yes; make them all colonels. I concede that socially it would be a great thing, if we are to look at the social side, to have men designated as major generals. It will be an awfully nice thing to have every regimental officer called a colonel.

I remember that once in my early days, when I was a Member of the House, I went around looking for rooms, and I found out that if they found you were a Member of Congress they would always ask you for more money. I met a fine old lady that I called on who had rooms to let, and she wanted to know what my business was. I said I had a job up here at the Capitol. The old lady said: "But what is your rank?" "Why, I said, "It is plain 'Mr. NELSON.'" "Oh, but," says she, "in this country they are all colonels or judges; and surely you must be either a colonel or a judge." [Laughter.]

Now, the idea of having all our officers above the rank of a colonel nothing less than major generals, and wiping out the dear old title of brigadier general, seems to me preposterous and ridiculous; and we ought not to do it just because there is a little coterie in the War Department who have sent it up here to the committee. I will exonerate the chairman of the committee and also my good friend from Wyoming. I do not think they have introduced this amendment from malice prepense, as we say in court. It has been showered upon them; but for that reason we ought to relieve them from the responsibility. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I share the view of my honored friend from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] regarding the abolishment of the rank of commodore, but I desire to call his attention to the fact that, if it was to be abolished, it was well that it was done exactly when it was done—after imperishable glory had surrounded that title while it was worn in the midst of trial and difficulty by the late great Admiral Dewey.

As the Senator knows—for he and I helped confer the title of Admiral upon Commodore Dewey—he had won that title by his gallantry and heroism in Manila Bay. No social duties engaged his attention that fateful morning. I understand that it was impossible for him to get upon common ground with the German admiral, Von Dietrich, who, with his fleet, was very conspicuous in Manila Bay after Dewey won our victory; but they soon came to a very abrupt and excellent understanding, for it was reported by the late Admiral that his right to supervise the Manila situation was challenged by the German commander; that he finally got word to Admiral von Dietrich that he must not communicate with shore against the protests of a simple commodore of the American Navy, who had a much smaller fleet than the Germans in Manila Bay at that time. But it is said, and said truly—and I am willing the RECORD shall show it—that when the American commodore discovered that they did not propose to obey his injunction he got word to the German admiral, and said: "Admiral von Dietrich, I have forbidden any communication with shore, and that is binding upon you as it is upon every other foreigner in Manila Bay. My orders must be obeyed. You act very much as though you wanted war with the United States; and if you want it, by God, you may have it, and you may have it now."

The ringing words of Commodore Dewey left no doubt as to his intention to govern and control the situation in Manila Bay, which he did with such great thoroughness, such kindness and consideration and tolerance, such signal ability that his service will never be forgotten and his fame is forever enshrined in our hearts. When the word came to Washington that he had destroyed the Spanish fleet without the loss of a man or the loss of a ship I remember how it thrilled the American Nation. I am glad indeed that if the title of commodore was to pass into history it should pass into history in the glow of Dewey's achievements; and I will only add that when American patriots are defending their country they are always equal to their task. It is of little consequence what their title may be, if in their hearts they wear the impulses and the lofty aspirations of their countrymen. The country will forever cherish in the kindliest spirit the memory of their last commodore and one of their greatest admirals.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question before he sits down, if he will allow me.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly, if I can answer it. The Senator asks some pretty hard questions.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator referred to one incident in Admiral Dewey's life when he was simply a commodore. We have had something said here about the social side of it. Did the fact that he was a mere commodore affect him socially or prevent him from getting a good wife when he got home?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No, Mr. President; he was not there on any social errand. He was there to carry out a specific injunction from his Government; and right royally he did it, with everlasting credit to himself and to the American Navy.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I do not object to the postponement of the final consideration of this amendment; but inasmuch as it has been reached in regular course, I shall at this time outline my reasons for making, after the discussion shall have ended, the point of order against the proviso.

This amendment originated, as the chairman of the committee says, with the War Department, and was unquestionably prompted by the naval legislation to which the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] refers. That legislation owed its origin to the difference in rank between commanders of foreign navies and the officers commanding ours. It was asserted in support of that legislation that the difference in rank between commanders of foreign navies and our own was painfully and sometimes humiliatingly apparent when these commanders met, either for the exchange of formal ceremonies or in the discharge of social functions, and that we owed it to the officers of our Navy and to the dignity of the Navy itself to advance their commanders to such rank as would make them socially and according to the naval etiquette of the world the equals of those of foreign countries.

I am not at present disposed to comment, either by way of criticism or by way of condemnation, upon the motives underlying that legislation; but it is evident that once we begin upon legislation of that sort we must carry it to its logical conclusion, one of the steps in which consists of this proposed amendment.

I was present at the meeting of the committee when the Secretary of War appeared before it and urged the consideration of this provision. I made no comment at the time, but I gathered from the general statements made by the Secretary that there was at present a feeling of discontent in the Army because of inferiority from the social standpoint, as between the newly created rear admirals of the Navy and the officers of the Army as they are now provided for. As said by the Senator from Oregon, the Army is the older of the two branches, and representatives of the older branch objected to sitting at the foot of the table while the officers of the younger branch occupied the head. There is an old saying that "wherever MacGregor sits, there is the head of the table"; but it would seem that the principle does not apply when admiral and general meet; and the question of punctilio becomes so extreme and so critical as to demand a regeneration of the official staff of the Army, to the end that one general may not tag behind another admiral, but at least may march arm in arm with him whenever social occasions require.

As I say, I am not belittling that situation. I never had much patience with it myself. At the same time I am aware of the fact that these distinctions are of the utmost importance with many, and I respect as much as a man can their different point of view. But I do not believe, Mr. President, that we should remodel our Army staff of officers in an amendment to a general appropriation bill because of these conditions. There may be better ones; I hope there are, but I have not yet been able to perceive them.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator has not forgotten, has he, that those offices of general and lieutenant general were on our statute books for a great many years permanently?

Mr. THOMAS. I was coming to that.

Mr. WARREN. And they were done away with here at a time when legislation was directed in a certain way and to a certain purpose, but for a few years those offices have not existed. The idea now is to approach them only with reduced pay, merely a thousand dollars apiece and $2,000 apiece, respectively, and under special appointment for a special length of time.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if this amendment were a repetition of the old law, I do not know that I would object to it. The general and the lieutenant general are the most distinguished officers in our Army and the offices were created, and properly so, to be filled by men who had earned great distinction and who, consequently, were entitled to especial honors because of their services to their country. We never had but one general at a time, if my memory serves me aright, nor but one lieutenant general. Here with one fell swoop we propose to create a number of lieutenant generals and an officer who, by virtue of his position as Chief of Staff, occupies the rank of general.

Mr. President, this seems to me to be general legislation. I think we should re-create at this time the office of general; I think we should re-create the office of lieutenant general, and let our commanding officers aspire to them, let their ambition be aroused to obtain those great distinctions through the service they will render to their country, instead of creating by an amendment to an appropriation bill a line of officers of that grade, thus robbing these positions of that eminence and glory which have always and which always should surround them.

These are my present objections to this amendment. I do not think we have considered the matter fully, and yet I say that with some hesitation, because the condition of my health has made it impossible for me at this session to attend the meetings of the committee. It may be they have given it the utmost consideration, and their judgment naturally would, therefore, be better than mine; but as far as my information went during the last Congress when this subject was before the committee I gathered the conclusion that social rather than military influences were behind it, to the end that there should be a common level in the etiquette of the profession and in social circles between those representing the two branches of the service.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield with pleasure to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I call the Senator's attention to the language at the top of page 17. The Senator speaks of only one general being created. The act provides for four, I will say to the Senator; one the Chief of Staff of the Army and one for the three departments—the Philippines, the Hawaiian Islands, and the Panama Canal Zone.

Mr. THOMAS. I thank the Senator for calling my attention to it. I was misled for the moment by the recital regarding the Chief of the General Staff. That fact emphasizes the criticism which I have made of the bill. It is not proposed that we shall have one great military position standing solitary above the mass filled by a man whom a grateful country in recognition of his services has placed there, but we propose to create four and fill them all by a scheme of general legislation attached to an appropriation bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, while it may not be important, I think the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] failed to read that there shall not be more than three generals at any one time and there shall not be more than three lieutenant generals at any one time.

Mr. THOMAS. Not more than three, except that while so serving there shall have the rank of general not more than three and not more than three the rank of lieutenant general.

It would seem to be sufficiently broad there to authorize the President to increase that number.

Mr. WARREN. Under the law the President might not appoint any, and he might appoint only two; but there is a restriction that there shall be not more than three of each rank.

Mr. McKELLAR addressed the Chair.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. THOMAS. I think the Senator from Tennessee rose first, and I yield to him.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the Senator from Wyoming is mistaken. Beginning in line 23, on page 16, it is provided—

> That the Chief of Staff while so serving shall have the rank of general and take precedence over all other officers of the Army; and of the general officers commanding the three territorial departments in the United States which may be designated by the President or commanding the land forces in the Philippines, Hawaiian Islands, and Panama Canal Zone not more than three, in the discretion of the President, shall while so serving have the rank of general and not more than three the rank of lieutenant general.

In other words, there shall be three under these different departments and a Chief of Staff, making four.

Mr. WARREN. There is nothing obligatory about the fourth. We have had a Chief of Staff at times a brigadier general who had command of officers of higher rank. I think the restriction is complete that there shall be not more than three of each.

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. It is perfectly clear to my mind that this amendment is general legislation subject to a point of order. That is the opinion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] and it is the opinion of other Senators. I think if the amendment goes in at all it must go in by a kind of general consent. That being the case, it having been suggested that the amendment be laid over and we proceed with the rest of the bill, I think we ought to do that without consuming time by prolonging this debate. I am not referring to the remarks of the Senator who is on the floor, but it has taken up nearly all the afternoon. For myself, and I think others are in the same condition, I want to look into this amendment and understand more about it. I am not getting much light here on the floor. I want to know whether there is anything really back of this amendment, and I suggest that when the Senator from Colorado has concluded his remarks we proceed with the rest of the bill and get along with it.

I hope the Senator does not misapprehend what I am saying. I am simply suggesting that as this matter has to go over anyway we need not debate it at length.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have no intention of debating the proposal. I may not be here when the matter comes up again to-morrow, and that must be my excuse for speaking upon it at all.

I have but one other reflection to make, which is that if the argument the Senator made in defense of the abolition of brigadier generals is sound, then it might with perfect consistency be applied to the line of majors general. That could be wiped out also. We can make them all generals and lieutenant generals and let the old ranks go. Then we can abolish the vice and the rear admiral in the Navy and substitute for them admirals without any qualifying adjective. This equalizes ranks and removes all cause of social discontent. If this feature of war legislation be important, let us make it effective.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The consideration of the amendment will be postponed.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 8, after the word "Corps," to strike out "$1,500,000" and insert "$3,000,000," so as to make the clause read:

Pay of members of Officers' Reserve Corps, $3,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 10, after the word "corps," to strike out "$2,500,000" and insert "$3,000,000," so as to make the clause read:

Pay of officers, National Guard, including staff corps, $3,000,000: Provided, That so much of this appropriation as may be necessary for the purpose shall be available to pay inspectors and assistant inspectors of small-arms practice of the Organized Militia and National Guard who responded to the call of the President of June 18, 1916, the pay and allowances appropriate to their grade from the dates they would have been entitled to pay had their services been authorized to the dates on which they were mustered out or their services were otherwise terminated; and the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, directed to allow credit for any such payments which have heretofore been made to such officers from the appropriation from which made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Enlisted men of the line," on page 19, line 2, after the word "recruits," to strike out "$27,000,000" and insert "$29,000,000," so as to make the clause read:

For pay of enlisted men of all grades, including recruits, $29,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 20, to insert:

Provided, That hereafter one of the enlisted men at each main recruiting station who has been detached for duty at such station under the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 2, 1901, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, have the rank, pay, and allowances of a first sergeant of Infantry.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 4, after the word "line," to strike out "$3,000,000" and insert "$3,500,000," so as to make the clause read:

Additional pay for length of service of enlisted men of the line, $3,500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 5, after the word "Reserve," to strike out "$290,000" and insert "$500,000," so as to make the clause read:

Pay of enlisted men of the Regular Army Reserve, $500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Quartermaster Corps," on page 20, line 14, after the word "men," to strike out "$2,000,000" and insert "$2,437,272: Provided, That on and after July 1, 1917, the monthly pay of quartermaster sergeants, Quartermaster Corps, shall be $50," so as to make the clause read:

Pay of enlisted men, $2,437,272: Provided, That on and after July 1, 1917, the monthly pay of quartermaster sergeants, Quartermaster Corps, shall be $50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Signal Corps," on page 20, line 20, after the word "men," to strike out "$900,000" and insert "$1,071,144," so as to make the clause read:

Pay of enlisted men, $1,071,144.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 21, after the word "service," to strike out "$96,000" and insert "$196,480.08," so as to make the clause read:

Additional pay for length of service, $196,480.08.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 9, after the word "light," to strike out "$65,000" and insert "$53,742," so as to make the clause read:

For commutation of quarters and of heat and light, $53,742.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 13, after "$70,000," to insert: "Provided, That the allowances authorized by act of August 29, 1916, for 200 field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, shall be effective from date of approval of said act for the 200 clerks appointed who were eligible on August 29, 1916," so as to make the clause read:

For commutation of quarters and of heat and light for field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, $70,000: Provided, That the allowances authorized by act of August 29, 1916, for 200 field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, shall be effective from date of approval of said act for the 200 clerks appointed who were eligible on August 29, 1916.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the Senator from Oregon explain the proviso.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It simply provides for pay from the date of the approval of the act. Under the law as it is they only receive pay from the date of appointment instead of the date the act takes effect.

Mr. SMOOT. In other words, if we adopt the proviso, then they receive the additional pay from the time of the passage of the act rather than from the time of their appointment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes; from the date of the approval of the act.

Mr. REED. I should like to inquire what the answer of the chairman of the committee was. I could not hear it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Under the act of August 29, 1916, which placed these men on the list that is referred to in the provision just read, they received their pay from the date of appointment. This makes it date from the date of the approval of the act, which antedates a little—not a great deal in some instances—the date of the approval of the act.

Mr. REED. But is that the only change?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is practically the only change.

Mr. REED. Then I am going to object. It seems to me that there is a good deal more anxiety displayed here to get a few dollars additional pay than there is anything else.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I call the Senator's attention to the language of the act, which seems to have contemplated that this should be done anyhow, but it was construed differently.

The act of Congress approved August 29, 1916, contains the proviso that—

Hereafter not to exceed 200 clerks, Quartermaster Corps, who shall have had 12 years of service, at least 3 years of which shall have been on detached duty away from permanent station, or on duty beyond the continental limits of the United States, or both, shall be known as field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, and shall receive the same allowances, except retirement, as heretofore allowed by law to pay clerks, Quartermaster Corps, and shall be subject to the Rules and Articles of War.

It seems to have contemplated that they should have their pay from the date of the approval of the act.

Mr. REED. I ask that the amendment may go over until to-morrow, to be taken up in connection with the other one that was passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. In this connection, in order that the RECORD may show upon what the amendment is based, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Quartermaster General giving the reasons for the change.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE QUARTERMASTER GENERAL OF THE ARMY,
Washington, February 6, 1917.

From: Quartermaster General.
To: Quartermasters.
Subject: Payment of allowances to field clerks, Quartermaster Corps.

1. Referring to decision No. 16-020, November 7, 1916, of the Judge Advocate General of the Army, copy of which was furnished your office under date of November 24, 1916, in which it was held that field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, were entitled to the prescribed allowances from August 29, 1916, date of approval of the act authorizing same, you are advised that the Comptroller of the Treasury, under date of January 26, 1917, has held that field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, are entitled to the prescribed allowances only from date of acceptance of such appointment. The Judge Advocate General advises this office, under date of February 3, 1917, that the comptroller's decision will be published in the Bulletin of the Digest of Opinions of the Judge Advocate General's Office for February, 1917.

2. You will be governed accordingly.

By authority of the Quartermaster General.

A. E. SAXTON,
Major, Quartermaster Corps.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE QUARTERMASTER GENERAL OF THE ARMY,
Washington, October 23, 1916.

From: Quartermaster General.
To: The Adjutant General of the Army.
Subject: Decision requested.

1. The act of August 29, 1916 (Public, No. 242), making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year 1917, provides that: "* * * Hereafter not to exceed 200 clerks, Quartermaster Corps, who shall have had 12 years of service, at least 3 years of which shall have been on detached duty away from permanent station, or on duty beyond the continental limits of the United States, or both, shall be known as field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, and shall receive the same allowances, except retirement, as heretofore allowed by law to pay clerks, Quartermaster Corps, and shall be subject to the Rules and Articles of War. * * *"

Regulations carrying this provision into effect provide that instruments of appointment shall be issued by the Secretary of War to each individual coming within the terms of the act. It is recommended that the opinion of the Judge Advocate General be obtained whether field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, are entitled to allowances (a) from date of approval of act, August 29, 1916, or (b) from date of appointment by the Secretary of War.

HENRY G. SHARPE,
Quartermaster General.

[First indorsement.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE ADJUTANT GENERAL,
October 26, 1916.

To the JUDGE ADVOCATE GENERAL:

1. With request for opinion as recommended herein.

2. The Army appropriation act approved August 29, 1916, provides that:

"Hereafter headquarters clerks shall be known as Army field clerks and shall receive pay at the rates herein provided, and after 12 years of service, at least 3 years of which shall have been on detached duty away from permanent station, or on duty beyond the continental limits of the United States, or both, shall receive the same allowances, except retirement, as heretofore allowed by law to pay clerks, Quartermaster Corps, and shall be subject to the Rules and Articles of War."

Inasmuch as Army field clerks are, after the necessary service, entitled to the same allowances as are granted field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, by the same act, an expression of opinion is desired as to whether or not the Army field clerks are entitled to the allowances (a) from the date of the approval of the act, August 29, 1916, or (b) from the date that the Secretary of War approves the application of the clerk who has the necessary service for such allowances.

By order of the Secretary of War.

H. P. MCCAIN,
The Adjutant General.

[Second indorsement.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
JUDGE ADVOCATE GENERAL'S OFFICE,
November 7, 1916.

To THE ADJUTANT GENERAL:

1. Returned. The opinion of this office is desired as to whether or not the allowances provided for in the act making appropriations for the support of the Army approved August 29, 1916, to the field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, and the Army field clerks are (a) to date from the approval of the act, or (b) from the date the Secretary of War approves the application of the clerk who has the necessary service for such allowances.

2. The act, supra, provides that "hereafter headquarters clerks shall be known as Army field clerks and shall receive pay at the rates herein provided, and after 12 years of service, at least 3 years of which shall have been on detached duty away from permanent station, or on duty beyond the continental limits of the United States, or both, shall receive the same allowances, except retirement, as heretofore allowed by law to pay clerks, Quartermaster Corps, and shall be subject to the rules and articles of war."

The act further provides that "hereafter not to exceed 200 clerks, Quartermaster Corps, who shall have had 12 years service, at least 3 years of which shall have been on detached duty away from permanent station, or on duty beyond the continental limits of the United States, or both, shall be known as field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, and shall receive the same allowances, except retirement, as heretofore allowed by law to pay clerks, Quartermaster Corps."

3. The foregoing provisions are self-operative, in that they definitely designate the positions and fix the pay and allowances of headquarters clerks and the field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, from the date of the approval of the act on August 29, 1916, by providing that "hereafter headquarters clerks shall be known as Army field clerks and shall receive pay at the rates herein provided," etc., and that the 200 field clerks, Quartermaster Corps "hereafter * * * shall be known as field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, and shall receive the same allowances, except retirement, as heretofore allowed by law to pay clerks."

No administrative action is prescribed by the statute as a condition precedent to the right of headquarters clerks to receive the prescribed pay and allowances, and the only administrative action required in the case of the 200 field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, is to determine whether the clerks have had the required service to give them the prescribed designation and compensation, it appearing that the number of qualified clerks is not in excess of the number as limited in the statute. Reading the two provisions together, I think it is clear that it was the intent of Congress to fix the status, pay, and allowances of the said clerks from the date of the approval of the act. Indeed, if Congress had not so intended, I think that instead of providing that "hereafter" the clerks "shall be known," etc., it would have made the usual provision that the Secretary of War may appoint them to the positions prescribed. The provisions merely change the designation and compensation of the offices held by the clerks, and no new appointments are necessary to give effect to the statute. It is therefore the opinion of this office that the 200 field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, and the Army field clerks are entitled to the prescribed pay and allowances from the date of the approval of the statute authorizing the same.

E. H. CROWDER,
Judge Advocate General.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
November 11, 1916.

To the SECRETARY OF WAR:

Recommending approval of the opinion of the Judge Advocate General, expressed in the last paragraph of the preceding indorsement hereon.

H. P. MCCAIN,
The Adjutant General.

H. P. MCCAIN,
The Adjutant General.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "General Staff Corps," on page 23, line 2, after "$132,600," to insert "Provided, That the first paragraph of section 5 of the national-defense act approved June 3, 1916, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows: 'SEC. 5. The General Staff Corps: The General Staff Corps shall consist of one Chief of Staff, who shall be a general officer of the line and who shall take rank and precedence over all other officers of the Army, 2 assistants to the Chief of Staff, who shall be general officers of the line, one of whom shall be the president of the Army War College; 10 colonels; 12 lieutenant colonels; 32 majors; and 34 captains, to be detailed from corresponding grades in the Army as in this section hereinafter provided. All officers detailed in the General Staff Corps shall be detailed therein for a period of four years, unless sooner relieved. While serving in the General Staff Corps, officers may be temporarily assigned to duty with any branch of the Army. Upon being relieved from duty in the General Staff Corps, officers shall return to the branch of the Army in which they hold permanent commissions, and no officer shall be eligible to a further detail in the General Staff Corps until he shall have served two years with the branch of the Army in which commissioned, except in time of actual or threatened hostilities. Section 27 of the act of Congress approved February 2, 1901, shall apply to each position vacated by officers below the grade of general officer detailed in the General Staff Corps,'" so as to make the clause read:

For pay of officers of the General Staff Corps, $132,600: Provided, That the first paragraph of section 5 of the national-defense act approved June 3, 1916, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows: "SEC. 5. The General Staff Corps: The General Staff Corps shall consist of one Chief of Staff," etc.

Mr. OWEN. I should like to have the chairman of the committee make an explanation of the change the amendment makes in existing law.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, in the reorganization the number of the General Staff was recommended to be quite largely increased over the number that constituted the General Staff under the old act. In conferences the differences which grew out of the discussions between the conferees of the House and Senate led to a reduction of the General Staff, so that it is claimed now by the Secretary of War that the General Staff is unable to keep up with the work which has been assigned to it or the work which they are necessarily required to perform and that in the particular crisis which confronts us now it ought to be increased.

I have not the act before me, but will have it in a few moments, to show what the General Staff consists of now under the law and the proposed increase. I think myself that it ought to be increased. It is difficult for them to do the work, and it will be more difficult as the Army is increased and as the dangers of war become more threatening.

Mr. OWEN. I observe that it makes provision for one Chief of Staff who shall be a general officer of the line, two assistants who shall be general officers, and none of the balance of those serving in this position are permitted to be members. I do not understand just why that is done. I had an idea that the General Staff in directing the affairs of the Army would naturally consist of the most experienced men we have. Is there any particular point in that?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. They are detailed from different branches of the service. It does not necessarily follow because a man is detailed for staff duty that he shall have a very high rank. Captains are assigned to the General Staff, majors are assigned to the General Staff, and other officers are detailed for the same duty.

Mr. OWEN. It would seem that the generals, however, are excluded.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If the Senator will look at section 5 of the national-defense act of June 3, 1916, he will see how these officers are assigned from the different branches of the service. If the Senator will allow me, I will just read that provision.

Mr. OWEN. I shall be pleased to hear it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (reading)—

The General Staff Corps shall consist of 1 Chief of Staff, detailed in time of peace from major generals of the line; 2 assistants to the Chief of Staff, who shall be general officers of the line, 1 of whom, not above the grade of brigadier general, shall be the president of the Army War College; 10 colonels; 10 lieutenant colonels; 15 majors; and 17 captains, to be detailed from corresponding grades in the Army as in this section hereinafter provided. All officers detailed in the General Staff Corps shall be detailed therein for periods of four years unless sooner relieved.

So the Senator will see they are detailed from men of different rank in the different branches of the service.

Mr. OWEN. I do see that, but I do not see what the point is in excluding from the General Staff men who are generals. Why should a brigadier general be excluded from the General Staff?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. He is not excluded.

Mr. OWEN. It would seem as if he were, because the inclusion of the one would exclude the other.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. In other words, the Senator feels that none but generals should be detailed for staff duty.

Mr. OWEN. Not at all. I only called attention to the fact that generals are excluded.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. By inclusion possibly that may be true, but why put all the generals on duty here in Washington when they might be needed elsewhere?

Mr. OWEN. I have made no such suggestion as that.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It would necessarily follow, if generals were to be appointed, that you would take them from the commands where they are now.

Mr. OWEN. It would necessarily follow from this language that the generals are excluded. That is what I was calling the attention of the chairman to. I do not see the point of excluding generals of necessity. It might not be advantageous to put them on, but if it should prove to be so I do not think they ought to be excluded by the law.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I can not say to the Senator why that policy has been adopted, but the Senator will see that men of lower and different grades are given an opportunity to serve with the General Staff.

Mr. OWEN. I think that is entirely commendable. I am not making any point about that—making any objection to that. What I am objecting to is that generals are excluded from the General Staff.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. And excluding brigadier generals?

Mr. OWEN. Yes; or anyone above the rank of colonel.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is true, but if the Senator will suggest an amendment the Senate will vote on it. I think they ought to be selected just as they are, and that is along the line of the details which have been made in the past.

Mr. REED. This part of the bill appears on page 23 relating to the Staff Corps, and the Chief of Staff is intimately connected with the amendment which was just discussed, which provides for the abolition of brigadier generals, and so forth. I think the two ought to be considered together. I suggest that the amendment lie over. Indeed, I thought the amendment had been put over.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. This particular amendment?

Mr. REED. Yes. I suggest that it go over. We can get along much faster if we take these particular matters up together.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

Mr. OWEN. In connection with the organization of the General Staff under the practice of the War Department they have a way of making reports from the General Staff in the name of the General Staff without any responsibility attaching to a particular individual, so that no one knows who it is on the General Staff who makes the recommendation. I think it is a bad practice. I may be mistaken about it. I wanted to ask the chairman of the committee if he knew that to be the practice; and if so, why that was done?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not know of any such practice as that. It seems to me it entails a very grave charge against the General Staff to suggest two or three men or any number of men on it make a report which comes to the authorities as the recommendation of the General Staff. I assume the rule to be—and if the Senator knows to the contrary he ought to disclose it—that whenever the General Staff makes a report or advocates a policy it is in fact what it purports to be, the recommendation of the whole body.

Mr. OWEN. I think the recommendation ought to be made upon the authority of those who make it, and there ought to be some kind of record, either public or within the archives of the body itself, which should be available upon request.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Does the Senator charge that that is not true now?

Mr. OWEN. I make no charge about it. I only express what I understand to be the fact. I am making an inquiry about it. I do not pretend to be very well informed upon the question.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think the Senator ought to inform himself about it.

Mr. OWEN. I am doing that now, from the chairman of the committee.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have assumed all the time that these men discharged their duties under their oath as the law contemplated they should act, and that whenever the General Staff acted it acted as a body, not as individuals.

Mr. OWEN. Will the Senator state whether, when a recommendation is made by the General Staff, it is on the responsibility of some particular members of the General Staff who recommend it?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I understand the whole General Staff to coincide with the views of any particular members of the General Staff when action is taken. In other words, if any particular work is assigned to one or more of the members of the General Staff and a report is made to them, it would be made to the General Staff and the consensus of opinion, as a whole, would be the expression of the General Staff, although two or three only might have done the work.

Mr. OWEN. When the Senate of the United States acts upon a very important matter it is a very common practice and a very wise practice, we think, that, as to those who are responsible for the affirmative action of this body and those who take the contrary view, there should be a record made of their attitude, so that the country may know who is responsible, if any mistakes are made.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I assume that they do keep a record. Of course, it may be a violent assumption. A committee of the Senate makes a report on an important piece of legislation and the Senate acts on it, and while they may have had individually no part in the preparation of the act itself it becomes the act of the whole Senate as a body. I assume that is the way it is done in the General Staff, that particular parts of work are assigned to members of the staff and they report the result of their work to the General Staff.

Mr. OWEN. I only rose for the purpose of making an inquiry with regard to it. I do not know myself, but I have been informed that the practice has been to merely make reports from the General Staff and the inquiry ends there, but of the reports of the General Staff, I think there ought to be a record made showing the responsibility of those who take any particular action. I would not like to have the General Staff by a narrow margin make some very important suggestion against the will of a large minority there without knowing who is responsible for it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am inclined to agree with the Senator. I have assumed, although I do not know, that the whole of the General Staff acted on these important matters. I shall undertake to ascertain by inquiry from the Secretary of War what the rule is.

Mr. OWEN. I should like to know what the rule is. In the meantime this matter goes over, I take it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has been passed over.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Medical Department," on page 25, line 16, after "(female)," to strike out "$141,000" and insert "$160,000," so as to make the clause read:

Nurses (female), $160,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Judge Advocate General's Department," on page 25, line 23, after the word "codification," to strike out "herein" and insert "heretofore," so as to make the clause read:

For paying the expenses of clerical hire and printing and other expenses incident to the making of the revision and codification heretofore directed, not to exceed $5,000, to be expended upon certificates of the Secretary of War that the expenditures were necessary therefor, of the military laws of the United States, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Signal Corps," on page 26, line 2, after the words "Signal Corps," to strike out "$500,000" and insert "$589,000," so as to make the clause read:

For pay of officers of the Signal Corps, $589,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Retired officers," on page 26, after line 16, to insert:

Provided further, That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized to appoint Brig. Gen. Chambers McKibbin, of the United States Army, retired, to the position and rank of major general on the retired list.

Mr. REED. I suggest to the Senator that the entire amendment be read, and then I desire to make an inquiry about it. Let the other part of the amendment be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 26, after line 21, the committee reports to insert:

Provided further, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to advance to the grade of major general, United States Army, retired, any brigadier general on the retired list who served in the United States Army not less than five years prior to October 1, 1861; who commanded not less than a regiment in the Civil War; who served on the active list of the Army after the Civil War and during the War with Spain, not less than 35 years; and who attained the grade of not less than colonel in the United States Army before retirement.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say to the Senator that that part of it applies to one person.

Mr. REED. To whom?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Gen. Scully. There is only one man in the Army to whom it will apply.

Mr. WATSON. To whom?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Gen. Scully. He is an old gentleman. If the Senator will permit me, I will read his record.

Gen. Scully entered the United States Army when a boy of 18, and served as an enlisted soldier from September, 1856, to September, 1861, in Light Battery K, First United States Artillery, and was gunner of one of the pieces that fired the salute at the inauguration of President James Buchanan. He served on the Rio Grande (Texas) frontier, fighting Comanche Indians and Mexican bandits.

Then it gives his whole record as a soldier in the Civil War. The old gentleman is in very feeble health, and his retired pay, I am advised, is not sufficient to take care of him.

Mr. REED. What is his retired pay?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That of a brigadier general, it is $4,000 a year.

Mr. REED. That is not sufficient to take care of him?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. So I understand.

Mr. REED. Is he under any special expense on account of physical disability?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have heard that he is. I do not know the old gentleman myself, but Senator Catron took this matter up and satisfied himself about it, and before he went out of the Senate he suggested the amendment to the bill. I have heard from members of his family, however, that that is the old gentleman's condition. I know that the amendment is subject to a point of order, but such amendments have been placed on the Army appropriation bill a number of times where the men were feeble and old men and where they had a long record of service rendered to the United States.

Mr. REED. Let me inquire in regard to the clause preceding it, in which the name of the beneficiary is frankly stated, Gen. James McKibben.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have his record here, too. I ask that the record of both these officers be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SYNOPSIS OF THE MILITARY HISTORY OF BRIG. GEN. J. W. SCULLY, UNITED STATES ARMY, RETIRED.

Gen. Scully entered the United States Army when a boy of 18 and served as an enlisted soldier from September, 1856, to September, 1861, in Light Battery K, First United States Artillery; and was gunner of one of the pieces that fired the salute at the inauguration of President James Buchanan. He served on the Rio Grande (Tex.) frontier, fighting Comanche Indians and Mexican bandits—Cortina, Vidauri, Caravajal, etc.

In 1859 Sergt. Scully was detailed with 20 soldiers of his battery to accompany Capt. Burleson, of the Texas Rangers (father of the present Postmaster General), in pursuit of a band of Indians who ran off 150 head of horses from the Nueces River. This command started from Fort Clark, Tex., following the trail in the direction of the Devils River for seven days, when their water supply became exhausted. The Indians had driven their horses through the water holes, thereby rendering them unfit for use; so a retreat was ordered, and after two days' march the men were unable to proceed further and laid down to perish. Sergt. Scully took the two strongest men of his detachment—Private Barrett and Ebey—gathered up all the canteens, and started for the Devils River. They rode all night, reaching a branch of that stream at daylight next morning. After resting an hour, they filled the canteens, started back, and reached the command just in time to save the lives of 60 men. This should be found in the records of Battery K, First Artillery.

Sergt. Scully was honorably discharged from the United States Army on account of expiration of term of enlistment, at Key West, Fla., September 20, 1861, and immediately accompanied Capt. Alvan C. Gillem, acting quartermaster, as clerk, and reported to Gen. George H. Thomas at Somerset, Ky., and on account of his military experience was used by that general as aid-de-camp in the campaign that terminated with the battle of Mill Spring, Ky.; was honorably mentioned by Gen. Thomas and afterwards given the brevet of major in the Army for his conduct in that battle. (See records.) Mr. Scully also served in the same capacity for Gen. D. C. Buell in the Battle of Shiloh and received the brevet of lieutenant colonel, United States Army, for same. He also received the brevet of colonel, United States Army, for gallant and meritorious services in the Battle of Nashville.

On the 14th of July, 1862, Mr. Scully was appointed a first lieutenant in the First Middle Tennessee Infantry Volunteers; was promoted to lieutenant colonel of same regiment August 21, 1863, and to colonel June 6, 1864. He was mustered out with his regiment on May 25, 1865.

In October, 1863, Gen. Scully, then lieutenant colonel of the First Middle Tennessee Infantry, commanded his own regiment and parts of three Cavalry regiments (virtually a brigade) and defeated the Confederate general, W. S. Hawkins, at Centerville, Hickman County, Tenn. (See series 1, p. 92, vol. 31, pt. 11, Rebellion Records.)

Gen. Scully was appointed captain in the Quartermaster Department on September 25, 1865, and served at Natchez and Vicksburg, Miss., on "reconstruction" duty and adjusting claims of citizens for cotton and other property taken or destroyed by the Army.

In 1868–1871 he rebuilt Ringgold Barracks, on the Rio Grande, Tex.

In 1872 Gen. Scully, as quartermaster, selected the terminus of the Northern Pacific Railroad with a view to the supplying of the military posts on the upper Missouri River and thereby establishing the site of the city of Bismarck, N. Dak. He also fitted out part of the Custer expedition.

In 1880–1882 Gen. Scully built the post of Fort Thomas, on the Gila River, near the San Carlos Indian Agency, Arizona Territory. While on this duty the Chiricahua Indians, under their chiefs, Loco, Ju, and Geronimo, left the reservation, killed the chief of police, Sterling, and raided several ranches, killing women and children. Col. Scully armed the ranchers and other civilians at and in the vicinity of the post and held off the hostiles for several days, until succor arrived from other posts. For this he was highly praised by both the press and the people of the Territory of Arizona.

Gen. Scully served two tours of duty at New Orleans, La., and during the War with Spain he there fitted out Gen. Shafter's expedition. He chartered all the ships and made them fit for the accommodation of troops, etc., and on account of his popularity in that city he was able to secure the very best of everything for the comfort of the command. For this he was thanked and highly complimented by the Quartermaster General of the Army.

On the 1st of November, 1900, Gen. Scully was retired from active service, and he had up to that date served altogether 42 years 11 months and 16 days. This does not include the Mill Spring or Shiloh campaigns, which were recognized and for which he received brevets.

GEN. M'KIBBIN'S SERVICE.

Gen. McKibbin's service, in brief, has been as follows:

Private, general service, September 22, 1862; discharged, September 24, 1862; second lieutenant, Fourteenth Infantry, September 22, 1862; first lieutenant, June 10, 1864; transferred to Thirty-second Infantry, September 21, 1866; captain, Thirty-fifth Infantry, July 28, 1866; transferred to Fifteenth Infantry, August 12, 1869; major, Twenty-fifth Infantry, April 25, 1892; lieutenant colonel, Twenty-first Infantry, May 1, 1896; brigadier general, Volunteers, July 8, 1898; honorably discharged, May 12, 1899; colonel Twelfth Infantry, April 1, 1899; transferred to Twenty-fourth Infantry, August 12, 1901; brigadier general, United States Army, October 2, 1902; retired, October 3, 1902

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say that sometimes it has been customary simply to name the beneficiary and in other cases it has been the custom to describe a record which will fit no other man in the United States Army. Why it has been done I do not know, but both methods have been adopted. However, the Senator will find that the description where Gen. Scully's name is not inserted would not fit any other man in the Army.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a word. On several occasions I objected to provisions of this kind. I think whenever we are going to advance any officer in the Army or in the Navy, no matter what his position is, whether he is on the retired list or otherwise, we ought to state just what the legislation is for and for whose benefit it is passed. I know one case where the officer's name was mentioned and it failed in the Senate several times. The Senate expressed itself upon the matter on more than one occasion and positively refused to pass the legislation.

Then, in an appropriation bill there was a description similar to this, which fitted one man only. Nobody for a time knew who it was. The bill passed and became a law. I have no doubt if the question had been presented, naming the officer, that the Senate would not have passed the bill. Since that occurrence I have objected to any such provision in any appropriation bill without naming the person involved. I think that is the best policy. If the Senator intends to force this matter to a vote, I should like to see the amendment so worded that we would know just what it means and precisely to whom it applies.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not wish to see Congress deal niggardly with men who have served the country. If I can be satisfied that there is a special reason why these men can not live on $4,000 a year, I shall offer no objection to the provision in the bill. The sum of $4,000 a year is a pretty good stipend for a man after he has ceased to render any service.

Mr. WARREN and Mr. SMOOT. It is $4,500 a year.

Mr. REED. It is $4,500 a year. I thank the Senators for correcting me.

It might be that some man, having rendered distinguished services to his country, was so afflicted that it would be necessary to surround him with attendants or to expend large sums for doctors' bill, nurse hire, and so forth, and that Congress ought under those circumstances to increase the pension—for that is what it amounts to; it is in fact a pension, although not so designated—but without that information I am going to object to all the provisions contained in the bill on pages 26 and 27; from line 17, on page 26, to line 6, on page 27.

Mr. President, we might as well face the matter now. We are entering upon a war, the end of which no man can safely prophesy. It may be a war that will tax us but lightly; it may, unhappily, be a war that will call upon every resource of the country, which will demand from us the most rigid economy. Our Army and our Navy to-day cost more in proportion to size than does the army or the navy of any other country in the world. They not only cost more, but they cost so much more that the proportions are astounding.

I would rather vote to increase the pay of the privates and the pensions of privates who might be injured in the coming conflict than to increase the compensation of men who already receive $4,500 a year, and who have retired from active service. I think this is a time to begin exercising some care. Unless the chairman of the committee can state to the Senate that there are special reasons of the nature which I have indicated for such action, I shall have to raise a point of order against these two paragraphs.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I desire to say just a word with regard to the amendment beginning on line 22, on page 26. The Senator from Missouri has stated that unless there is some special reason which is in the mind of the chairman of the committee why this one officer should have this privilege granted here, he would object. I go further and say that unless the officer's name is mentioned in this provision I shall object to it.

It has come to my notice several times that friends of officers who have been court-martialed have come to Congress; have asked for special favors; and have had their bills framed in such a way that they might apply to a half dozen or more officers. If any one of these officers has in any way been improperly discriminated against or ought to have some special favor bestowed upon him, he ought not to be ashamed to have his name appear here in the bill itself. I think it is a very wrong practice to permit legislation of this character to go through when it is framed as this is.

I have in mind now one officer who was court-martialed. He is now on the retired list. He seeks to have his grade advanced to that of general. When the matter was first presented to me, I refused to even present the bill until it was modified so as to contain his name. I do not refer to this because I think the officer is asking something to which he is not entitled; but I certainly do know that, if he is entitled to it, his name ought to appear in the legislation.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I am somewhat embarrassed by lack of definite information upon the subject to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate; but, nevertheless, I feel it my duty, so far as I am informed, and because of the peculiar relation I bear to a portion of the amendment, to make a brief statement. I am particularly interested in the first portion of the amendment, that part in which it is proposed to authorize the President to confer the rank of major general upon Brig. Gen. Chambers McKibbin. This portion of the amendment is not subject to the objection raised by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], and also by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] that the proposed beneficiary's name is not mentioned in the bill.

I only learned to-day of the fact that such an amendment had been proposed. It had been proposed by my predecessor, Senator Oliver, at the last session and was carried in the bill as then reported. I was asked to-day particularly to attend and see to it that this matter was properly presented to the consideration of the Senate if any objection should be raised.

All that I know of Gen. McKibbin personally is that he has since my childhood been recognized in Pennsylvania as one of its most gallant officers during the Civil War. I have enough of his record here before me to justify me in saying to the Senate that Gen. McKibbin went into the Army as a private in 1862; that he served next as a second lieutenant, then as a first lieutenant, then as a captain, then as a major, then as a lieutenant colonel, then as a colonel, and was retired as a brigadier general.

Whether there are any peculiar hardships in his case, I can not now say. As to the condition of his health or of his means of livelihood I know nothing. I do think, however, Mr. President, standing, as we are, upon the threshold of war, it is a time, in worthy cases, that the young men and younger officers who must conduct this war should be reminded that there is such a thing as the gratitude of Republics, not to withhold from those who have rendered long and faithful service—the service of the officer concerning whom I am now speaking has been 40 years—the bounty of Congress in recognition of such services rendered in the past.

Mr. President, in order that I may be able to inform myself and be able to acquaint the Senate if there are any peculiar reasons in this case that would address themselves to your discretion I shall ask that the amendment go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will go over.

Mr. REED. I will withhold the point of order which I intended making so that the amendment may continue before the Senate and that the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania may be complied with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri make the same request with reference to the proviso beginning on line 22?

Mr. REED. I am willing that they both shall go over together.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I merely want to say one thing in reference to the insertion of the name of Gen. McKibbin, upon which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] insists and upon which the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] insists. There has never been any disposition to conceal the names in such cases. There have been some Members of Congress who preferred not to have the names included, not that they were ashamed to mention the names, but that it would recite the man's record; that is all. So far as the insertion of a name is concerned, I am sure the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] would not object to having Gen. McKibbin's name inserted, and I am sure I have no objection to it.

Gen. Scully's name is not mentioned, but there is no disposition to conceal it. I am perfectly willing to have Gen. Scully's name inserted; but I have been informed—I do not know how reliable my information is—that Gen. Scully has been so ill that it has required one constant attendant and sometimes two attendants to take care of the old man, and he is 80 years of age.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] before we dispose of this matter. Has the list of retired brigadier generals been examined to determine the comparative merits of them all, and has it been found that those who are provided for in this amendment have rendered services more distinguished than any of the other retired brigadier generals? What the Senate, I suppose, is interested in, or what it ought to be interested in, is knowing some reason for the discrimination in favor of those who are proposed to be provided for here and the failure to provide for a great number of other retired brigadier generals of the Army.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say to the Senator, Mr. President, that I presume there are brigadier generals in the Army who have even more distinguished records than those who are mentioned here. I do not say that that is a fact, but I presume that there are men who have even more distinguished records.

Such applications usually come in from men; they are insisted upon by their friends, and usually the reasons are given which justify the committee in acting favorably; but it does not necessarily mean that the man in whose behalf legislation is enacted has a more distinguished record than has some other man of equal rank.

Mr. POINDEXTER. On the contrary, Mr. President, without casting any reflections upon the distinguished officers who are provided for here, this sort of legislation insteatl of being based upon especially distinguished services is usually based upon superior political influence and closer access to the authorities of the War Department.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, that is hardly a just criticism, because the Secretary of War usually opposes all such items, and I think he opposed this provision. I know nine times out of ten he opposes such amendments. I presume it is a weakness on the part of the committee that sometimes lets these items go in. If anybody is to blame, I think it is members of the Military Affairs Committee, to whom these appeals are made to the heart, as in the case of old Gen. Scully, an invalid soldier who served since 1856 and now is practically on his last bed of sickness. If it is a weakness, Mr. President, I plead guilty; and I am willing to be a party to squandering some of the moneys of the people to save these old fellows in their declining years.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I will ask what was done with the amendments just under consideration?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. They have gone over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments have been passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous," on page 28, line 16, after the word "available," to insert "including enlisted men of the Regular Army Reserve and retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty," so as to make the clause read:

For commutation of quarters and of heat and light to commissioned officers, members of the Nurse Corps, and enlisted men on duty at places where no public quarters are available, including enlisted men of the Regular Army Reserve and retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty, $1,100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 12, after the word "officers," to insert "members of the Officers' Reserve Corps when ordered to active duty"; and, in line 16, after "$740,000," to insert:

Provided,* That the amount appropriated for mileage to commissioned officers, contract surgeons, and expert accountant, Inspector General's Department, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, shall be available for the payment of the mileage of Army field clerks, and field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, when authorized by law."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question regarding this amendment. What mileage is now allowed commissioned and other officers? Is it on the basis of the actual money expended, or is the mileage in excess of the actual amount expended?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The statute fixes the mileage at 7 cents a mile.

Mr. REED. I have been informed, I will say to the chairman of the committee, that in some instances the mileage of officers who are required to travel considerably amounts actually to more than their salary, and that that is one of the great leaks in our military system, so far as money is concerned. Is not this a good time and place to correct that?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I suppose, if there is an abuse in this connection and the Senator knows how to reach it, it ought to be corrected. I understand that there was a document submitted here some time ago that showed the actual expenses of officers in traveling as compared with the amount of mileage allowed. I have not the document before me, but simply recall that such a document was presented. I presume that this matter could be adjusted. In many of the departments actual expenses are allowed, while in other departments a fixed per diem is allowed to cover it all. In the case of the Army mileage is allowed which may in some cases be in excess of actual expenses.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will permit an observation from the Chair, it seems to the Chair that that amendment simply makes available a sum of money for a given purpose.

Mr. REED. I understand the purport of the amendment perfectly. I am asking for this information with the idea that this would be a good place possibly to put in an amendment providing that expenditures for mileage should be the amounts actually expended.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, the amount is for mileage and subsistence when officers are away from home. It has been determined, after experience, to be cheaper for the Government to pay mileage in the manner provided than to pay actual expenses, because the payment of actual expenses would require the especial auditing of every man's accounts, and it may be and often is the case that what they actually pay out is more than what is actually received. In traveling by water the amount is now figured at actual expenses, because such trips are long; but this item covers railroad trips, trips by automobiles, and travel of that kind. Of course, as the Senator knows, when an officer is called upon to leave a railroad he has to pay an additional sum out of his own pocket in order to meet the expense.

I do not believe the Senator would want to introduce the amendment here, even if he should decide to introduce it, for it is a matter on which we ought not to act, I think, until we have full information from the department, as the present arrangement has had a great deal of study. The statement the Senator makes, that officers have made more than their salaries out of mileage, is a very remarkable one.

Mr. REED. I did not make that statement. I said the statement had been made to me. I am inquiring for information; I am not charging anything.

Mr. WARREN. I correct myself, then, and say that the Senator had heard that remark. I think it probably had reference to the olden times, when the same rate was allowed for ocean travel—from here to the Philippines, for instance. All that, however, has been changed, and the Senator will find on examination that this is a proper amount for mileage, subsistence, and other expenses.

Mr. REED. I ask that the amendment go over until tomorrow, by which time I will try to get the document mentioned by the chairman of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 29, line 24, after the word "service," to strike out "$300,000" and insert "$250,000," so as to make the clause read:

For additional 10 per cent increase of pay of officers on foreign service, $250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 2, after the word "service," to strike out "$850,000" and insert "$800,000," so as to make the clause read:

For additional 20 per cent increase of pay of enlisted men on foreign service, $800,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Philippine Scouts," on page 31, line 17, after the word "men," to strike out "$620,000" and insert "$639,258," so as to make the clause read:

For pay of enlisted men, $639,258.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, after line 2, to insert:

Hereafter, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, officers of the Quartermaster Corps accountable for public moneys may intrust such moneys to other officers for the purpose of having them make disbursements as their agents, and the officers to whom the moneys are intrusted, as well as the officers who intrust it to them, shall be held pecuniarily responsible therefor to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 11, after the word "troops," to insert "including enlisted men of the Regular Army Reserve and retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty"; on page 33, line 15, after the word "issued," to insert "including enlisted men of the Regular Army Reserve and retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty"; on page 34, line 4, before the word "cents," to strike out "30" and insert "40"; and, in line 18, after the words "in all," to strike out "$16,500,000" and insert "$19,293,394"; so as to make the clause read:

Subsistence of the Army: Purchase of subsistence supplies: For issue as rations to troops, including enlisted men of the Regular Army Reserve and retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty, civil employees when entitled thereto, hospital matrons, nurses, applicants for enlistment while held under observation, general prisoners of war (including Indians held by the Army as prisoners, but for whose subsistence appropriation is not otherwise made), Indians employed with the Army as guides and scouts, and general prisoners at posts; for the subsistence of the masters, officers, crews, and employees of the vessels of the Army transport service; hot coffee for troops traveling when supplied with cooked or travel rations; meals for recruiting parties and applicants for enlistment while under observation; for sales to officers, including members of the Officers' Reserve Corps, while on active duty, and enlisted men of the Army: Provided, That the sum of $12,000 is authorized to be expended for supplying meals of furnishing commutation of rations to enlisted men of the Regular Army and the National Guard who may be competitors in the national rifle match: Provided further, That no competitor shall be entitled to commutation of rations in excess of $1.50 per day, and when meals are furnished no greater expense than that sum per man per day for the period of contest is in progress shall be incurred. For payments: Of commutation of rations to the cadets of the United States Military Academy in lieu of the regular established ration, at the rate of 40 cents per ration; of the regulation allowances of commutation in lieu of rations to enlisted men on furlough, enlisted men and male and female nurses when stationed at places where rations in kind can not be economically issued, including enlisted men of the Regular Army Reserve and retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty, and when traveling on detached duty where it is impracticable to carry rations of any kind, enlisted men selected to contest for places or prizes in departments and Army rifle competitions while traveling to and from places of contest, male and female nurses on leaves of absence, applicants for enlistment, and general prisoners while traveling under orders; of commutation of rations in lieu of the regular established ration for members of the Nurse Corps (female) while on duty in hospital, at 40 cents per ration, and for enlisted men, applicants for enlistment while held under observation, and general prisoners sick therein, at the rate of 40 cents per ration (except that at the general hospital at Fort Bayard, N. Mex., 50 cents per ration and at other general hospitals 40 cents per ration are authorized for enlisted patients therein), to be paid to the surgeon in charge; advertising; for providing prizes to be established by the Secretary of War for enlisted men of the Army who graduate from the Army schools for bakers and cooks, the total amount of such prizes at the various schools not to exceed $900 per annum; for other necessary expenses incident to the purchase, testing, care, preservation, issue, sale, and accounting for subsistence supplies for the Army; for extraordinary expense of subsistence of West Point cadets while attending inaugural ceremony not to exceed $4,000, which shall be immediately available; in all, $19,293,394.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I notice that several times the language is used in these amendments, "including enlisted men of the Regular Army Reserve and retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty." Why should not that phrase be extended to include the militia when ordered to active duty? Is it contemplated that they would be covered by the terms already employed in the statutes?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, they are a part of the Regular Army when they are called into the Federal service, so that this provision is intended to cover them as well as the Regular Army.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator think that is perfectly clear?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think so. That is the language that was given us by the War Department.

Mr. REED. In some instances I notice the words "the Regular Army and the National Guard" are used.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not recall where those words are employed.

Mr. REED. On page 33, lines 3 and 4. That item applies, however, "to enlisted men of the Regular Army and the National Guard who may be competitors in the national rifle match"; but, nevertheless, the two terms are employed, and I was interested to learn whether this language was broad enough to cover the National Guard. I myself have never been satisfied as to the proper term to use to designate the National Guard when it has been called into the Federal service. They are not a part of the Regular Army of the United States; they are distinguishable from that body in some respects, and yet they have many points of similarity; and I was curious to know whether it was the intention to cover them in this paragraph.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I understand that the Comptroller of the Treasury has ruled that that language is broad enough to include both branches of the service. If the Senator will note the first section of the national-defense act, it provides:

That the Army of the United States shall consist of the Regular Army, the Volunteer Army, the Officers Reserve Corps, the Enlisted Reserve Corps, the National Guard while in the service of the United States—

And so forth.

Therefore the words "Regular Army" cover all. My opinion is that the National Guard is included within that description. The language was suggested to us by the War Department in order to meet the decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent to return to the amendment at the top of page 32 for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee just what is proposed by that amendment. It seems to me to require some explanation.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I understand that that is suggested in order to save these disbursing officers going from one section of the country to another. For instance, in the Mexican mobilization the men were delayed in getting their money because they had to send officers to the ground who were authorized to disburse this money, with the result that sometimes as much as a week and sometimes two weeks elapsed before the enlisted personnel got their money. The purpose of this is to enable the disbursing officers of the Government to put the money in the hands of an officer on the ground, so that he may promptly pay the men.

Mr. McKELLAR. The disbursing officer is under bond. Would the officer to whom charge was given of the money be under bond? I see it says "pecuniarily liable."

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, this is only to take care of those small places and small posts where an officer's salary will be sufficient guaranty of his honesty. It is just for small amounts, of course.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is all.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well, Mr. President.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 6, after the word "officers," to insert "including members of the Officers' Reserve Corps when ordered to active duty"; in line 7, after the word "men," to insert "including enlisted men of the Regular Army Reserve and retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty"; on page 36, line 6, after the word "libraries," to insert "and for textbooks for noncommissioned officers' schools, including subscriptions for newspapers, periodicals, and magazines for use of enlisted men as may be authorized by the Secretary of War"; and on page 37, line 6, after the word "reports," to strike out "$11,000,000" and insert "$13,453,995.19," so as to make the clause read:

Regular supplies, Quartermaster Corps: Regular supplies of the Quartermaster Corps, including their care and protection; construction and repair of military reservation fences; stoves and heating apparatus required for heating offices, hospitals, barracks and quarters, and recruiting stations, and United States disciplinary barracks; also ranges, stoves, coffee roasters, and appliances for cooking and serving food at posts, in the field, and when traveling, and repair and maintenance of such heating and cooking appliances; and the necessary power for the operation of moving-picture machines; authorized issues of candles and matches; for furnishing heat and light for the authorized allowance of quarters for officers, including members of the Officers' Reserve Corps when ordered to active duty, and enlisted men, including enlisted men of the Regular Army Reserve and retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty; contract surgeons when stationed at and occupying public quarters at military posts; for officers of the National Guard attending service and garrison schools, and for recruits, guards, hospitals, storehouses, offices, the buildings erected at private cost, in the operation of the act approved May 31, 1902; for sale to officers, and including also fuel and engine supplies required in the operation of modern batteries at established posts; for post bakeries, including bake ovens and apparatus pertaining thereto, and the repair thereof; for ice machines and their maintenance where required for the health and comfort of the troops and for cold storage; ice for issue to organizations of enlisted men and offices at such places as the Secretary of War may determine, and for preservation of stores; for the construction, operation, and maintenance of laundries at military posts in the United States and its inland possessions; for the authorized issues of laundry materials for use of general prisoners confined at military posts without pay or allowances, and for applicants for enlistment while held under observation; authorized issues of soap; for hire of employees; for the necessary furniture, textbooks, paper, and equipment for the post schools and libraries and for textbooks for noncommissioned officers' schools, including subscriptions for newspapers, periodicals, and magazines for use of enlisted men as may be authorized by the Secretary of War; for the purchase and issue of instruments, office furniture, stationery, and other authorized articles for the use of officers' schools at the several military posts; for purchase of relief maps for issue to organizations, commercial newspapers, market reports, etc.; for the tableware and mess furniture for kitchens and mess halls, each and all for the enlisted men, including recruits; of forage, salt, and vinegar for the horses, mules, oxen, and other draft and riding animals of the Quartermaster Corps at the several posts and stations and with the armies in the field, and for the horses of the several regiments of Cavalry and batteries of Artillery, and such companies of Infantry and Scouts as may be mounted; for remounts and for the authorized number of officers' horses, including bedding for the animals; for seeds and implements required for the raising of forage at remount depots and on military reservations in the Hawaiian and Philippine Islands and for labor and expenses incident thereto, including, when specifically authorized by the Secretary of War, the cost of irrigation; for straw for soldiers' bedding, stationery, typewriters and exchange of same, including blank books and blank forms for the Quartermaster Corps, certificates for discharged soldiers, and for printing department orders and reports, $13,453,995.19.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 15, after the word "Army," to insert "including members of the Officers' Reserve Corps when ordered to active duty"; on page 40, line 9, after the words "purchase of," to strike out "medicines for horses and mules"; and in line 15, after the word "department," to strike out "$1,800,000" and insert "$2,199,000," so as to make the clause read:

Incidental expenses, Quartermaster Corps: Postage; cost of telegrams on official business received and sent by officers of the Army, including members of the Officers' Reserve Corps when ordered to active duty; extra pay to soldiers employed on extra duty, under the direction of the Quartermaster Corps, in the erection of barracks, quarters, and storehouses, in the construction of roads, and other constant labor for periods of not less than 10 days; as additional school-teachers during the school term at post schools, and as clerks for post quartermasters at military posts, and for overseers of general prisoners at posts designated by the War Department for the confinement of general prisoners, and for the United States disciplinary barracks guard: Provided, That hereafter the extra-duty pay to the United States disciplinary barracks guard shall be at the following rates per day: Battalion sergeants major, first sergeants, mess sergeants, supply sergeants, and sergeants, 35 cents; corporals, 30 cents; cooks and mechanics, privates first class, privates, and buglers, 20 cents; of extra-duty pay at rates to be fixed by the Secretary of War for mess stewards and cooks at recruit depots, who are graduates of the schools for bakers and cooks, and instructor cooks at the schools for bakers and cooks; for expenses of expresses to and from frontier posts and armies in the field; of escorts to officers or agents of the Quartermaster Corps to trains where military escorts can not be furnished; authorized office furniture, authorized issues of towels; hire of laborers in the Quartermaster Corps, including the care of officers' mounts when the same are furnished by the Government, and the hire of interpreters, spies, or guides for the Army; compensation of clerks and other employees to the officers of the Quartermaster Corps, and clerks, foremen, watchmen, and organist for the United States disciplinary barracks, and incidental expenses of recruiting; for the apprehension, securing, and delivering of deserters, including escaped military prisoners, and the expenses incident to their pursuit, and no greater sum than $50 for each deserter or escaped military prisoner shall, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be paid to any civil officer or citizen for such services and expenses; for a donation of $5 to each dishonorably discharged prisoner upon his release from confinement under court-martial sentence involving dishonorable discharge; for the following expenditures required for the several regiments of Cavalry, the batteries of Field Artillery, and such companies of Infantry and Scouts as may be mounted, the authorized number of officers' horses, and for the trains, to wit, purchase of picket ropes, blacksmith's tools and materials, horseshoes and blacksmith's tools for the Cavalry service, and for the shoeing of horses and mules; chests and issue outfits; and such additional expenditures as are necessary and authorized by law in the movements and operations of the Army, and at military posts, and not expressly assigned to any other department, $2,199,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, after line 16, to insert:

Provided, That hereafter the premium authorized by section 1120 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall be paid only under such conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, after line 20, to insert:

Provided further, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to pay the account of the La Grande Evening Observer, of La Grande, Oreg., in the sum of $51.35 for advertising and other services rendered in connection with recruitment of the Oregon National Guard, called into the Federal service by the President under date of June 18, 1916, and ordered by Capt. Lee M. Clark, ordnance department, Oregon National Guard, a properly detailed recruiting officer.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, after line 5, to insert:

Provided further, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ the services of one or more advertising agencies in advertising for recruits for the Army under such terms and conditions as he may deem to be most advantageous to the interests of the Government.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I want to ask the chairman of the committee whether or not that contemplates that the Secretary of War shall determine the character of the advertisements, or will he permit these advertising agencies to send out whatever inducements they think advisable?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I understand that the advertising matter is under the direction of the Secretary of War, and that the employment of these agencies is under his direction. The purpose of it, Mr. President, was this:

It is very difficult for the Secretary of War to know the different papers all over the country where the best results might be obtained from advertising. By taking it up with one or more advertising agencies who make a specialty of it he can form an opinion as to where would be the best place to insert these advertisements and make the contract for the publication of them.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think that is all right, but I think the Secretary of War ought to——

Mr. WARREN. The statement at the time was that he could make more advantageous terms. Of course they would furnish the advertisements; but it was stated that there were agencies that could reach hundreds of papers and would bring better returns than the War Department could probably do in dealing with an individual.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to ask the chairman a question. Have the advertisements that have been posted heretofore, seeking recruits in the Army, been prepared by the War Department, or have these advertisements been prepared by some private agency?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I should not like to say about that, Mr. President. I should imagine that those advertisements must have been prepared by the recruiting officers, or at least must have been approved by the War Department.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am afraid that is correct. I have seen some advertisements the contents of which were such that it seems to me the Government ought not to hold out the inducements that were offered by those advertisements to men going into the Army.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say to the Senator that I think that is true.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I hope that hereafter the War Department will pretty carefully see to it that special inducements are not held out and special representations are not made to induce men to enlist in the Army.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, ought we to have any advertising at all about it? Is it not rather a little thing to provide for advertising for recruits? I am in favor of rejecting the proposed amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. My impression is very much in line with what the Senator has said, but I did not care to go that far. I have, however, seen some advertisements, apparently put out with the authority of the United States Government, that ought not to be put out.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, will the chairman of the committee permit a suggestion from me?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. While it does seem a sort of an assault on the patriotism of the country that we should have to advertise for recruits, and to that extent I agree with the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], yet when you know that, on the other hand, there is a propaganda going through the country making representations about the awful service to which a soldier is put, how he is degraded and abused and handled, with no answer made to it anywhere from any source, governmental or otherwise, it seems to me that we might think a minute about answering suggestions of that sort that are made in secret everywhere throughout this land under a propaganda to-day.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, it does look like an attack on the patriotism of the young men of the country to say that the Government should be reduced to the necessity of advertising for recruits; but if the distinguished Senator from Georgia had come into contact with those upon whose shoulders has rested the responsibility of getting men, he would find that more than one plan had been proposed in order to induce these young men to perform a patriotic duty. It may be true, as the Senator from Washington suggests—and I agree with him in his objection to it—that there are flaring and flaming advertisements put up, both for the Army and for the Navy, that ought not to have the approval, if they do have the approval, of the War and Navy Departments; but even with those, Mr. President, it has been impossible to raise the men necessary to defend our country, if it be necessary to protect our southern border at all.

Here there was a resolution passed on the 16th day of March, over a year ago, to get 20,000 volunteers in the Regular Army, and they have not been gotten yet with all of these flaming advertisements.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. In addition to the flaming advertisements that the Senator speaks of, Mr. President, we have passed the national-defense act and provided that the postmasters shall be constituted recruiting agents, and with that force and with all these flaming advertisements and with all the efforts that have been made in every city in these United States to get 20,000 men, we have not been able to get them.

Mr. President, I sound a warning right here and now that unless some system is adopted that will get these patriotic young men into the ranks to fight, we will never raise such an Army as may be necessary to be raised in the war that is now threatening and may be impending. Something has got to be resorted to. It is all right to get up here and condemn the methods that have been adopted for undertaking to recruit the Army; but when it comes to a conscriptive proposition to get these young men, you can not get them and you are not going to get them under any volunteer system that I know anything about.

Mr. HUGHES, Mr. WADSWORTH, and Mr. LODGE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield, and to whom?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, will the Senator please state what the United States Government has done, what the authorities have done, what the Senate Military Affairs Committee or the House Military Affairs Committee has done in the way of offering inducements to young men to enlist in the United States Army? The only place they offer any inducements to them, that I know of, is in those advertisements.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I know what the Senator is going to suggest. The Senator is going to suggest that the pay of the enlisted men ought to be increased. Probably that is true.

Mr. HUGHES. No attempt was made to increase it. No attempt was made to make the service attractive to anybody except major generals, colonels, brigadiers, and people of that sort. It is a well-understood thing around here that the Regular Establishment is only a peg upon which to hang these high offices.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Oh, Mr. President——

Mr. HUGHES. I will guarantee to the Senator that within six months he can, by proper legislation, raise an army of 250,000 or 500,000 regular soldiers in this country.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, if I had my way, I could raise a million men just as quickly as it would be possible to train them, and that is by compelling every man to recognize that he owes a duty to his country. It is a part of the responsibility of citizenship. I got a letter the other day from the distinguished ambassador from Argentina, in response to an inquiry about the universal military training system they have there. He said that they have in vogue in the Argentine Republic, and that it is one of the three bases of that democratic Republic, compulsory education, which was taken from the United States, compulsory voting, if you please, which they originated themselves, and compulsory military service; and he attributes the rapid progress that that Republic has made to those three democratic propositions.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I probably ought not to digress here to discuss this proposition, but it has been the custom here of certain Members of the Senate to criticize the War Department about its methods of raising men when we can not raise them, and to criticize the higher officers because they get better pay than the enlisted men.

Mr. KIRBY and Mr. LODGE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield, and to whom?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield the floor.

Mr. LODGE. I wanted to ask the Senator a question before he took his seat, if I might. It was simply this: How on earth are we to have young men come in if we do not let them know that we need recruits? We must in some way tell them what the Government needs, and I see no other way than by doing it through proper advertising.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Why, Mr. President, there is not one paper out of fifty that will not publish anything the Secretary of War furnishes on the subject. Instead of employing papers to publish advertisements, furnish the facts, and the great bulk of the papers will publish them with great freedom now. The situation is entirely different from what it was a week ago. Advertisements might have been proper a week ago, but to-day to say that you have got to pay for advertisements, that you are advertising and paying for it, is to lessen the publicity rather than to increase it.

Mr. KIRBY and Mr. WADSWORTH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I am moved to comment very briefly on this matter of recruiting, especially after listening to the remarks made by the chairman of the committee [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN].

I am in entire agreement with him on the proposal that, if we are to let men know that they are wanted in the Army—and, be it remembered, this bill is not an emergency measure at all, it is merely for ordinary peace-time usage—we must advertise for them. May I suggest to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] that even in time of war there are other great countries that do not regard it as an assault upon the patriotism of their young men to insert advertisements in newspapers or elsewhere?

The Senator is undoubtedly aware of the fact that Great Britain has raised an army of 4,500,000 soldiers by extensive advertising—the most strenuous campaign of advertising ever attempted in private or public endeavor. No Englishman thought it was an attack upon the patriotism of the young men of England, and it was wonderfully successful. No nation in all the world's history has accomplished as much in the organization of a volunteer army as has England in the last two and a half years. Were we to accomplish as much in proportion to our population as England has accomplished, we would have to raise an Army of 10,000,000 volunteers.

So this matter of advertisement is not one that can be looked upon lightly. It has its value, as has been proved by the experience of England in this war. It is possible, by advertisements properly used in this country, to help our War Department.

Now, a remark or two, Mr. President, with respect to the pay of men and of the inducements that are held forth to men to volunteer to do military service in time of peace.

It is true that up to date the recruiting service of the Regular Army has failed to get the required number of men to enlist in that branch of the service. As the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] has said, by the passage of a special resolution over a year ago we authorized the increase of the Regular Army by 20,000 men, and the national-defense act of last year also authorized a permanent increment of somewhere in the neighborhood of 38,000 men, the first year's increment in the enlargement program. In 1916 the Regular Army, according to my best information, only gained 1,400 men. It is now short something like 37,000 of the first increment under the national-defense act of last year.

It is a peculiar thing, and one which I think is significant when viewed in connection with this problem of recruiting. Money is not the only inducement to get men to volunteer in the military service in peace or in war. Not even in peace is it the principal inducement. I venture to say that even if you doubled the wages of enlisted men in the Regular Army in time of peace you would not get the required number. Let me say that without any additional pay as compared with the pay of Regulars, the Marine Corps is always full. They get all the men they want at $15 a month. Their pay is on the same basis as that of soldiers in the Regular Army.

Why is it that the Marine Corps gets all the men they want? It is because that service offers opportunities for adventure. That is what keeps the Marine Corps full. A young man who goes into the Marines, with some spirit of adventure in him, who wants to see the world and see service, knows that the Marines are the first men who see active service. If there is a little revolution in some Central American country, it is the Marines that land and establish order. If there is some trouble in any part of the world where it is necessary to exert the military or the naval force of the United States, it is the Marines that go.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield right there?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. HUGHES. I am very much interested in this subject, though I differ slightly with the Senator; and I propose to lay before the Senate at the proper time, as soon as I get an opportunity, some information I have with reference to the effect on enlistments of increased pay. It is by no means the immaterial consideration that the Senator seems to think, in my judgment; but my purpose in rising was to ask the Senator what is our complement of Marines?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Fifteen thousand.

Mr. HUGHES. Of course the Senator knows that there is no difficulty in recruiting a body of 15,000 men. There is no difficulty in recruiting a body of 15,000 regular soldiers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Well, Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me one moment——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Perhaps the Senator was going to say the same thing that I was. In the Naval Committee we authorized an increase, I think, of 3,600 men in the Marine Corps, and 30,000 offered. Now, 30,000 would be a good, round number to offer for the Army.

Mr. HUGHES. I will say to the Senator right now, because it is pertinent, that I have the testimony of an officer who appeared before either the Senate or the House Military Affairs Committee, in which he says that the increase from $13 to $15 a month doubled the recruiting in the United States, and that with that increase he was able to get 20,000 recruits. You can not ignore that testimony. Senators should not attempt to ignore that testimony. It is one of the vital elements and considerations in the case, if anybody cares anything about the enlisted men of the Regular Establishment, which I have grown to doubt very much.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I did not mean to give the impression that the wages paid is an inconsiderable element in this great problem. Of course, if you double or materially increase the wages or the pay of enlisted men in the Army, you will get more recruits; but I venture to say to the Senator from New Jersey or any other gentleman who is interested in this problem—and I grant his deep interest in it—that even if we could materially increase the pay of the soldiers of the Regular Army in time of peace, we would never be able to fill it to 270,000, as is contemplated under the national-defense act of June 3, 1916. It will take something besides the monetary inducement.

Mr. FLETCHER and Mr. KIRBY addressed the Chair.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The reason why the Marine Corps is kept full in time of peace, and at the same pay and with the same treatment accorded its men as is accorded to the men of the Regular Army, is because it appeals to that natural spirit of adventure that lies in the breast of every manly young man.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am inclined to agree with the Senator from New York in what he has said, especially with reference to this feature of advertising. I think it is quite important. I do not believe, and I was going to ask the Senator whether he felt, that we have had a fair test of the volunteer system under the recent legislation.

For instance, does not the Senator believe that there was objection to doing police duty on the border of Mexico, and there were features connected with that effort to increase the Regular Army and also to increase the National Guard that prevented that increase from being what we expected? In other words, that the system has not had a genuine test up to this time? If there is to be a real war; if there is to be active service; if there is to be reason to appeal to the patriotism of the young men of this country, does not the Senator believe that they will respond?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, my remarks are addressed to the provisions of this bill.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President——

Mr WADSWORTH. I have not had a chance to answer the question. This bill contemplates authorization for the Secretary of War to advertise for recruits in the ordinary piping times of peace.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; I agree with what the Senator said about that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now let me answer the Senator. I think we should advertise in war and peace, as a matter of fact. But let me answer the question of the Senator from Florida with respect to the apparent failure or perhaps with reference to the unfairness, as he puts it, of the tests thus far given to voluntary recruiting, particularly with respect to the incident along the Mexican border.

In spite of the fact that war with Mexico seemed at least possible, and in fact probable, for quite a period of time, the Regular Army was unable to materially increase its enlisted strength. When the National Guard was mobilized, on June 18 last, a swarm of recruits started to enlist in the National Guard. The orders were issued from the War Department that the guard should be raised to war strength, which necessitated the increase of the average unit of the National Guard by 30 or 40 per cent, for under the law prior to that time they were not permitted to hold their units at war strength. For the first 10 days following that mobilization order hundreds and literally thousands of recruits flocked to the armories and headquarters of the different National Guard units all over the United States; but when it became apparent that the administration in Washington had no real intention of doing anything in Mexico no more recruits came; and it will always be so. It was impossible after the expiration of about 10 days after the issuance of that mobilization order to get any more recruits in such numbers as to be worthy of consideration, illustrating once again that it is not the money that is the inducement. It is a combination of patriotism and a love of adventure. So in time of peace, in order to keep your Regular Army full or anywhere near its authorized quota you must authorize the Secretary of War to advertise, and advertise liberally. That is all I have been contending for.

May I add, just in this connection, in connection with the present emergency, that recruits have been flocking to the headquarters of National Guard organizations in greater or less degree ever since the German ambassador was sent home, some of them anticipating that this condition might lead to war. It was the possibility and even the probability of war that attracted those recruits, not the money; and to my astonishment and deep regret I hear that the War Department has sent out an order forbidding the National Guard organizations to continue accepting recruits. That order, as I understand, was issued just the other day, and in one armory in the city of New York, occupied by a regiment that has just been mustered into the Federal service for the second time in the last eight months, 300 recruits were turned down because the order came from Washington that they must accept no more, and the same thing has happened in greater or less degree at several other places. The reason assigned to it unofficially—and I have no official knowledge of the reason back of this action—is that there are not enough supplies to equip these recruits.

Mr. KIRBY and Mr. POINDEXTER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield first to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There has been an ample amount of money appropriated for supplies for the National Guard.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, is it not because of the fact that at this time they have adopted a system of conscription, and that volunteering is not to be permitted, nor is any person to be permitted, as in days past, to organize a regiment and offer it to the Government; and has it not been announced that the War Department has recommended conscription to the exclusion of volunteering?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I understand that the announcements which have thus far been made, and of which, of course, I have knowledge solely through the press——

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I not answer the question of the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. REED. I wanted to correct the Senator from Indiana in a phrase that he used; that is all. I am sure he wants to be correct. I think he did not intend to employ the phrase that the order had been issued for conscription.

Mr. WATSON. Perhaps it has not been issued; but is it not the understanding, and has it not gone out through the press as the understanding of the War Department, and was it not announced in the press the other day, that the Secretary of War had so testified before the Committee on Military Affairs of the House?

Mr. REED. Well, I only spoke in the interest of accuracy. I knew the Senator wanted to be accurate. No such order has been issued. The statement last made by the Senator may be absolutely accurate. I do not challenge that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator just a moment? There was no order of conscription, and the Secretary of War would not have power to order conscription; but the suggestion has been made——

Mr. WATSON. Yes; the suggestion. Perhaps I ought not to have used the word "order."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The suggestion has been made that the proposed Army legislation was to include a system of conscription.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I say a word to the Senator from Indiana?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] asked me a question. I should like an opportunity to answer it, and then I should be glad to yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

May I say, in reply to the Senator from Indiana, that as I understand it—and I think he understands it the same way—the announcement that has been carried in the press with respect to the organization of the armed forces of the United States to meet this emergency contemplates three things: First, the raising of the Regular Army to complete war strength by accepting volunteers for that service, and in the event of volunteers not coming forward in sufficient numbers, to impose a draft in order to fill up the Regular Army; second, to raise the National Guard of the United States to war strength, approximately 400,000 men, by volunteers, and if volunteers are not forthcoming in sufficient numbers to impose a draft; third, the creation of a new army, 500,000 men in its first increment, by a conscriptive system. It is with respect to the second suggestion that I have called attention to the order of the War Deparment, directed to officers of the National Guard, not to accept volunteer recruits; and I have been astonished that it was done.

Mr. WATSON. What is the strength of the National Guard at this time?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The strength of the National Guard is in the neighborhood of 160,000 men.

Mr. WATSON. And the full number is 400,000?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The full complement, under the terms of the act of June 3, 1916, would be 400,000 men, at war strength.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. KIRBY. I merely desired to ask a question of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, but it may be just the same if I ask it of the Senator from New York. He made a remark to the effect that publicity of advertising is altogether desirable. I wish to find out whether it is the policy in this war, for war is already declared, to call on volunteers. I believe when the war spirit was at its highest the advertising time was then. Does the Senator know whether we are going to call on the volunteers or not? I understand that in the Spanish-American War there were 600,000 volunteers, and we are expecting now to raise certainly 500,000 men. I merely wish to ask if it has been the declared policy not to call for volunteers? I wanted to ask that question of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Will the Senator from New York allow me to answer it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will be very glad if the Senator will answer it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is being discussed. I am not telling any secrets, because it has been published in the press that the War Department proposes conscription; that it does not propose to do away with the volunteer system, for that is to be exhausted first; but whether that will be adopted or not will rest entirely with Congress.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask the chairman of the committee if he will tell us why the tender of the volunteers of the National Guard all over the country was rejected? I have had some complaints from my State. I received a number of telegrams asking that the volunteers be accepted, as many were seeking to volunteer and to fill up the quota of the National Guard. I wanted to ask the chairman of the committee if he could tell us about that?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have not heard of any such orders. If the Senator has received telegrams, I assume he took it up with the War Department. It may be that they have done so, but I have not heard anything of it. The first intimation I heard of it was on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I made inquiry of the War Department, and all the information I got was that there was a temporary suspension and that shortly they would be prepared to accept volunteers again.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I shall take only a moment longer to conclude, but I will yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WEEKS. I want to refer to what was said just now about the acceptance of the volunteers at this time. Ten days ago—it may be two weeks ago—when in Massachusetts nearly all the Massachusetts regiments were enlisted up to their maximum peace strength and they had a very considerable number of men who were prepared to enroll themselves, so that they could go in when the call came to enlist these regiments up to their war strength. They have not been allowed to do that up to this time. Several thousand men are waiting to be enrolled. They may get cold feet and decline to be enrolled unless that is done.

Ten days ago the governor of Massachusetts sent a telegram, which was also joined in by the governors of the other New England States, asking the administration and the War Department to permit them to enlist their militia regiments up to the maximum war strength. There has been no attention given to it. In the meantime everything has been stopped. Before that time, at least two weeks ago, the governor of Massachusetts had asked the War Department to allow the enlistment of these regiments up to the war strength. There was no reply to that for several days. I state this simply to corroborate what has been said, and to express the opinion that unless something is done pretty soon those men who are willing to volunteer, who are ready to go into the service, will lose their enthusiasm and we shall lose those men.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I simply say in conclusion that I understand, from very indirect sources and with no very great confidence in the correctness of the explanation, that the reason for the suspension of recruiting the National Guard to war strength by the volunteer system was the lack of supplies for equipping the men. Now, how serious that lack of supplies is I do not know; I imagine there is no Member of the Senate who knows; but I desire to call attention to the fact that when the guard was mobilized at the end of last June it was then ordered to recruit to war strength, and some of the units succeeded in reaching war strength before the excitement, if I may term it, subsided and recruits stopped coming in. If the guard was ordered to be recruited to war strength in June, 1916, it at least is conceivable that the War Department has been at work to make the purchase of necessary materials and equipment. If that has not been done during all these months that have transpired, it is not surprising that they are unable to accept recruits when once more it is contemplated to raise the guard to war strength.

And may I say, in connection with this particular regiment which had to turn down 300 men in one day, there are now carried on the rolls of that regiment 1,350 men, every one of them a veteran of border service. They are now again in the Federal service, guarding the lines of communication in up-State New York. Every man responded. In addition to the 1,350 full equipments which those men went away with, carried on their backs and in their packs and in their wagon trains, there were about 300 more equipments in that same armory, and those 300 recruits could have been equipped; but apparently the War Department did not know that the extra equipment was there or it did not want the men.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat will he give me a little information? Can he state to the Senate why the National Guard in some of the States is now being mustered out of the service; that it has recently been, in the last two or three weeks, mustered out and is yet being mustered out?

Mr. WADSWORTH. My information is not complete. I did not realize that they were still mustering out the National Guard.

Mr. FALL. The National Guard of New Mexico was complimented by Gen. Pershing in El Paso, Tex., two weeks ago as having performed its duty wonderfully well; that they were magnificent soldiers and had done everything they were called upon to do, scattered along the border for hundreds of miles. They had been in the service since the National Guard was mustered into the Regular service, and they were ordered mustered out the latter part of March. The order was countermanded temporarily. They were ordered mustered out again on the 5th day of April, and on the 5th the order was temporarily countermanded, but it was understood they could not obtain the service of mustering-out officers. They were then ordered to be mustered out on the 7th day of this month. I have not heard from them since.

In the latter part of March, within the last days of March, just prior to the 1st of this month, at El Paso, Tex., there was mustered out of the service Battery A, New Mexico National Guard, which was pronounced at the time in public by Gen. Greble to be the best battery on the border whether in the Regular service or in the National Guard service. It was composed of young men who had taken great pride in keeping up this battery. The commanding officer is an ex Swiss artillery officer, a man of wealth. The men were furnished their own horses and kept up their own organization with no help, I may say, from the State of New Mexico, or very little. As I said at a public reception tendered to the National Guard and attended by Regular officers, including Gen. Pershing and Gen. Greble, it was pronounced to be the best battery of Artillery which was on the border or had been on the border, whether in the Regular Army or in the National Guard service.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if, when he states that these troops have been mustered out, he means by that that the organization has been dissolved. Will they not go back to the State and retain their original status, or are they to be really mustered out of the service?

Mr. FALL. They were mustered out, or are being mustered out, of the United States service. I am in the dark, just as all other Senators are; but I understand that the National Guard will only be used by the Government when mustered into the national service during this war. That is contemplated. Now, they have been in use on the border, mustered into the national service, and they have been mustered out of the national service.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. But they still have their State status.

Mr. FALL. That is a question for the Attorney General or the War Department or some one else to pass upon. The question has been raised, I may say, and I do not know that it has been satisfactorily answered, though it came up with reference to this very battery. It was mustered in. It went from Roswell, in New Mexico, to El Paso, Tex., where it remained, doing duty along the border. Over the objection of the Senators from New Mexico, one of them I may say, at any rate, voiced in answer to petitions from every member of the guard and from the officers of the State, for some reason the guard was not even allowed to go back to Roswell for muster out. They desired to go back, in fact, as a battery. They were mustered out in opposition to the desire of the officials of the State and their own desire, communicated to the Secretary of War, and by him communicated to the commanding general. They were mustered out and turned loose at El Paso, Tex. What their present status is I do not know.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, while I am not in the confidence of the War Department or the administration I can readily understand from my standpoint why they have ceased to increase the National Guard. That is an organization which under the Constitution can not be taken out of the country. If they can only be retained here in the United States, they are simply a police force, if you recruited the National Guard up to the full maximum, and I can not see the necessity of keeping 400,000 men here in the United States to do a sort of military police duty.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is the Senator clear as to the matter of service outside the country?

Mr. NELSON. Yes; the Constitution is plain on that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The National Guard is now federalized. By the enlistment contract which each soldier signs he may be sent anywhere.

Mr. NELSON. That is only after they are mustered into the service of the United States and become United States volunteers, but if they preserve their position as a National Guard under the Constitution they can not be taken out of the country.

Mr. KIRBY. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCKELLAR in the chair). Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. NELSON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KIRBY. Is it not a fact that all the National Guard were required to take the oath and be mustered into the Government service before they were sent to the Mexican border?

Mr. NELSON. Those who were there were mustered into the service of the United States, but——

Mr. KIRBY. They are still in the service until they are mustered out, are they not?

Mr. NELSON. But as the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] intimated, they are mustered into the United States service when they call them out, but when they are mustered out of the United States service they are not mustered out of the National State Guard. They still remain a part of that organization under State law, as the Senator from Michigan intimated.

As I said, it is a peculiar organization, and I can see no necessity for increasing the National Guard unless you put it on the exact footing of volunteer soldiers or the Regular Army so that they can be taken outside of the country and used in a foreign war. If they are only to be used in a domestic war, I can see no necessity of having 400,000 more or even 100,000 National Guardsmen.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. To repel invasion.

Mr. NELSON. Yes; to repel invasion.

Now, coming to the other question, as to how to recruit our Army in time of peace or in time of war we had good lessons in the Civil War. In the North the most effective way of recruiting men was for the governor to call together a group of men, as good, able men as he could find. He would say, "Here, I will make you a colonel"; "I will make you a lieutenant colonel"; "I will make you a major."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. What did he make you?

Mr. NELSON. Never mind, I will come to that later on. He would say, "I will appoint you 10 men as captains, and so on down the line. You will recruit and organize a regiment. If you will get up the regiment I will appoint you as officers of that regiment." Each one of those men got busy. They were the recruiting officers. They would be anxious to form the regiment.

The only vice of that system was that while it furnished ample men it was a system that did not fill the ranks of the regiment when they were depleted by the losses of war or the accidents of battle. They were, however, most effective men. We now have on the statute books a provision, which was enacted during the Spanish-American War—and the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs will correct me if I am wrong—for an army of Federal volunteers. We had during the Spanish-American War two classes of volunteer armies; one class in which the governors of the States appointed the officers—they were like the National Guard in that respect—and we also had what were called Federal volunteer regiments, of which the President of the United States appointed the officers. I take it that in time of war the President of the United States can exercise his authority under that law. I ask the Senator from Oregon, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, if I am correct as to that?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There is such a law, but there has been some question raised as to whether or not the national-defense act had not practically by implication repealed it.

Mr. NELSON. Well, unless that law has been repealed, the Government can call for Federal volunteers. If the President will take steps to organize such regiments, will call good officers together, such officers as are properly qualified, and will say, "I will appoint you colonel; I will appoint you lieutenant colonel; I will appoint you major, if you will go to work and recruit and organize a regiment," we will be doing exactly what was done during the Civil War.

As the Senator from New York truly said, it is not wages that hasten enlistments; it is the desire to go to war, to go into active service. A good many of our soldiers who recently went into the National Guard were stationed on the Mexican border, and they became discouraged and discontented because they had nothing to do except to drill and to stand camp guard.

I venture to say that if the President would call for a volunteer army of 500,000 men, and would say to them "You can go to Europe and fight," there would be no trouble in getting any number of volunteers. What our boys and our young men dread above all things is to be mustered into the service, then to be stationed in a camp and have nothing to do except drilling and standing camp guard. What the young men want is not bigger wages, but an opportunity to march, to meet the enemy, and to fight. Whenever we shall be in a position when we can say to our young men, "You will have a chance to fight in Europe," we shall have no trouble in securing an ample supply of volunteers.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. But let me say——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator from Missouri will allow me, I want to qualify that statement, because I do not desire anybody to obtain a wrong impression.

I do not think it is necessary at present to send soldiers over to Europe. I think it will now be sufficient if we fortify those nations with funds, if we aid them with supplies and munitions, put our Navy into active use, keep back the submarines, and keep the ocean lanes free and open for our commerce. If we do that, and properly aid them in financing the expenses of the war, I do not think we shall have to send any men over to Europe, but if a time should come when it would be necessary I have no doubt that we could get an ample number of volunteers who would be glad to go over and show those people how Yankee soldiers can fight.

This puts me in mind of a little piece of poetry. I beg to be excused for not yielding to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], but I shall do so by and by. Some years ago there was a man in Philadelphia, whose name, I think, was Charles G. Leland, who wrote poetry in the way the Pennsylvania Dutch speak English. He wrote under the name of Hans Breitmann. There was one of his verses which I remember very well. Hans was a German. After the Franco-Prussian War was over he went over to Germany and visited the German troops on the border. When he got there the Yankee spirit came over him; he commenced to brag, and, to show those German soldiers that we over in America were much better than they were, what do you think he wrote in his poetic vein? He wrote:

Over in America, schust before the battle pops,
We take a little prayer to Himmel, and a good long drink of schnapps.

[Laughter.]

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota made one remark, also made by other Senators who have recently spoken, to the effect that he did not believe that the wages paid to soldiers would have any influence on enlistments; that the desire to march, to meet the enemy, and to fight would be the inspiring things that would lead our young men to the colors. I have no doubt that sentiments of that kind would have a very great and salutary effect on the morale of the young men of the country—expressive, as such sentiments would be, of the spirit of patriotism. I should like, however, at this point, to ask the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, to tell me, what I ought to know, but do not, what the monthly wage of a private soldier is.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is $15 a month; but it is increased after three years' service to $18.

Mr. WARREN. It is also increased for sharpshooting.

Mr. WATSON. What is the statement, please, Mr. President?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The base pay of a private soldier is $15 a month. It is increased after a term of service to $18.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator from Missouri merely to say that, in addition, the soldier is furnished with everything; that he practically has no expense.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I have thought for a long time that the wage paid the private soldier of the Regular Army, which I have been under the impression was only $13 per month, but which I am now told is $15 per month, with an increase after three years' service to $18 per month——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. In case of reenlistment.

Mr. STONE. In case of reenlistment.

Mr. NELSON. The increase would apply in the case of a foreign war, also, if soldiers are sent out of the country.

Mr. WARREN. Twenty per cent is added to their pay if soldiers go out of the country.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I know that clothing, food, and barracks or tents are furnished the private soldier at the public expense. How much that costs for the individual soldier per year I am not advised, but I take it that the clothing expense per capita is not very large. I say that for the reason that the cloth out of which uniforms for soldiers are manufactured is bought at wholesale, on competitive bids, and at a comparatively low price.

If you add what the soldier gets as upkeep in the way indicated to his monthly wage I doubt if the entire compensation would amount to over $40 a month. I do not believe it would amount to $40 per month. I do not believe it would more than double the monthly wage running through the year.

If $15 per month is the wage, I venture to say that the expense to the Government—of course, this is conjectural, as I have said—I venture the opinion that the cost to the Government of the furnishings would not exceed $15 to $18 per month per man. Add that to the wage and the total of actual compensation is less than $40 per month.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. STONE. If the Senator from Utah can give me any information he knows to be correct, I will be glad to have it.

Mr. SMOOT. The estimate made of the amount required for the care of a soldier, for all that is furnished him by the Government, including hospital care and every requirement made by him, is $70 per month. That is, wherever there is an appropriation made to take care of a soldier it is based upon $70 a month, including everything the Government furnishes the soldier; and I will say that the Government furnishes the soldier everything that is required by him.

Mr. PAGE. Does that include his salary?

Mr. SMOOT. No; that is outside of his salary.

Mr. REED. What is the estimated amount?

Mr. SMOOT. Seventy dollars per month.

Mr. STONE. That includes his salary, does it not?

Mr. SMOOT. No; that is for the maintenance of the soldier outside of his salary.

Mr. STONE. I did not before know what the estimates were, but the estimates seem to me to be exceedingly exorbitant if applied per man. Of course, hospital expenses of a soldier unfortunate enough to require hospital treatment, and the treatment being free, would increase the money benefit to that soldier; but I can not think that $70 a month for clothing, food, and shelter—and that is all the soldier gets, except when he is sick and needs a doctor and a hospital. Some Senator remarks that the soldier also receives free transportation.

Mr. REED. That estimate probably includes overhead charges.

Mr. STONE. I do not know as to that; I do not know what "overhead charges" are in such a case. I am speaking about what the soldier gets for his service, what the individual enlisted man actually gets out of it. He gets $15 per month and his clothing, his food, and his shelter; and that is all he does get. The other things are incidental and are mostly for the benefit of the Government, such as transportation in sending troops from one place to another. If items of that kind are charged to the soldier as a benefit to him, why, then, I do not know as to what total you might extend the estimate.

Mr. President, what I had in mind to say—and it will be very brief—is that I have thought for a long time that the wage of the private soldier, even with his keep thrown in, was altogether a very inadequate compensation. The soldiers are the poorest paid people in the public service. Their compensation is insignificant, if not disgraceful, as compared to that of any employee in the civil service of the Government. Even those who spend only two to four hours per day in washing the floors and windows of department buildings or of the Capitol—men and women who do the simplest kind of work in all the departments, receive from $60 to $100 per month.

Mr. President, the soldier of the Regular Army, at least in time of peace, holds a place in the public service which seems to me to be one of the most undesirable open to an American citizen. In large degree the service is menial, as we all know. The soldier is unlike the civil-service employee, who works seven or eight hours a day and after that goes out free to enjoy life in any way he or she pleases to enjoy it——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And with the way of promotion open to them?

Mr. STONE. Yes; and, as the Senator from Michigan says, the door of promotion is always before their eyes; they have something to work for. In a way it might be said also of the private soldier that there was before him some prospect of promotion in the ranks to noncommissioned places, and, possibly, up to commissioned officers, but such cases are very rare and, I fear, are not much encouraged. The fact is undeniable that in time of peace the service is an undesirable one, and not only undesirable, but it is the hardest of all public services. Soldiers have no Sundays of leisure; they have no hours of liberty, or seeming liberty, except by leave to go at a certain time and to return at a certain time; and if they do not obey the terms of that leave to the letter they are subject to the guardhouse as a punishment. That is the discipline of the Army, and it is a proper and necessary discipline, but comparatively it makes the service all the harder.

Mr. President, it is a hard, and to me uninviting, service for men of pride and spirit—I am speaking of the Regular Army—and yet, sir, I am glad to say that I believe the men who constitute our Regular Army are a body of fine, stalwart Americans. Those I see are certainly husky, fighting-looking chaps, and, I believe, would in the future, as the Regulars have in the past, render a splendid account in the face of any kind of danger. I believe that; but that being true, it is all the greater shame that they should get practically nothing by way of compensation for this arduous and dangerous service.

Mr. President, boys have gone into the Regular Army for one reason or another—the Lord knows what—and I have had mothers and other close relatives send word to me by letter many times to go to the War Department to get them relieved from the service, and so have you. I suppose there is not a Senator here of any length of service, or any Member of the other House, who has not had that experience time and again. The soldier boy may have been in some way helpful in supporting his mother. Many appealing stories have been written to me, as they have been to you, and I have gone, as you have, to see what could be done. We are all familiar with that. The boy was tired of the service, and the mother wanted him at home. I have always, in the interest of discipline, sustained the well-considered regulations of the War Department, and I do now; but the service, nevertheless, is a hard one.

Mr. President, we are in a war, and we are going to raise a half million men at once, we are told, and a little later a million and a half more. Patriotic advertising is all right; I have no objection to that; in fact, I approve of it.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. Just a moment; I would prefer not to be interrupted just now. Mr. President, when these boys go from their homes they frequently, if not usually, leave behind them people who are in a greater or less degree dependent upon them. We are now entering upon a great war. We are starting in to raise by far the greatest army in our history. They will not be Regulars, but they will be in the Army of the Nation for a great and remarkable service. We are to gather this vast array of valiant men through volunteering or by conscription. We are going to embark them upon the hazards of this great world war. Would you conscript men and send them into this war for $15 per month and a free uniform? I speak not now of volunteers; a man can volunteer to do whatever he wishes; but compulsory service is different. A workingman, with dependents, taken from good employment to incur the hazards of war at $15 per month, with hard-tack, sowbelly, sorghum, and coffee thrown in, may not feel the thrills we would like to have him feel when he marches to the front. Mr. President, $15 a month is a poor compensation for the most difficult and dangerous service that an American can render his flag or his country. It ought to be at least two or three times that amount. Suppose you made it $50 a month, and you had 2,000,000 men in arms. That would amount to $100,000,000 per month as pay to men you send to the front, and it would be a small money compensation at that.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator just a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. STONE. I was through, substantially.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator has made some statements that I do not think ought to go unchallenged or uncorrected.

Mr. STONE. Well, I want them corrected if they are wrong.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say to the Senator that the testimony before our committee shows that the average pay of the enlisted man is $266 per year. The pay of a million men, if you do not increase the pay but let them have the same pay that they get now, is $266,000,000.

Mr. STONE. I know that. I have stated that if you increased the pay to $50 per month it would be $100,000,000 a month—more than three times what you say.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am just calling the attention of the Senator to the fact that that is the pay alone, and that is not the largest part of the expense by any manner of means, so that if you increase the pay very substantially there is not any government in the world that could stand it. The United States pays the highest price for the enlisted men and the highest price for officers, too, so far as that is concerned, of any government in the world. Complaints are made now about the extravagance of the Military Establishment, but if the Senator prevails in his contention now——

Mr. STONE. I am not contending. I scarcely know what you have before us. I know you are talking here about wages being no inducement to enlistment, and about advertising being an inducement to enlistment. I think the advertising is all right, but I also believe that the men who engage in the most perilous of all services rendered the public should not receive the least pay of anybody in the service of the Government.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Will the Senator let me make a suggestion? I do not think the pay of a soldier ought to be attractive as a business investment.

Mr. STONE. No; nor do I. At best it is a poor business investment.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I think that in this Republic, if it is to remain a republic, the business of the soldier should be one of patriotic duty. The men who join the Army—the volunteers, 99 out of every 100, the men who do the effective service in time of war—suffer pecuniary sacrifices when they do it, and I for one do not want the Army made attractive to such an extent that it will be joined as a business investment. I hope, if I may say so in the Senator's time, that the American citizen may be permitted to show his patriotism in this time of stress by volunteering his services to defend the Nation's flag, and not be offended in the outset by conscription.

Mr. STONE. Well, I am for that, too, Mr. President. I like the idea of volunteers. We are about to vote, so we are told, five billions of credit. I think I shall vote for that. Three billions of it is to be by way of a loan to our European allies to aid them in prosecuting this war. I am going to vote for that if presented, and I am going to vote for it cheerfully since we are in the war for the purposes for which we have declared war. I am going to vote for it willingly. Having taken this step, national honor and good faith require us to stand by it. I shall also vote for two billions of bonds in addition, if deemed necessary, to inaugurate our part of the war. But, Mr. President, I would not hesitate so far as I am concerned to vote another billion to compensate the men who must go to the front—not to pay them for their patriotism, not to purchase them, not as a bounty, but that it might be the best-paid army in the world; and that the young men—the husbands and sons—who may go to uphold the flag, might have a little something to send to the dear ones at home for their comfort, since their own hands could be no longer employed to aid or to succor them.

I have said more than I intended, but I could not help saying a word for those who are to do the fighting.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to be inserted after line 10, page 41.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas offers an amendment, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. On page 41, at the end of line 10, it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That war having been declared, the President is hereby authorized to call for volunteers in numbers of 500,000 until as many men are enlisted in the Regular Army as are deemed necessary to bring the war to a successful conclusion.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN obtained the floor.

Mr. HUGHES. Will the Senator permit me to offer an amendment?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. HUGHES. I do not want to trespass on the Senator's time. I know he desires to have an adjournment, but I should like to use about five minutes in stating the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That will open up a discussion. I have no objection to the amendment being offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey offers an amendment, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. On page 19, line 3, it is proposed to strike out "$29,000,000" and insert "$58,000,000" and to insert a proviso as follows:

Provided, That hereafter the pay of enlisted men in the Regular Army shall be $30 per month, and that the pay of noncommissioned officers shall be increased in the same proportions.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I desire to have this amendment printed and pending. To-morrow I shall take occasion to submit some remarks and give certain information which I think I have on this subject. At present I will not detain the Senate.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. I wish to have printed in the RECORD a proposed amendment to the pending bill with an explanatory note attached thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that will be done.

The matter referred to is as follows:

AMENDMENT TO THE ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

(H. R. 13, 65th Cong., 1st sess.)

On page 25, after line 16, insert:

"Provided, That the act of June 3, 1916, paragraph 1, section 10, be amended to read as follows:

"'That the Medical Department shall consist of a Medical Corps, a Medical Reserve Corps within the limit of time fixed by this act, a Dental Corps, an enlisted force, a Nurses' Corps, and contract surgeons as now authorized by law; commissioned officers of which shall be citizens of the United States, and general officers equal in number to one-half of 1 per cent of the total number of officers in the Medical Corps, the senior of whom shall be a lieutenant general and chief of said department, responsible to the Secretary of War for the medical care and transportation of all diseased and injured men who fall under the control of the War Department in peace and war. He shall be directly responsible to the Secretary of War for those provisions which look to the preservation of the health of the men in all of the commands within the control of the War Department, and shall be, ex officio, a member of the General Staff.'"

JUSTIFICATION.

If this amendment should be adopted the Medical Corps of the Army would have the same proportion of general officers as was allowed to the Naval Medical Corps by the act of August 29, 1916, from which is clipped the following paragraph:

"Medical Corps: One-half medical directors with the rank of rear admiral to 4 medical directors with the rank of captain, to 8 medical inspectors with rank of commander, to 87½ in the grades below medical inspector: Provided, That hereafter appointees to the grade of assistant surgeon shall be between the ages of 21 and 32 at the time of appointment."

In considering this amendment attention is called to the amendment to the Army bill adopted by the Senate Committee on Military Affairs when the bill was before the Senate at the close of the last session (H. R. 20783, pp. 16 and 17, as reported to the Senate Feb. 27, 1917), which increased the general officers of the line and provided for three generals and three lieutenant generals, does away with the grade of brigadier general, and provides liberally otherwise for the general officers of the line of the Army.

At present there are about 430 officers in the Medical Corps and more than 1,400 in the Medical Reserve Corps (colonels, lieutenant colonels, majors, captains, and lieutenants), who would in time of war be under the direction of the officer in control of the Medical Corps, and there are over 6,000 enlisted men. In case of war these will have to be very largely increased in number.

All of the sick and the injured are under control of the Surgeon General, and he has to formulate and give the directions for the handling of all of this large number of men, as well as the direction to the officers and men of the Medical Department itself.

These functions are those of a general officer. The function of this general officer is that of a soldier, and the medical care of these men who have been injured is only a part of this work. It is an important part, but it is not so important as the collection of these wounded, preparing them so that they may be transported to the medical men in the hospitals at home without further damage. It is a soldier's work to collect, give medical attention to, and bring back in the face of oncoming troops, and to get these wounded men back to the base hospitals without further injury. No one but a trained medical soldier, familiar with the line soldier's ways and methods can do this.

Percentage composition of the present Army Medical Corps.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I understand that several Senators desire an executive session.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; that is true.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ADDITIONAL CAPITOL POLICE.

Mr. OVERMAN. I introduce a joint resolution authorizing the temporary employment of additional policemen for the Capitol Building and Grounds and the Senate and House Office Buildings, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 28) authorizing the temporary employment of additional policemen for the Capitol Building and Grounds and the Senate and House Office Buildings was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That in order to secure a more complete protection of the Capitol Building and Grounds and the Senate and House Office Buildings there shall be employed, while Congress is in session, and not later than the 15th day of July, 1917, by the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate and the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives, 50 additional policemen, who shall be appointed solely on account of their efficiency and special qualifications.

To enable the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay the necessary expenses of said employment, at a rate not to exceed $3 per day, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $6,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the same to be immediately available and to be paid upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the Committee on Rules of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 10, 1917, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, April 9, 1917.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou great Spirit, Life of our life, Light of our light, Father of our souls, our Republic is being weighed in the balance. Are we guided by divine light? Shall we be upheld by divine strength? Is it love, or hate? Is it democracy, or plutocracy? Is it the "divine right of kings," or the divine right of men? Are we on Thy side in consonance, therefore, with the eternals? If so, we shall not be found wanting. Is the flag we love, with all its sacred traditions, its glorious triumphs, bathed in the blood of true men, to be lowered, or shall it float on over us and for the world of mankind? These are the times that try men's souls. Guide us, O we beseech Thee, in Thy way. If we live or die, survive or perish, let it be for right and truth and justice. In His name, amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, for the information of Members of the House I desire to say that the House will adjourn to-day until to-morrow at 12 o'clock for the purpose of enabling the minority to finish at that time their committee assignments and for the purpose of considering another measure which the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] will present, which will not take much time. After that the House will adjourn until Wednesday for the purpose alone of permitting the introduction of an important war measure.

The SPEAKER. Now, the House is going to meet to-morrow and also on Wednesday.

Mr. RAINEY. Yes; and also on Wednesday with no particular business to discharge, and will meet on Thursday for the purpose of considering the war measure introduced on Wednesday, which it is hoped will be ready at that time, and which will be reported out, when it is ready, by the Committee on Ways and Means.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 12. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and prior years, and for other purposes.

SWEARING IN OF THE DELEGATE ELECT FROM HAWAII.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Tennessee rise?

Mr. AUSTIN. For the purpose of asking to have the Delegate elect from Hawaii sworn in.

Delegate Elect J. KUHIO KALANIANAOLE, of Hawaii, presented himself before the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing resolutions adopted by the Legislature of Massachusetts favoring the establishment of universal military and naval training.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a resolution adopted by the Leonidas Polk Bivouc and William Henry Trousdale Camp, of Tennessee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a series of resolutions adopted at a mass meeting in Springfield, Mo., on March 29.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a resolution which I hold in my hand.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by publishing some resolutions passed on the 4th of April by the Patriotic Alliance of Altoona, Pa.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MILEAGE, ETC. (H. REPT. NO. 2).

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations I report a bill making appropriations for certain expenses incident to the first session of the Sixty-fifth Congress.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 122) making appropriations for certain expenses incident to the first session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 12, the general deficiency bill, to disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks to have the general deficiency bill taken from the Speaker's table, to disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice one of the Senate amendments carries an appropriation of $100,000,000 to be expended under the direction of the President. Is there anyone in the legislative circle who has any information as to what is expected to be done with this money? Have there been any hearings, any statements made, or any information of any kind furnished either to the House or the Senate in reference to this sum?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have been informed that the Secretary of the Treasury made a statement before the Senate Committee on Appropriations relative to the item. He afterwards conferred with me, and I suggested that an estimate be transmitted to Congress in regular form. That has been done, but I have no detailed information as to the purpose of the appropriation. Before the last Congress adjourned, however, the Secretary of the Treasury spoke of the desirability in the event of hostilities with any Government of placing a large sum of money at the disposal of the President to do a number of things that might be highly essential in case the country were involved in war for which it might be difficult to anticipate in order to estimate more specifically. I said at that time that I was inclined to believe that, while it would not be, perhaps, willing to make large grants of money in lump sums without limitations to any department of the Government, the Congress would probably be willing to place an emergency fund at the disposal of the President to cover the situations that could not be readily anticipated.

I assume that the request for this $100,000,000 is for that purpose. The Senate amendment makes the appropriation immediately available and available until December 31, 1917, just the balance of the calendar year.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will remember that at the time of the Spanish-American War—he was not then a Member of the House—we appropriated $50,000,000 and placed it at the disposal of the President. My recollection is that a portion of that was afterwards covered back into the Treasury, not all being expended, although most of it was. In my judgment, much of it was squandered; that is, expended uselessly or extravagantly. I suppose it may be desirable for the balance of this fiscal year, and perhaps longer, to put some money into the hands of the President for emergency, but it seems to me it would be wise if we knew something about what it was asked for.

The other day an estimate came to the House for something over $2,000,000,000 for the War Department. Theoretically the estimate was in violation of the Constitution, though not practically, it being provided that it be appropriated until expended, although under the Constitution we can make no appropriation for the Army to expend for beyond two years.

Now, is it the expectation that Congress is simply to be dissolved? Will we say that we will turn over all the money that can be raised, either by taxation or bonds, to be expended by the direction of the President, who personally can not know what it is to be expended for or the need for expenditure, and practically end the theory that Congress is in control of the appropriations for the Government?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted to make a statement—and I speak only for myself, assuming that it may be of interest to the House to know what my attitude is—the form in which certain estimates were transmitted to Congress, if enacted into law in that shape, would mean that Congress was either abdicating all of its functions or was delegating all of its powers to the executive branch of the Government. I do not know what the policy of the administration is to be. I have no information upon it other than what is before the House and is available to all other Members of the House. I myself do not believe that any situation has arisen that makes it either necessary or desirable to establish in this country the most absolute autocracy the world has ever known in government. [Applause.]

I believe that a situation confronts the country when the Representatives of the people of the United States must exercise the functions and perform the duties and accept the responsibilities that the Constitution intends should be devolved upon them. I am in favor of giving to the administration every dollar required to prosecute the war, but I am not willing to act blindly or to permit some one else's judgment to be substituted for my own. [Applause.] I expect that in so far as requests are made for money to carry on the war, to carry on the Government, to make available without destroying the entire fiscal system of the Government the money that is necessary. We have a fiscal system entirely dependent upon the fiscal year, and I am not in favor of granting omnibus appropriations to be available indefinitely regardless of the law. We will need to provide money, additional money, for the balance of this fiscal year. We will need to provide additional money for the next fiscal year. And for fiscal years following the next fiscal year the regular appropriation bills should carry the sums necessary, so that the Congress and the people and the administration will know just what is to be available. I am not yet in that frame of mind that I believe it is necessary either to appropriate or to raise all of the money that may be required during the entire continuance of the war, if it is to last more than a year. I speak only for myself. I make this statement so that there may be no misunderstanding of my position. I believe that it would be the height of folly to begin a war to protect and maintain our rights by destroying the most essential features of our own system of government. [Applause.] It is not necessary. It should not be done. I expect that full information will be given to the Congress as to the needs of the Government, so that the Congress may act intelligently and wisely and patriotically. In these views I may not be in accord with anyone either here or in the executive departments of the Government. I hope I am, because I intend to perform my duty in the light I have. I desire to act in harmony with the executive departments of the Government, as I know everyone else in Congress does, but the estimates which have been transmitted are based upon conditions that can only result after considerable legislation is enacted by Congress. I do not believe that anyone can expect Congress, in anticipation of necessary legislation, to make appropriations that can not be available unless the legislation is enacted.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to hear the gentleman say what he does. I think we ought to make all the needed appropriations to carry on the war.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will permit me for a moment, I wish to add that at the outset, at this time, there may be reasons for placing some such sum as the Senate has proposed at the disposal of the President for meeting necessities which there would not be at any other time.

Mr. MANN. I appreciate that. I am in favor of making all of the appropriations which may be necessary or desirable. But I hope that we will not be asked, in the endeavor to spread democracy throughout the world, to abolish it at home. [Applause.] And if it is the idea that we shall place billions of dollars without any control whatever on our part over the money in the hands of the President or anyone else, that is an abolition of real democracy here.

Mr. MONTAGUE. May I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not know if I caught the gentleman correctly, and I would like to ask the gentleman if he was addressing himself to the $100,000,000 contingent fund to be placed in the hands of the President?

Mr. MANN. I addressed myself to estimates made for two or three billion dollars in four or five lines. The gentleman probably has not seen those estimates, but I have. They are printed and the gentleman can easily obtain them. He probably would not be willing to concede it would be possible——

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am asking purely for information, if the gentleman from Illinois will pardon me.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman got the information.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I may or may not.

Mr. MANN. We ought not to get into a panic. We ought to retain some coolness and remain somewhat sane. There is no occasion for us getting scared to death either about the war or our own functions.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York yield to me for about five minutes?

Mr. GARNER. I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] a question. So far as I have been informed other than by the estimates sent through the Treasury Department as to the amount of money that will be necessary to conduct the war for this fiscal year and the next, there has been no disposition on the part of the executive branch of the Government to ask for appropriations without such limitations as Congress thinks should be placed upon them, with such directions as it may see proper to make as to their expenditure. I know from conversation with the Secretary of the Treasury that it is not his idea, in sending in the estimates as he did, that Congress should not make the appropriations and direct their expenditure as it has done heretofore in the appropriation bills. I will say that to the gentleman for his information.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman in reply that the estimates that came in the other day came in the form of an item of appropriation, as is usually the practice of the department in submitting estimates, and it was proposed in one of them to appropriate two and a quarter billion dollars to be expended by the Secretary of War, but with no statement, no control, no limitation whatever. Now, if that was just for the information of Congress, very well. But I hope we will not be asked to make appropriations in that form.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] yield to me for two or three minutes?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has the floor.

Mr. MADDEN. I asked the gentleman if he would yield to me for three or four or five minutes?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, in this connection I would like to say that there ought to be the closest kind of cooperation between the executive and the legislative branches of the Government, and I have taken the liberty this morning to introduce a bill for the creation of a committee on the conduct of the war, the provisions of which I will read to the House for its information now. I read:

Be it enacted, etc., That a joint committee shall be appointed composed of six Members of the Senate, including four Democrats and two Republicans, and six Members of the House of Representatives, including three Republicans and three Democrats, to be known as the "Joint Committee on the Conduct of the War." The membership of such committee shall be designated by the respective committees which select the members of the regular standing committees. Such committee shall sit during the sessions or the recesses of Congress, shall make a special study of the problems arising out of the war, shall confer and advise with the President of the United States and the heads of the various executive departments, and shall make report to Congress from time to time in its own discretion, or when requested to do so by either branch of Congress. Such committee shall have power to act by subcommittee or otherwise, and to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses, and to employ such clerical, expert, and stenographic assistance as shall be necessary, and to pay the necessary expenses of such committee there is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000, to be paid out upon the audit and order of the chairman or acting chairman of said committee.

Now, the purpose in introducing this bill for the creation of this committee was to make it possible to bring the legislative and the executive branches of the Government into close cooperation. It seems to me they ought to be in the closest kind of cooperation. Such a committee was organized by both Houses of Congress during the Civil War, and the House voted unanimously for its creation, and there were only three votes against the creation of such a committee in the Senate. That committee did a vast amount of good work.

This committee during the recess of Congress and during the sessions of Congress might investigate the propriety of the expenditure of money. It might ascertain whether or not contracts were being let at exorbitant figures, and whether things were being conducted as they ought to be conducted. As a matter of fact, everybody realizes that we ought to do everything we can to aid the President in the performance of the duties he is called upon to perform in connection with the conduct of this war, and in order to do that we ought to place ourselves in a position to be advised by him and to advise him and to advise with him and with the heads of the departments.

The truth is that in order to conduct this war as it should be conducted there ought to be Members of the House and Members of the Senate appointed to the Cabinet, so that they might be able to come in here and represent the activities of the executive branches of the Government. In that way we would have close cooperation; we would have harmony of action; we would then be in a position to do the thing that would conduct the war to a successful conclusion. The Congress of the United States is responsible to the people of the United States. It is called upon to levy the taxes upon the people of the United States.

I see by this morning's papers that the first thing that is to be called for is $6,750,000,000. If that statement in the newspapers is true, we are beginning with our expenditures where the European nations are ending theirs; and, while we ought to do everything we can to facilitate the conduct of the war and to aid the President in discharging the responsibilities which are imposed upon him, we ought not to act blindly. We ought to be patriotic, and we ought to investigate; and the more the expenditures are to be the more careful the investigations ought to be; and I submit, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, that this committee that I have proposed ought to be appointed.

I presume the bill will go to the Committee on Rules, and I shall press the consideration of it before that committee. I hope that the committee will be authorized and appointed, and that such men will be appointed on the committee as will cooperate heartily with the President of the United States and with every executive branch of the Government to a successful conduct of the war upon which we are now about to engage. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I think all of us are agreed that Congress should not and will not abrogate its functions in controlling both the raising and the expending of revenues. But I think that all of us should realize that most of the detailed legislation that takes place in normal times would have the value only of hampering the doing of those things that need to be done expeditiously, and that we of necessity have got to give to the administrative officers a leeway that would not be given in normal times.

Now, it is not contemplated, I believe, by anybody that the estimates shall be voted in the limited form in which they have been submitted. I happen to have examined into some $900,000,000 of items that go to make part of that estimate of $2,400,000,000. The details are full, and I have no doubt that those details will be laid before the proper committee and be considered in detail, and that the bills as reported will be reported much more in detail than any estimate now submitted; but if we should undertake to specify with the detail that we do ordinary appropriations, it would be a very grave mistake. I can speak of one matter, because I am perhaps familiar with it more than with other matters in connection with national defense.

In consideration of the fortification bill Congress has in the past been given the utmost information, more information than perhaps any Government has ever given touching that character of work. I should consider it to be a very fatal mistake if in appropriating moneys for the fortification of America and for the guns and ammunition for the mobile Army we should undertake to restrict the expenditures in the way we do in normal times. I am quite sure that we can work out a system whereby the Congress will know the essential things that it ought to know before appropriating money, without undertaking to tie the hands of the departments by a lot of restrictions at a time when time itself is of more value than anything else.

Now, just another word. A remark was made about estimates contemplating an expenditure at the beginning of this war equal in amount to those that have been made by some of the European nations after several years of war. Those expenditures, made by European nations, would not have been necessary to the extent they have been if sufficient expenditures had been made earlier and if there had been a proper appreciation of the need and the magnitude of the task that those Governments were undertaking, and at this particular time Congress can make no more fatal mistake than in undertaking to curtail or to slow down the necessary activities of the Government if this war is to be prosecuted, as the resolution declaring war said it was, by the pledge of all the resources of the United States. [Applause.] And I hope that in the consideration of measures that will come here gentlemen will realize that of necessity we have got to leave administrative matters to administrative officers to an extent that heretofore we have not, and that we as individual Members must frequently accept statements of those who are given information that can not be made public as to the need and the wisdom of making particular appropriations.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman may have noticed in the papers within the last two days certain cablegrams, one from Rome, indicating that the Italian Government is grateful that the Government of the United States is about to make it a loan, and another from Petrograd indicating that the Russian Government, such as it now is, is also grateful in anticipation of a loan that the United States is to make to it. No such information as to loans having come to the Congress of the United States, does not the gentleman think it is the part of wisdom in Congress to at least ask for information in matters of this kind before it makes these tremendous lump-sum appropriations?

Mr. SHERLEY. Unquestionably; and I am not in any sense criticizing gentlemen for asking for information. I was trying to call attention to the fact that the Congress will of necessity occupy a different relationship in regard to the details of appropriations than it would in normal times.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In the matter of loans the gentleman agrees, I think—the earlier part of his statement would at least indicate it—that the Congress of the United States ought to be informed if loans are to be made to Italy, or to Russia, or to England, or to France, or to any other country. The Congress ought to be informed of that before the foreign nations are informed of it. Does not the gentleman think so?

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, well, the gentleman from Pennsylvania is assuming what I do not know to be true, that the statement of the press indicates that there has been conveyed in any formal way to the foreign Governments information that loans of a certain size will be made to them. Speaking for myself, I believe that the country can do no more effective thing than to help the credit of the allies by the credit of the United States, and I believe that if it is to be done, the sooner it is done the better for the result that is to flow from it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That being the gentleman's view—from which other gentlemen might differ, and the gentleman being well posted upon the constitutional prerogatives of Congress—as well posted as any man in the House—does he not think that Congress should be informed in advance of matters of that kind?

Mr. SHERLEY. I have no doubt that Congress will be advised touching a matter of that sort before it is consummated.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. BORLAND. What the gentleman is discussing, however, at this time is not the question of making loans to foreign Governments, but the question of the expenditure of money placed in the hands of the administrative officers of the Government. Is not that true?

Mr. SHERLEY. The question of loans was brought up by the gentleman from Pennsylvania; but the point I want to emphasize—because I think it is exceedingly important that the Congress should have it in mind—is that it is absolutely impracticable and will serve no good purpose to undertake to make appropriations in the detailed manner in which appropriations are ordinarily made. By that I do not mean to say that committees of Congress ought not to have detailed information, just as detailed as the time and the facilities of men can make it, before appropriating sums of money; but when we appropriate them we must appropriate them in more general language. I do not mean by that to appropriate billions in three lines, but I do mean that all of the restrictions in regard to legislation that are ordinarily placed upon supply bills, the provisions that are carried ought not to be carried now, and if carried will have only the effect of tying tremendously the activities of the Government.

Mr. BORLAND. I so understood the gentleman.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. I want to ask the gentleman from Kentucky if he is willing to state now to the House in what manner would the bill proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] embarrass the House or the administration?

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not prepared at this time to discuss the proposal of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] touching a joint committee of the House and Senate to aid the administration in the conduct of the war. That is a proposition so far-reaching that I would not want to commit myself upon it.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. I do not take it that it commits anybody; but it looks to me like there is a great deal of wisdom in the bill proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]. In view of the fact that both the House and the Senate, as the gentleman says, will be advised from time to time, it seems to me that the joint committee proposed by the gentleman would be of inestimable value to the House and to the individual membership of this House in order that we may intelligently vote these appropriations. We all want to do whatever the administration wants. I for one, on this side of the House, think there is wisdom in the bill of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not want to discuss that further than to say that I can imagine nothing more unfortunate than for Congress to undertake to determine the method of conducting the war. Congress, by virtue of its size, is peculiarly adapted to determine great policies; but, from its size also, it is not a body that can conveniently perform executive and administrative acts essential to the vigorous prosecution of a war.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. The gentleman has indicated to the House that he has no doubt the House would be constantly advised and in a proper way, but he does not indicate what that way is. This bill points out the way by which it can be properly advised, and it is easy to inaugurate, so that we can start off together. I would like to be advised somewhat in advance, and this seems to be the only way that we can be so advised.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman will appreciate that I have no right to undertake such a task as the gentleman proposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I want to call attention to the estimate submitted the other day to the House under the date of April 5 in a letter of transmittal made to the Speaker of the House of Representatives by Secretary McAdoo:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 4, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to forward herewith for transmission to Congress a special estimate of appropriations of $2,932,537,933, required by the War Department for the period of one year from the date the appropriations become available.

It is considered imperative that the amount estimated for be appropriated immediately for military expenditures necessary for the national defense.

Very respectfully, NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

The letter of estimate from the Secretary of the Treasury, dated April 4, says:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, April 5, 1917.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, copy of a communication of the Secretary of War of the 4th instant, submitting a special estimate of appropriation for national defense, War Department, in the sum of $2,932,537,933, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended.

Respectfully,

W. G. MCADOO, Secretary.

Now, gentlemen will not understand, unless they understand the method of sending estimates of appropriations to Congress, that in sending estimates the department that prepares the estimates prepares the exact language which it desires to become incorporated in the appropriation law. They prepare the exact language and submit it to the House or Senate for the consideration of that body, and especially by the Committee on Appropriations, which prepares the bill. This estimate so submitted reads this way:

Estimates of special appropriations required by the War Department.

WAR DEPARTMENT.

National defense (War Department): For military expenditures under the War Department necessary for the national defense, and for each and every purpose connected therewith to be expended by the Secretary of War under such regulations as the President may prescribe, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended (submitted), $2,932,537,933.

Now, probably, as gentleman says, this estimate was submitted in this form only to indicate the total amount to be appropriated. Very well. But the estimate in the form it was submitted was designed to be enacted into law in that shape. That ought not to be done, in my opinion, and the department ought to submit estimates more in detail than are contained in this estimate. The Congress ought to know something about what it is appropriating for, as well as the total amount to be appropriated.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, I thoroughly agree to the statement he has just made, and I have no doubt that the detailed items and reasons will come in. As I stated a few moments ago, I took the trouble, on my own initiative, to look into the sums in connection with the coast-defense matters and heavy ordnance and ammunition. They have been detailed to a degree that was surprising, considering the labor that was involved in such a work, and I have no doubt that estimates will come in in very much greater detail than the one the gentleman has just read.

Mr. MANN. I called attention to it solely because the executive officers whose business it is to spend money rarely, in my observation, ever look at the matter of appropriation from the point of view of those who provide the money or those who furnish the taxes that make the money. I think it is advisable publicly to call attention to the matter in order to aid the executive officers to see our point of view.

Mr. GARNER. May I say that in calling the attention of some of the executive officers to the method of sending estimates they told me they intended to furnish full detailed statements of what these sums were required for, and that it was their intention to give to Congress all the information that they possibly could? I agree with the criticism of the gentleman from Illinois that Congress is entitled to know every purpose for which money is to be expended. Possibly it would be better if the estimates contained full detailed statements.

Mr. MANN. I am very glad that some gentlemen on that side of the House who have access to the administrative officers have already called their attention to the form of the estimate. I did not know that that had been done. I fully appreciate the desire of gentlemen on that side of the House to preserve, as I believe, the rights of the people and the House.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it will have to be borne in mind here and elsewhere that there is an express and explicit declaration in the Constitution of the United States that no appropriation for the Army can be for a period of more than two years.

Mr. MANN. Evidently the gentlemen who drew the estimate that I have referred to had not read that provision of the Constitution.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is unfortunate that the estimate was couched in that form, because it not only asks an appropriation in a manner that would be in contravention of a specific provision of the Constitution of the United States, but the estimate does not conform to the antideficiency laws which were enacted by Congress to make it possible to have appropriations made in a more effective and systematic manner than had been the practice theretofore.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to state in addition to what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] stated about that estimate, that if the Congress should make the appropriations, however much in detail they may be submitted to the committee—that is, the items of appropriations making up that lump sum—after the appropriation bill is passed, the only limitation on the department officials in the expenditure of the money would be the language in which the appropriation is carried; so it seems to me that the estimates to be submitted in the future ought to be more in detail, so far as the language of the estimate is concerned, rather than to have a detailed statement of what they propose submitted in the Book of Estimates, virtually privately submitted to the committee. The language ought to be submitted in detail, so that when the money is expended the specific authority would be carried in the bill to expend that sum of money for that particular purpose.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, before the question is put, it is but fair to state that there is complete harmony of opinion in the House as to the necessity and the desirability of furnishing all the moneys required, and that there will be no difficulty in so framing the appropriations so as to safeguard their expenditure, without embarrassing the administration. That may be a difficult task, but I believe it can be done.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed the following conferees: Mr. FITZGERALD, Mr. EAGAN, and Mr. CANNON.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. SHERWOOD, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for 10 days, on account of important business.

RESIGNATION FROM A COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following resignation from a committee, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker of the House of Representatives:

I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Respectfully, yours, CARL C. VAN DYKE.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

RESIGNATION OF A MEMBER.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following resignation of a Member from the House, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

FRANKLIN, PA., April 3, 1917.

To the Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker of the House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: Having been elected at the election in November, 1916, as Representative from the twenty-eighth congressional district of the State of Pennsylvania, I have this day transmitted to the governor of the State of Pennsylvania my resignation of the office, and I do hereby resign the said office of Representative from the twenty-eighth congressional district of the State of Pennsylvania in the House of Representatives of the United States of America.

Respectfully, yours,

O. D. BLEAKLEY.

The SPEAKER. The resignation will be filed in the archives of the House.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a short resolution adopted by Mountain City Lodge, No. 48, Knights of Pythias, Fairmont, W. Va.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner stated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT BUILDING.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. —) authorizing the use of the new Interior Department Building by the War and Navy Departments.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy are hereby authorized to use the new Interior Department Building, or such portions thereof as may be necessary, for accommodation of the War or Navy Department, respectively, during the war with Germany; and the custody of said building during such occupancy shall be under the control of the superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department buildings.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, where is this request from?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I would state, as is probably well known to the House, the War and Navy Departments have branches all over the city of Washington, paying considerable rents, scattered in distant parts of the city, and it has been thought that if this arrangement could be made the Navy Department could move out of the present building, and the State department also. There would be room enough for both of them in this new building, giving the old building up entirely to the War Department, and every branch of that service could be housed in that building. This would enable the Navy and the War and the State Departments, which are the important departments pending this war, to have all of their bureaus, all of the branches of their service, under the same building, so that they may act quickly and expedite the public business. This has been thought advisable by the Navy and the War Departments.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, there are some things that the gentleman has overlooked. The sundry civil appropriation bill carries a complete force for the new Interior Department Building, including the superintendent, and if such a resolution as this is to be enacted provision must be made for the continuation of the accommodations of the bureaus of the Interior Department which were to have moved into this new building by the 1st of May. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the resolution for the present, until the matter can be looked into fully.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I will state also to the gentleman that the Geological Survey and the Bureau of Mines, and, I think, the Reclamation Service all expected to get into this new building between now and July 1. No appropriation has been made for those bureaus, and, so far as I am informed, their leases on their present quarters expire very soon.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Florida whether he has inquired as to the availability of the new Department of Labor Building for utilization by the War Department, and also whether the Interior Department has not already begun to move into the Interior Department Building? I passed this new building yesterday and I noticed they are already taking possession of the building. I think before we should proceed on a resolution of this importance some investigation should be made by the committee, so that we may know the status of the respective buildings that are available for occupancy.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will state my information is that the building is not at present occupied by anyone.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman taken the matter up with the Secretary of the Interior in order to learn the status of the bureaus of the Interior Department with regard to their contemplated moving into the new building?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No; I have not.

Mr. MONDELL. Should not that be done before Congress takes action?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to yield to the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. AUSTIN.

The SPEAKER. Yield what?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. For the purpose of making a statement. I yield the floor, then.

Mr. FLOOD. Before the gentleman yields the floor, I would like to ask a question. Does the resolution contemplate moving the State Department out of its present home?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will say this, Mr. Speaker: The resolution does not; but I am informed by officials in the Navy Department that there is ample room in this new building for both the Navy and the State Departments, if it is thought advisable that the State Department go there. This resolution simply directs that the War and Navy Departments, or either of them, be given the privilege of occupying the building during the pendency of the war with Germany.

Mr. FLOOD. Occupy the new building?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. This does not mention the State Department at all.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I was at the Navy Department last Friday and talked with a number of officials of that department about the congested and crowded condition at present, not to anticipate the increase of force necessary to the war condition, and visited a number of rooms and saw the overcrowded conditions at this time. I understand the Secretary of State has written a letter to the President urging that the new building constructed for the Interior Department be used for the War Department and permit the Navy Department and the State Department to use the entire War, State, and Navy Building until the close of the war. There will be sufficient room in the new Interior Building for all the activities of the War Department and the additional work incident to the war and also ample provision for the two or three bureaus of the Interior Department which are overcrowded and congested. Now, the Navy Department is going to be forced to add a wooden addition to the present War, State, and Navy Building between that building and the White House covering the street there unless some relief of this kind is immediately granted. There is not a more congested public building in Washington City than the War, State, and Navy Building. That fact has been recognized by Congress and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, because provision has been made for the securing of a lot for the erection of a building so as to accommodate these overcrowded departments.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the present Mills Building, now occupied by the Department of Labor, will soon be vacated, certainly before the end of the fiscal year, when they take possession of their new building which is being erected in the neighborhood, and the building which was formerly used as a naval annex will be available for the office force for the surplus activities of one of these departments. Now, these proposals have been before the subcommittee of the legislative, judicial, and executive appropriation bill. In fact, I think it would be indeed rash, without consulting the heads of these various departments, to pass this resolution now and maybe create confusion worse confounded. Certainly such a resolution should not be enacted without investigation by some committee of the House.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I insist that all the War Department activities should be under one roof during this war emergency, and not scattered over the city. There is no such condition confronting the Interior Department. I believe the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of State will approve of this change. Of course, we will find, perhaps, the Secretary of the Interior opposed to it, naturally wanting to go into this new home for his department; but it is not a question of the personal preference or desire of a Cabinet officer. The question is, What is for the best interests of the Government in an emergency of this kind? If we would investigate it a week or a month we would arrive at the same conclusion, as we all know it is an actual fact that the War and Navy Departments' forces are going to be almost doubled or trebled, and new or additional space is absolutely necessary and essential.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Granting all that the gentleman says is true, under the appropriation bill which passed last Congress for this fiscal year the Bureau of Mines, the Geological Survey, the Reclamation Service, and any other bureau in the Interior Department which is not now housed in a Government building, are expected to go into the Interior Department. There was absolutely no provision made for those bureaus and they are now contemplating moving very shortly. Does not the gentleman think it would be well to take the whole matter under consideration and have the resolution, if it is to be passed, take care of all these activities so that no bureau may be deprived of quarters?

Mr. AUSTIN. This building will be sufficiently large for the three bureaus of the Interior Department which need immediate relief and also provide ample room for the War Department.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The resolution does not so provide. It turns it absolutely over to these other departments and makes no provision.

Mr. AUSTIN. The gentleman can offer an amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to my handsome friend from Wyoming, the coming Senator from that State.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if no one has the floor, I want to say a word.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I wanted to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have yielded to the coming Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Of course we are glad he is coming, but will the coming Senator from Wyoming permit me to ask the gentleman this question? Does this resolution provide that this new building shall be occupied by both the War and the Navy Departments, or by one or the other?

Mr. AUSTIN. One or the other. It is absolutely necessary for the State and Navy Departments to be under the same roof and in close touch in view of their cooperative work.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the building under consideration, known as the Interior Department Building, was constructed for the various bureaus of the Interior service. It was planned and arranged with special reference to the needs of those services. It is not so arranged as to so well accommodate any other public service. It is possible that a situation has arisen under which it may prove to be wise to turn that building over to the War Department and the Navy Department, but if that is true we ought to know all about it. All of the Cabinet officers interested in those departments that are to be affected should be consulted, and I have no doubt that among them they will be able to arrive at an understanding and make a recommendation to the House relative to the matter. But until that is done it does not seem to me that it is wise—it certainly is not necessary—at this time to take action. Let us know what the Secretary of the Interior thinks about it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, still reserving the right to object, we have had a good deal of pressure from all the departments of the Government for additional Government buildings. Finally we have provided and equipped the Department of the Interior with a new building, and it is just ready for occupancy. As long as this war lasts the State Department, the War Department, and the Navy Department will use it as an excuse for asking a great many things which they ought not to have, as that is human nature. Now, without consulting the Interior Department, they propose to take the Interior Department Building for two of these departments. Let us remember that we will still be at home in the country, notwithstanding the war. We will still have our industries going on, notwithstanding the war. All business and all governmental activities at home will not cease because of a war either on the ocean or on the other side of the water. We ought not to lose sight of the fact that it is just as important, or perhaps more important, to develop our industries at home just now than it is to send either money or men abroad. [Applause.] Why not take the Agricultural Department Building for the Navy Department? Why not take the new Department of Justice Building for the Navy Department? Why not turn out everybody for the Navy Department? The Navy now has an annex fairly well equipped. They may need some additional room. Very likely they will. The War Department will need a considerable amount of additional room if the plans suggested in the newspapers go through. I do not think we ought because of this contingency, just because of the cry of war emergency, rob a department to whom we have given a building in order to place some other department in that building.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with gentlemen in reference to taking somebody's building away from him. I think that this Congress has the right to say where these departments shall go. This is a building constructed at the will of Congress. It is true that it was originally constructed for the Interior Department, but we are met now with an emergency. The Navy Department and the State Department and the War Department are certainly to-day the most important departments in the Government. It is necessary that these bureaus of the different departments be in close proximity to each other. It is necessary that the Secretary of the Navy have all the employees of that department assembled within easy reach. The Secretary of War likewise. So also with the Secretary of State. The conditions are such, as stated by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN], that unless something is done it will be absolutely necessary for the Navy Department to build a wooden structure adjoining the War, State, and Navy Building in order to house its activities.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me, as this is a request only for temporary use, that without consulting anybody this Congress has the right and it is its duty to put the officials of the Government in such position that they can render the most effective and the most efficient service to the Government. I offer this resolution, Mr. Speaker, principally in order that there might be an expression of thought. Something must be done. These departments must be housed in close proximity to each other. They must be under the same roof, and I have offered this resolution in order to accomplish that. But for the present, Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to withdraw the resolution, and I give notice that I shall again offer it within a day or two.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida withdraws the resolution.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DYER. The distinguished Speaker of this House, when he was accepting a reelection for the fourth time as Speaker, made the statement the other day that all people of this country, of all nationalities and of all religions and of all color, were loyal to this Government. I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that there is any question about that in the minds of any good American citizen.

In the press a few days ago we saw a statement to the effect that there was an effort of the Imperial German Government to organize the colored race to fight against the United States Government in certain sections of the Union. I desire to have the Clerk read a statement coming from one of the leading colored men of the South, Roscoe Conkling Simmons, of Louisville, Ky., upon the continued faithfulness of that race to their country and Government. Not that this evidence is needed, Mr. Speaker, because we need but read the history of our country to see that this race—now of ten million—has always exhibited a pure and genuine patriotism. In every war this people has fought for their country. It was so in the Revolution; it was so in the War of 1812; it was so in the Civil War, the Spanish War, and the Philippines and Mexico. It will be so in this war. Mr. Simmons truly speaks the facts in this statement of his.

The Clerk read as follows:

We have a record to defend, but no treason, thank God, to atone or explain. While in chains we fought to free white men—from Lexington to Carrizal—and returned again to our chains. No negro has ever insulted a flag. No negro ever struck down a President of these United States. No negro ever sold a military map or secrets to a foreign government. No negro ever ran under fire or lost an opportunity to serve, to fight, to bleed, and to die in the Republic's cause. Accuse us of what you will—justly and wrongly—no man can point to a single instance of our disloyalty.

We have but one country and one flag, the flag that set us free. Its language is our only tongue, and no hyphen bridges or qualifies our loyalty. To-day the Nation faces danger from a foreign foe, treason stalks and skulks up and down our land, in dark councils intrigue is being hatched. I am a Republican, but a Wilson Republican. Woodrow Wilson is my leader. What he commands me to do I shall do. Where he commands me to go I shall go. If he calls me to the colors, I shall not ask whether my colonel is black or white. I shall be there to pick out no color except the white of the enemy's eye. Grievances I have against this people, against this Government. Injustice to me there is, bad laws there are upon the statute books, but in this hour of peril I forget—and you must forget—all thoughts of self, or race, or creed, or politics, or color. That, boys, is loyalty.

[Applause.]

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes on the subject of the loyalty of the negroes?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I have in my district over 100,000 negroes. Few of them are voters, but I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that there never was a more loyal race of people than the black race. [Applause.] And those 100,000 negroes in the ninth district of Alabama will produce as large a percentage of men who are willing to fight for the American flag as any other 100,000 people in the whole United States.

I was raised among negroes, played with them in my childhood, and think I know their traits. They have many splendid qualities, and it is fitting that some southerner should stand up here and speak for them now when the cowardly finger of suspicion is pointed at them. I know that they are loyal; I know that they are brave; I know that they will make splendid soldiers, and if the time should come when this Nation needs soldiers, the faithful blacks down in the black districts of the South will come to the front like heroes.

The cheapest activity of patriotism is in spy-hunting and calling in question the loyalty of those of other races. It is an unworthy patriotism that confines itself to suspicion of other Americans because they may have been born in some foreign land or may belong to some other race. More than ever is it unworthy when the object of its attack is the American Negro, who has no other home than the United States and never knew any other flag than the Stars and Stripes.

I have recently regretted very much to see emanating from one or two sources charges questioning the loyalty of the Negro race. I have regretted to see this because it seems to me that those charges and suspicions are in themselves disloyal in their effect. They have the tendency to breed dissension. They have the tendency to stir up strife among our people. They are most ungenerous when they point the unjust finger of suspicion at this lowly and loyal race that have so few spokesmen and so few to stand up for them.

I want to say to you, gentlemen, that the negroes are absolutely loyal, and they will fight, too. They will make brave soldiers, and you will find that, when properly led, they will do their duty as American soldiers, they will stand fire at the front, and will bravely suffer and die along with the balance of us. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I will.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Does not the gentleman believe that in view of this beautiful tribute that he has paid to them they are entitled to the full rights of citizenship and the right to vote? [Applause.]

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Well, the gentleman has asked a question that might embarrass some men in public life, but it does not embarrass me. I want to say to the gentleman that, living far away from the South, neither he nor anyone like him can have a proper comprehension of the race question. It would not be well to give the vote indiscriminately to the negroes. That would not be well. I have not the time to explain why this is true. But the door of hope must be held open to the black race and the right of suffrage given to those who are most worthy of it. The Negro race should be encouraged to look forward to the time—some time in the future—when they shall have been fully fitted and qualified to receive all the rights of citizenship. No true southerner will take any different position. [Applause.]

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

Mr. LANGLEY. I live nearer the Southland than does the gentleman from Indiana. The gentleman from Alabama speaks of "the door of hope." Does not the gentleman think that the State of Alabama has closed "the door of hope" to the black race?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Oh, the gentleman juggles with political questions. I regret to see him do that in this time of crisis.

Mr. LANGLEY. No; it is a serious question of justice to a race that you extol.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will withhold that motion for a moment.

Mr. RAINEY. I do.

PRINTING THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the President's message delivered last Monday may become a House document, and that as many copies as can be printed for $500, the usual limit under the law, be printed and placed for distribution in the folding room.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the address delivered by the President to the two Houses of Congress last Monday night be printed as a public document, to a number that will not exceed $500 in cost.

Mr. MANN. It has already been printed as a House document.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. A House document?

Mr. MANN. Yes; it has already been printed as a document, but I have no objection.

Mr. BARNHART. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker—and I do not intend to object—$500, the amount that may be expended in printing a document by the House, without the concurrence of the Senate, will furnish 224,000 copies of the President's speech if printed on book paper, and if printed on the ordinary paper that we use in printing speeches we can get 334,000 copies. I think it would be well that the gentleman from Mississippi specify as to which of these we ought to have. If we order 224,000 copies printed on book paper we will get about 500 copies each, and if we use the ordinary print paper we can have 750 copies each, or something like that.

Mr. MANN. Two hundred and fifty copies each will be more than we can use.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I want to amend my request, Mr. Speaker, by making it the ordinary print paper.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi amends his request and asks that this document be printed on the ordinary print paper. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. FOSTER. I want to ask the gentleman from Mississippi if that means the small type used in printing speeches?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. My information from the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART] is that it does not.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] moves that the House adjourn.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. RAINEY. I will withhold my motion for a moment.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. I want to introduce in the House several resolutions adopted at mass meetings held in my district, one particularly at Charleston, the capital of West Virginia, after 14,000 people had marched for three hours through a drenching rain, then assembled and adopted resolutions on the subject of their fidelity to the Government and the President of the United States. I hope it will be the pleasure of Congress to let them be read from the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. I would like to have the resolutions read, Mr. Speaker, unless objection is made. It would take only a few minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent that the resolutions referred to be read at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Fourteen thousand people, after marching for three hours in a drenching rain, assembled and adopted resolutions. I hope you will all be glad to hear them. You ought to be willing to hear them.

Mr. MANN. Oh, we can not make an exception. Every Member of the House has a lot of these resolutions, and if you begin to read them you shall not have time for the transaction of other business.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to print the resolutions referred to in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD two joint resolutions passed by the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing two joint resolutions passed by the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I renew the motion that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 10, 1917, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication of the Secretary of Commerce submitting an estimate of appropriation in the sum of $23,000 for additional watchmen and guards for the protection of property and building of the Department of Commerce in the District of Columbia for the balance of the fiscal year 1917 and the fiscal year 1918 (H. Doc. No. 12); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication of the Auditor of the Navy Department submitting an urgent estimate of appropriation for an additional clerical force for his office, to be immediately available (H. SENATE.

TUESDAY, April 10, 1917.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, in this time of peril to universal organized society which is to test the fiber of our own national life, we seek first of all to conserve those spiritual forces which have made us great as a nation. Thou hast called us forth from our place of security and peace to take our part in a struggle to maintain and perpetuate the rights of men. If it be Thy will that we lay upon the altar of humanity an offering of our treasure and of our lives, we shall gladly make the sacrifice in conformity to Thy will and in the working out of the Divine plan.

Give to us this day Thy grace and Thy guidance, that manfully, with faith unshaken and with courage undaunted, we may perform the duties that are now confronting us. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. BRADY and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 122) making appropriations for certain expenses incident to the first session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Chamber of Commerce of Honolulu, which will be inserted in the RECORD.

The communication is as follows:

HONOLULU, April 9, 1917.

The PRESIDENT OF SENATE,
Washington:

The following resolution has been unanimously adopted:

"Be it resolved, That the Chamber of Commerce of Honolulu, assembled in special meeting for the purpose this 9th day of April, 1917, does hereby unreservedly commend the action of the Congress of the United States in declaring war against Germany in order to safeguard the rights of our Nation and its citizens and in thus aligning ourselves on the side of civilization and humanity against unwarranted invasion and willful disregard of international obligations and human rights; and, further, that it does hereby pledge its full support to the President of the United States in all issues that shall ensue from the action thus taken."

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF HONOLULU.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication, which will be printed in the RECORD.

The communication is as follows:

NEW YORK, April 8, 1917.

Hon. THOMAS R. MARSHALL,
Vice President of the United States and Presiding Officer of the Senate.

DEAR SIR: On behalf of a great meeting of American citizens held in Carnegie Hall to-night to commemorate the proclamation of the Irish Republic in Dublin on Easter Monday, April 24, 1916, we have the honor to assure the Senate, through you, of our unswerving and devoted loyalty to the United States in the crisis which has arisen through the declaration of a state of war with Germany. We know we voice the sentiments of the great mass of citizens of New York of Irish blood, and, we believe, of the whole country, in giving that assurance.

The American Government has made its decision in the way prescribed by the Constitution, and all loyal citizens are bound to obey it, no matter what their opinions or attitude may have been before that decision was reached. Exercising our rights as American citizens, and believing that England's continued mastery of the sea would be injurious to all mankind and a serious menace to the interests of the United States—that an England victorious in this war would be America's most dangerous enemy—we steadfastly opposed the entry of this country into the European struggle. But the moment that Congress acted our opposition ceased, and we aligned ourselves unreservedly behind the Government, as our race has ever done in every crisis of the Nation's history from the Revolution and the War of 1812 to the Civil War and the War with Spain. Irish blood has been poured out freely on every battle field where the honor and interests of the United States were at stake, and that proud record will be maintained untarnished now and in the future. We affirm without fear of contradiction that no man can successfully challenge that record or minimize its importance in making America the great free country it is.

We feel, therefore, that this record entitles Ireland during the progress of this war to the special consideration of the American people and Government. Ireland is one of the "small nationalities" which need help against the oppression of a power which holds it by military force alone, against the wishes of the great majority of its people, stifles its economic life, and has driven from its shores in half a century many times more people than now inhabit it. Seventy years ago Ireland had a population of 8,500,000 and produced food enough for 17,000,000. Yet 1,000,000 people died of hunger or famine fever, and an exodus unparalleled in human history set in because the foreign Government which holds the country in bondage failed to take the most elementary measures to protect the people. Ireland's population, through the same deliberate misgovernment, is now reduced to a little over 4,000,000, though the country's magnificent natural resources render it capable of supporting 25,000,000.

Ireland is a distinct and separate nation, with all the attributes of nationhood, geographically, ethnically, and in the political and military capacity of her people. She has fought for her independence for over 700 years and has never relinquished her right. She reasserted that right with the blood of her sons and daughters one year ago and will do so again whenever the opportunity offers. She has always looked to America for sympathy and has received it in generous measure. We hope that sympathy will be continued until she takes her place among the nations of the earth.

America's entry into the war gives a great opportunity for permanently settling the Irish question and putting an end to one of the world's greatest scandals. This Republic is now in a position to demand from England the independence of Ireland, to be secured by consent and in a way that would be helpful to both America and England. England professes to be fighting for the small nationalities and for the faith of treaties. Ireland is as much entitled to her freedom as Belgium, Servia, Montenegro, or Roumania. She is deprived of that freedom by the British Government, which has a long record of broken treaties with Ireland. The last one was repudiated with brutal frankness by Lloyd George, the British Premier, in a speech in Parliament within a few days. Ireland, after 700 years of bitter experience, knows that she can not rely on England's good faith, and that her only salvation lies in complete separation and the establishment of an Irish republic on Irish soil. If that condition were brought about by friendly American intervention, instead of waiting until it can be effected by force, as it certainly will be some day, it would redound to the credit of this Republic and free Europe from a constant danger.

We appeal to the Congress of the United States to take such action as will secure the independence of Ireland, not at the end of the war, when "scraps of paper" may be safely torn up, but now, when America's intervention will count for more than at any time in the future and when her demand must receive consideration.

America freed Cuba and removed a blot from the Western Hemisphere. She now has an opportunity of freeing Ireland and setting up a sister republic in Western Europe as a beacon light of American liberty for the people of the Old World. We hope and pray that the opportunity will be availed of.

We respectfully request that this appeal be read to the Senate, inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and that favorable action be taken on it at an early date.

Respectfully, yours,

JOHN W. GOFF, Chairman.
JOHN JEROME ROONEY, Secretary.

Mr. HUSTING. I desire to present resolutions adopted April 5 at a patriotic mass meeting of citizens of Monroe, Wis., and ask to have them read. They are short.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

MONROE, WIS., April 5, 1917.

[Resolutions adopted at a mass meeting of the citizens of Monroe, Green County, Wis., April 5, 1917.]

Our Nation is facing a crisis. Never, since the attack on Fort Sumter caused Lincoln to call the country to arms in defense of its unity and integrity, has any administration been confronted with such grave responsibilities as at the present moment.

For a period of nearly three years the most terrible war of all history has been waged in the countries of the Old World. At the outset of this gigantic struggle our Government endeavored to assume an attitude of neutrality, and this attitude it has consistently and continuously striven to maintain. It has been a difficult and a perilous task. Our citizenship is made up of elements from all the warring nations, and it has been inevitable that opinions should differ among the various groups as to what constitutes neutrality, but no one can doubt that the Government, under the leadership of President Wilson, has done its utmost to steer a straightforward course.

Since the very beginning of our history as a Nation we have steadfastly stood for certain great principles vital to our own peace and security as well as to civilization and the progress of mankind. Among these have been the freedom of the seas and the right of any people to democratic government. Whatever may have been the causes underlying the conflict now raging circumstances have determined that both of these principles have become vitally involved.

Our President has borne during the past three years burdens calculated to test the courage, the forbearance, and the wisdom of any statesman the world has ever known. He has borne himself with a patience, a poise, a dignity, and a self-control almost unparalleled.

The history of the war reveals acts on the part of both groups of belligerents which our President has held to be violations of international law. He has protested against them all. The conditions of the conflict have determined that the acts of one group have been such that their final adjustment can be postponed without sacrifice of our national honor. Those of the other have not been of such a character. Reluctantly and after long and agonizing deliberation he has reached the conclusion that our very existence as a nation worthy of the name demands that we should recognize existing conditions as a state of actual warfare waged upon us by one of the nations. Our Congress, made up of representative men of our people, has been called in special session after having been at home in touch with their constituents. Their voice is practically unanimous in supporting the views of our President. As we deliberate upon these resolutions, one House has already declared a state of war in existence and the other will soon do so. Our Senators and Representatives, with inconsiderable exceptions, are pledging to the President their own support and that of the Nation. We are here to pledge to him and to them our united and enthusiastic loyalty.

We do this as a citizenship made up of many types and sprung from many lands. In days like these it is most eminently fitting and proper that we declare our undivided allegiance to our country. We invite all, from the humblest citizen to the highest official, emphatically and publicly to declare their American patriotism and their loyalty to the Stars and Stripes: Wherefore be it

Resolved by the people of Monroe, Wis., in mass meeting assembled, That we unanimously tender our unqualified services and our unstinted resources to the President and his advisers and to the Congress of our country, in every effort to maintain unsullied our national integrity and to preserve the sacred liberties of our people as a heritage from our noble forefathers, held in trust by us to be transmitted to our children; and be it further

Resolved, That whatever measures Congress and the President may find necessary to adopt in order to secure these ends, we, as patriotic American citizens, hereby pledge our whole-hearted, undivided, and loyal support.

C. H. DIETZ,
N. B. TREAT,
HENRY HOEHN,
Committee on Resolutions.
MAX G. BOOTH,
Presiding Officer.

Mr. HUSTING. I present resolutions adopted at a mass meeting of citizens at Green Bay, Wis., attended by 3,000 citizens, pledging their support to the Government. I ask to have the resolutions printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Loyalty resolutions adopted at Green Bay, Wis., mass meeting April 1, 1917.]

Whereas a gigantic conflict of arms is now being waged between most of the nations of Europe, and is even spreading to the peoples of Asia, the extent and virulence of which have never before been known in the history of the world; and

Whereas it has been the aim of the United States of America to observe a strict neutrality in such conflict, because by treaty stipulations and a century of practice we are on terms of peace and friendship with all the warring nations, and fervently desire to remain in such relations with them; and

Whereas the President of the United States has since the beginning of the conflict earnestly endeavored, with infinite patience under many adverse circumstances, to preserve such strict neutrality and has frequently assured the warring nations of his desire so to do, while at the same time preserving to our pepole all such rights as are possessed by them to the unrestricted travel and commerce of the sea, not only under treaty stipulations but also under the principles of international law and the dictates of humanity, which should govern nations while at war as well as in times of peace; and

Whereas for more than a century the United States have had a treaty with Germany, the nation with whom the crisis now threatening our peace is imminent, which is still in force and expressly assures to the contracting parties the very rights of travel and commerce which are now being and from the outset of the struggle have been insisted upon by President Wilson, as assured by such treaty as well as by the law which governs the sea; and

Whereas, in violation of this treaty agreement and of our rights as a Nation, not only under such treaty but the principles of international law, as well as the dictates of humanity, Germany now asserts her determination to prevent any commerce on our part with her European enemies and to destroy not only the property but the lives of our citizens without warning if they attempt either to travel or to carry their commerce in such restricted zones of the sea as she may see fit to proscribe; and

Whereas Germany has actually put into effect her said determination, and has, without warning, destroyed vessels carrying our commerce and the lives of our citizens, including helpless women and children, who from necessity or choice are traveling the high seas as sailors or passengers on such vessels, and now asserts anew her purpose to continue such lawless and inhuman conduct toward our people, with whom for a hundred years she has had and still has a treaty of friendship which she thus ruthlessly sets at naught; and

Whereas the people of the United States are a peace-loving Nation, and now earnestly desire, and are striving to preserve peace with all the nations of the world, and have ever been long-suffering and patient, as circumstances have required, to avoid a rupture with any foreign nation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That while peace is a condition earnestly to be desired it must be had only with honor; peace may not be bought with a forfeiture of our own self-respect nor the respect of the world; that the heritage of valor and unshaken courage, in the defense of the God-given rights of every American citizen to the enjoyment of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness on land and sea wherever he may go, which came down to us from the heroes of the Revolution and has ever been kept stainless by the blood of our soldiers and sailors in every war since our liberties were won must remain unsullied in this hour of trial; be it further

Resolved, That it is the duty of every American citizen, whether native or adopted, to stand firm for the fearless defense of American rights both on land and sea against assault from whatever source; that in this crisis, however threatening, duty calls upon every American citizen to give his unflinching and loyal support to President Wilson in every endeavor he is putting forth, not only to preserve the peace of the Nation but to fearlessly assert and defend its rights, especially against inhuman and murderous assault upon the lives and property of our people who are lawfully using the high seas; be it further

Resolved, That it is not our purpose to suggest how such rights should be asserted or defended, as such determination has been, under our system of Government, wisely committed to the President and his advisors and to the Congress, in whose wisdom and patriotism we must and do confide in the hope that without stain upon our national honor but always mindful of the untarnished valor and exalted patriotism and fidelity with which American institutions and American rights have ever been defended, these trusted servants of the people may not hesitate or falter in this great crisis in choosing such a course, whatever may be its cost, as shall redound to the everlasting honor and good of the Republic and the promotion of free institutions among the peoples of the world; be it

Resolved, That we, as citizens of Green Bay, in this mass meeting assembled, pledge anew our loyalty to our country and to American ideals and institutions; and hereby declare our firm and unwavering support of President Wilson in all the efforts he is putting forth, not only to preserve an honorable peace with all the warring nations but to assert and defend American rights against attack from whatever source.

Mr. CURTIS. I present a number of telegrams and petitions from citizens of Kansas, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the petitions were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TOPEKA, KANS., March 30, 1917.

Senator CHARLES CURTIS,
Washington, D. C.:

Newspapers are plastered with advertisements by the Emergency Peace Federation for appeals to protest against war with Germany. Germany's machinations are stupendous, and this we believe is another. Her ruthlessness is repulsive, and the majority of people in Kansas will support morally and physically any aggressive measures deemed necessary by the Government.

TOPEKA, KANS., April 2, 1917.

Hon. CHARLES CURTIS,
Washington, D. C.:

America has exhausted every honorable means of averting war. Diplomacy, arbitration, or forbearance are useless when we can not deal with Germany on a common plane. We can not keep peace with those who will not keep peace with us. We can not secure recognition of national or human rights from a nation that repudiates all such obligations. Our participation will be in self-defense. We are sheltered now only by England's navy and the allied armies and are shirking our obligations to them. For the preservation of national honor, essential rights and liberties, and of a civilization of 20 centuries' growth, we must meet Germany's virtual declaration of war with every man, every gun, every ship, and every other resource we can furnish. Show Kansas delegation.

A petition to the President of the United States of America and the Congress.

Whereas we have been informed by Members of Congress that probably one of the first problems before the coming Congress in extra session will be to provide for a system of military training; and

Whereas such a system, if applicable to nonresistant churches, would cause conscientious objection in our Mennonite Church, because of its tendency to foster the spirit of militarism, which easily leads to war; and

Whereas our church for more than four centuries has held war to be un-Christian and harmful to any country participating in it, which is testified to both history and by Christ, who said to one who drew the sword in defense, "All they that take the sword shall perish by the sword. Matthew xxvi, 52: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, a group of Mennonite Churches in and near Goessel, Kans., in joint session March 25, 1917, humbly petition our honored President of the United States of America and Congress to exert all their influence against any legislation that would foster the spirit of militarism and make military training compulsory even for those churches that conscientiously object to the same.

Prompted not only by religious convictions but also by true patriotism, which seeks the best of our beloved country, we submit this petition, grateful for all gracious considerations received in the past, and hoping for a continuation of the same in the future.

Very respectfully, yours, for our country,

W. B. UNRAU, Chairman
(And others).

FRAVEL, KANS., March 29, 1917.

Mr. CHARLES CURTIS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We, the undersigned, legal voters of the seventh congressional district of Kansas, respectfully request that you use your influence and vote against any compulsory military drill bill that may be introduced.

CARL D. BYRD

A petition and statement to the President of the United States and Congress.

Having been informed by Members of Congress that bills providing for compulsory military training are about to be introduced into Congress, we, as delegates of Mennonite Churches in Kansas and Oklahoma, wish to follow up the petitions lately sent to the President and Congress by the said churches and also by the All-Mennonite Convention held at Carlock, Ill., August 30–31, 1916.

In order to make more clear and impressive the said petitions we wish to make the following statement, prompted both by religious convictions and true patriotism.

Believing that war is un-Christian and detrimental to all nations participating in it, we are opposed to all legislation that fosters the military spirit, because a system of the proposed compulsory military training would do here what it has done in other countries. Even such branches of a military course that are commonly designated as noncombatant are not free from this objection.

Furthermore, we believe that section 59 of the national-defense act of 1916, Public Law No. 85, and section 58 of the Kahn bill, H. R. 92, Sixty-fourth Congress, and section 18 of the Chamberlain bill, S. 1, Sixty-fifth Congress, are open to objection on constitutional grounds, because they authorize the Government to pass judgment upon a question which many consider to be a matter of conscience and religion, namely, the question of what is essentially combatant or noncombatant military duty.

Grateful for all gracious considerations received in the past, we ask for a continuation of the same in the sense in which the Canadian Government has reassured the Mennonites of their complete exemption from military duty.

With assurances of true loyalty to our beloved country, we are,

Very respectfully, yours,

M. M. JUST,
President Mennonite Brethren,
Conference of North America,
Fairview, Okla.

H. W. LOHRENZ,
Vice President Southern District Mennonite Brethren,
Conference of North America,
Hillsboro, Kans.

Permit us to protest against declaring of war. Our country has been drained of provisions; crop conditions do not look good; war will make prices soar still higher, which may bring internal trouble. The Nation's honor can be satisfied some other way, and why let a few hundred rash people, who for purely mercenary reasons decide to risk their lives, drag one hundred million into trials unspeakable? We say, when the war is over make Germany pay for all the damage she has done us through her violations of international law, but do not now send our young men to the hell of war to avenge the lives and property of the few reckless ones whose insatiate desire for money took them into danger. Discretion is the better part of valor, and the pen is mightier than the sword.

Hon. CHARLES CURTIS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: We, the undersigned citizens of Herington and Hope, Kans., beg to inform you that we see no warrant for our declaring war against Germany without taking like action against England. England has also made itself guilty of violations of our American rights under international law. We believe a way out of the present crisis can and should be found without loss of honor. Norway, e. g., a far heavier sufferer, has remained out of the war with honor and without perpetrating what would be an act of unneutrality and injustice, and hence, too, an act against humanity. The welfare of our country and the necessity of preserving the millions of Europe from starvation make it imperative to keep peace. We shall stand by you in resisting any usurpation of what the Constitution makes the sole right of Congress, of making and declaring war.

Yours for truth, justice, peace, and America first.

Hon. CHARLES CURTIS,

HONORABLE SENATOR: We, the undersigned, as faculty and students of Tabor College, Hillsboro, Kans., by this unanimous petition wish to express our desire that you make felt your influence in our behalf to avert war with any nation in this present crisis.

P. C. HIEBERT
(And others).

SYLVAN GROVE, KANS.

Senator CHARLES CURTIS,
Washington, D. C.

HONORED SIR: On the opening of the special session the President intends to ask Congress to declare for a condition of war between ours and a European country—the same President who owes his reelection to the claim that "He kept us out of war." Powerful influences will exert enormous pressure to bias sane judgment and to stampede Congress into submission. If ever this country had need of men, that time is now. We need men with whom the consideration of their country's welfare and peaceable development is paramount. Men with the courage to brave contumely and contempt; yes, even the false accusations of disloyalty and treason rather than see their country plunged into the horrors of war without a just cause.

We, the undersigned loyal and patriotic citizens of the United States and your constituents, believe that no just cause for war exists; we emphatically declare that we do not want war; we solemnly reiterate we do not want war; and we hope that you will place yourself on record as one of the men in Congress who dared to do right at a time of his country's most direful need.

We most earnestly request that you will strenuously oppose every move tending to embroil this country in war. When every expedient for preserving peace shall have been tried and exhausted, then will be the time for such legislation, but not before.

Very respectfully,

WM. NICKEL
(And others).

Hon. CHARLES CURTIS:

We, American citizens of the great State of Kansas, ask you to use your power and influence in the interest of peace. Your constituents will support you in whatever you undertake in the preservation and promulgation of peace.

TRADES AND LABOR COUNCIL,
Leavenworth, Kans., April 4, 1917.

Senator CHARLES CURTIS,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The following resolutions were adopted at the regular meeting of the Trades and Labor Council, but not by a unanimous vote:

Resolution introduced by Delegate George Stahlman, from Barbers' Union No. 155.

"We, citizens of Leavenworth, Kans., in mass meeting assembled, this day of March 19, 1917, vigorously protest against this country becoming involved in war with Germany or any other nation.

"The agitation for war is solely in the interest of munition makers and food and supply speculators. By deliberately using the European war in order to make money for its already gorged capitalists the United States has become an accomplice in wholesale murder. If this country were to go to war under the present circumstances it would be fighting for the privilege of continuing to make money out of the great tragedy of Europe. In other words, it would be fighting for the maintenance of an infamous wrong, not a right.

"We demand that no war shall be declared without a referendum vote of the people.

"We demand that the severance of diplomatic relations with Germany be rescinded.

"We demand that a complete embargo be placed upon the shipment of all goods, munitions, and otherwise to all of the belligerent countries.

"We demand that American citizens and American ships be warned to keep out of the war zone except at their own risk.

"We further demand that in order that the resulting decrease of foreign markets may be a blessing instead of a curse to the American people, the exploiting industries of the Nation shall be collectively owned and operated and that the workers therein shall be paid the full value of their labor, thus enabling them to purchase the entire product.

"Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to the President of the United States, to the Senators from this State, and to the Congressman from this district."

Fraternally, yours,

WM. J. KNIGHT,
Secretary Trades Council.

P. S.—These resolutions of this kind do not meet with my approval, but it met with the majority of the members present.

Mr. CURTIS. I present petitions from citizens of Kansas on the subject of our foreign relations, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

There being no objection, the petitions were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Hon. CHARLES CURTIS:

In this grave international crisis, when the whole-souled loyalty and support of every American is demanded, the international legal fraternity of Phi Delta Phi, in province convention assembled at Kansas City, Mo., March 31, 1917, representing the States of Texas, Oklahoma, Kansas, Colorado, Nebraska, and South Dakota, pledges its support to the President and our Congress in upholding American rights against all violators thereof by whatsoever means they may deem necessary.

WM. S. EAGLETON, JR.,
W. O. HAKE,
Committee.
ELMER M. POWELL,
President of Province VI.
H. R. HANLEY,
Secretary of Convention.

Resolutions adopted at a mass meeting of the citizens of Atchison, Kans., March 29, 1917.

Be it resolved by this popular assemblage of the citizens of the city of Atchison and vicinity, That we view with satisfaction the severance of diplomatic relations with any foreign sovereignty whose lust for world power jeopardizes those sacred liberties for which our forefathers so valiantly fought, and should such action result in an appeal to the arbitrement of the sword we know that our country, asylum as it is for the downtrodden and oppressed of all nations, will put on a new nationalism and, as it has ever done in the past, stand forth as the valiant champion of liberty and freedom on sea and on land; be it further

Resolved, That the reversion to barbarism evidenced by relentless and indiscriminate submarine warfare clearly demonstrates that the price of peace, liberty, and civilization is the ability to defend them, else they perish from the earth; be it further

Resolved, That, irrespective of race, creed, or party, we unqualifiedly indorse the action of President Woodrow Wilson in severing relations with Germany and arming American vessels for defense against unlawful attacks and calling Congress together in extraordinary session, and we express the fervent hope that when Congress convenes it will realize that the priceless heritage of all our people is the privilege of supporting their own Government in its hour of need, and that this patriotic privilege and duty should be exercised by all who enjoy its blessings: Therefore be it

Resolved, We respectfully recommend to the consideration of Congress that, as soon as it shall assemble, it shall do all things necessary or expedient to protect the honor, dignity, and safety of our country; that it provide by law for universal military training, with obligation of service in time of war; that it provide, as promptly as possible, an Army, a Navy, coast defense, military and naval equipment sufficient in all things to enable the United States to defend itself against any force which Germany or any other sovereignty may send against us; and that in this crisis no time be lost, effort or expense spared in the mobilization of the military, naval, and industrial strength of the Nation; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the President of the United States and each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

J. M. CHALLISS.
W. S. WASHER.
LEO NUSBAUM.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have three or four resolutions from different organizations in the State of Washington which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the proper committee.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SPOKANE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Spokane, April 3, 1917.

Senator WESLEY L. JONES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR JONES: At a general meeting of the Spokane Chamber of Commerce held Tuesday, April 3, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"That we commend the wise and patriotic message of the President and approve his recommendations to Congress, including the application of the principle of universal liability to service.

"That we urge upon Congress whole-hearted support of the President's plans and policies and prompt enactment of necessary legislation.

"That we urge upon the administration most energetic prosecution of the war to final peace and victory; and to this end we urge the mobilization as speedily as possible of all necessary resources of men, industry, and capital.

"That we pledge our allegiance and service to the Nation."

I was further directed by the assembly to urge upon you and each member of the State's congressional delegation the sentiment expressed at this meeting and the sincere hope that you will be ready and willing to support the administration as outlined in the foregoing resolution.

Yours, very truly,

J. A. FORD,
Managing Secretary.

Whereas our country has but lately passed through an emergency which has compelled the President to exercise his constitutional power in calling forth the Organized Militia for the protection of the lives and property of the citizens; and

Whereas the National Guard of the several States and of this State have responded to this call, in many cases to their great disadvantage; and

Whereas the present system of service is essentially unfair and not calculated to distribute the burden of military service fairly among all citizens: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of this meeting that the National Guard be commended for its response to the call of the President; and be it further

Resolved, That the Washington State Society Sons of the American Revolution is in favor of the principle of universal military training.

A true copy.

WALTER BEALS, President.
G. E. TILTON, Secretary.

Be it resolved, That the Washington State Society of the Sons of the American Revolution extend to the President of the United States of America its loyal and enthusiastic support, expression of confidence in the present crisis, and urge upon the Senate and House of Representatives the necessity of the placing at the disposal of the President the armed forces of the United States, to be used by him as he may deem best in preserving the honor and dignity of the country and protecting the lives and property of its citizens.

A true copy.

Resolutions urging national and Pacific coast defense, passed by Walla Walla Commercial Club, April 3, 1917.

Whereas the United States is at present practically unprepared to defend itself against an attack by foreign force; and

Whereas the need for such defense may arise following the termination of the present hostilities now being waged among several of the great nations; and

Whereas the cost and consequences of an attack would be inconceivably greater than the cost of even the most elaborate preparedness for defense; and

Whereas the United States Government now has, in the organization known as the General Board of the Navy and the General Staff of the Army, a highly trained and experienced body of military and naval experts, whose opinions on these matters should be the best obtainable; and

Whereas it is our understanding that the plans and suggestions of these boards concerning immediate preparation have not been adopted: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the board of directors of the Walla Walla Commercial Club—

First. That the United States Government should take immediate steps to insure the prompt and successful defense of all parts of its territory.

Second. That the measures adopted to attain the above end should include complete and specific plans providing adequately for the defense of the Pacific coast, which should be formulated without delay by the General Board of the Navy and the General Staff of the Army of the United States, and which should give full consideration and weight to the facts and recommendations embodied in a memorial to Congress submitted by the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, which sets forth the conditions on the Pacific coast from which arises the urgent and imperative necessity for the establishment and permanent maintenance on that coast of a land force adequate for its defense.

Third. That the principle of universal military service by the entire manhood of the country, which is a true democratic system, should be adopted as the foundation for our ultimate system of national defense. Such service should be with the colors on the part of those physically fit, as provided for in the Federal Constitution, or else by financial contributions from those unable to serve in person—to be applicable solely to the military and naval service of the country.

Mr. KENDRICK. I present resolutions adopted at a special meeting of the faculty of the University of Wyoming and at a mass meeting of citizens of Sheridan and vicinity, in the State of Wyoming, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved, That all students of the university, both men and women, who enter the Army, the Navy, or other form of official service for the present war will receive credit for the balance of the current semester in all subjects in which they have been maintaining satisfactory scholarship up to the time of departure for such service.

Resolved, That existing requirements regarding military training be amended and increased in view of the existing war. Until modified by further action, all able-bodied male students now enrolled in the military department will be required to take military training on Mondays and Wednesdays from 1 to 2 and on Fridays from 3 to 5.30 o'clock. The schedule committee shall have power to make the changes in hours of courses required by this arrangement.

Resolved, That the faculty of the University of Wyoming, assembled in special session on account of extraordinary developments in the affairs of the Nation, hereby tender their services collectively and individually in support of the Government of the United States and of the State of Wyoming.

The citizens of Sheridan and Sheridan County, Wyo., in mass meeting assembled, on April 5, 1917, unanimously adopted the following:

"We heartily approve of the acts of Congress in declaring war against Germany, and the acts of our President in recommending this course, and we pledge our loyalty in the defense of the honor, rights, and just interests of our country.

"The wrongful acts of the Imperial Government of Germany in violating the sovereignty of peaceful, neighboring nations, maiming and murdering their citizens, destroying their homes, their industries, and their land, and carrying their men and women into slavery; the waging of ruthless submarine warfare, thereby sinking merchant ships without warning, resulting in the wanton murder of our citizens—men, women, and children—while peacefully on the high seas, and forcing the survivors into small open boats hundreds of miles from land, in direct violation of our treaty with Germany and contrary to the law of nations, all place the Imperial German Government beyond the pale of civilization, brand that Government an outlaw, and justify all free and peace-loving nations in uniting to overcome the Prussian menace to free government, to forever destroy the rule that 'might makes right,' and to establish for all time the doctrine of the inalienable rights of all people to enjoy life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness without molestation from ambitious and covetous rulers of other nations.

"We urge upon Congress the immediate enactment of a law providing for universal military service as the only and most truly democratic way of obtaining an army which will be at all adequate in the present crisis.

"We call upon all young men of this State to come forward and offer their services to their country. No nobler sentiment than that of patriotism ever inspired heroic action; and it ought to be a sacred honor, duty, and privilege for young men of this Nation to again do, suffer, and sacrifice for the Nation as our ancestors did and suffered and sacrificed in its founding and preservation.

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the President, both Houses of Congress, and to each of our Senators and Representative from Wyoming."

Mr. KENDRICK. I also present resolutions unanimously adopted by the officers and members of Sheridan, Wyo., Lodge No. 520, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, in regular meeting assembled, April 4, 1917, expressing their loyalty and pledging support to the President. I ask that the resolutions may be read at the desk and printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions.

We, the officers and members of Sheridan, Wyo., Lodge No. 520, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, in regular meeting assembled, this 4th day of April, 1917, deem it our patriotic duty to give expression to the following declarations:

"Whereas our country is facing the greatest crisis that has confronted it since our Civil War—a crisis, the manner of meeting which must vitally influence our future as a Nation.

"Whereas American citizens have been murdered, our commerce has been disorganized, and contrary to all tenets of international law, our rights on the high seas have been ruthlessly violated, and attempts have been made to conspire with Mexico to disrupt our sisterhood of States.

"Whereas our President and the National Congress, in the face of these intolerable indignities, have maintained a long-suffering patience, in keeping with our national love of peace. Further toleration of the transgression of our rights can no longer be endured and decisive action seems imperative, and

"Whereas patriotism is one of the cardinal principles of our order, which is distinctively an American institution, whose future is indissolubly linked with the destiny of our country: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we pledge our loyalty and support to our President and the leaders of our country and stand as one with them in upholding the honor and dignity of our sovereign Nation and the rights of her citizens on land and sea.

"We believe that thorough military and naval preparedness are of the utmost necessity, not only to give weight to our ideals of peace and the rights of humanity, but also to maintain and protect our institutions and to enforce our rights.

"To this end, we urge the enactment of such laws as will expedite and make most efficient the means of national preparedness and defense. It is further

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the President and to both Houses of Congress; also to the Senators and Congressman from the State of Wyoming."

The foregoing resolutions were presented and unanimously adopted by the lodge April 4, 1917.

[SEAL.] C. L. CHAPMAN, Secretary.

Mr. LODGE. I present resolutions adopted by citizens of Winthrop, Mass., at their annual town meeting, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HON. HENRY CABOT LODGE,
Nahant, Mass.

DEAR SIR: I, Preston B. Churchill, town clerk of the town of Winthrop, hereby certify that the following is a true copy from the records of the town of Winthrop of resolutions passed by unanimous vote of said town at the annual town meeting held March 12, 1917.

Resolutions.

As the descendants of those patriots, who, in the early days of the Republic, sent out armed ships to defend American rights on the high seas, and as the freemen of one of the governmental divisions of the 100,000,000 people of the United States, whose prosperity and hopes for the future were purchased by the blood of those whose names are enrolled on the soldiers' monuments erected in every hamlet of our free land; it is hereby

Resolved, That we, the citizens of the town of Winthrop, Mass., in town meeting assembled, indorse the action of the President of the United States in severing diplomatic relations with the Imperial German Government.

Resolved, That we pledge our fidelity, our confidence, and our constant, devoted, and unwavering loyalty and support to the President in his purpose to protect and defend American rights, American lives, and American honor on the high seas.

Resolved, That the town clerk be and is hereby directed to spread a copy of these resolutions upon the records, and to send a copy thereof to the President of the United States and to each Senator and Congressman from Massachusetts.

A true copy attest.

[SEAL.] PRESTON B. CHURCHILL, Town Clerk.

Mr. LODGE. I also present resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce, of Fitchburg, Mass., which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FITCHBURG (MASS.) CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
April 7, 1917.

Senator HENRY C. LODGE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The following resolutions were adopted at the meeting of the Fitchburg Chamber of Commerce held Thursday, April 5:

"To the President and the Congress of the United States:

"In the grave crisis of the present time the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Fitchburg, Mass., hastens to express approval of your recommendations and enactments, declaring a strong desire that you in your wisdom give to the allied nations and their armies full support—with troops, munitions, subsistence, and financial help promptly and to the limit, and that our Navy be utilized in their behalf to the utmost.

"We are proud of the self-control of our great President, proud of his patriotic call to our great democracy, proud of the action of our Congress in its immediate response thereto, proud also that these United States have again been given the opportunity to show their heroism in the cause of humanity."

Very truly, yours, JAMES PIGGOTT, President.

Mr. PENROSE presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the passage of the so-called river and harbor bill and for appropriations for the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WARREN. I present resolutions adopted by the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Lodge No. 520, of Sheridan, Wyo., favoring measures for preparedness and national defense. If the resolutions have not been presented by my colleague, I ask that they may be printed in the RECORD without reading. Otherwise, I ask that they be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I present sundry telegrams, letters, and memorials commending the course of the President in defending the national honor and safety, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Three million Jews are dying of cold and starvation in the eastern war zone. Julius Rosenwald, of Chicago, offers to contribute $1,000,000 provided we raise $10,000,000 for our unhappy brethren in the war-stricken zone. We have arranged for a mass meeting for Thursday, April 26, at 8 o'clock, to be held at the Jewish Temple in this city, and earnestly beg of you to speak on behalf of our cause on this occasion. We glory in the stand you have taken in the Senate of the United States, and know of no man in this country to-day that would be of greater help to us in this great hour. The whole United States, especially the Mississippians and Tennesseeans, feel proud of you. The Jews in Russia are about to be taken out of the house of bondage to live the lives of free men. Congratulations upon your great speech answering LA FOLLETTE; it is overflowing with the patriotism exemplified by Washington. Mississippi rejoices to be represented in the Senate by a man of your ability and worth, and Mississippians are ready to defend the flag against unwarranted insults given by German autocracy.

MEHARD, SCULLY, & MEHARD,
Pittsburgh, Pa., April 5, 1917.

Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR WILLIAMS: Congratulations on your noble reply to Senator LA FOLLETTE. God bless you!

I am leaving to-night for a hasty business trip to California.

Kindest regards to Mrs. Williams and the children.

Sincerely, MEHARD.

MERIDIAN, MISS., April 6, 1917.

Senator JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Our people are proud of you, and thank God that Mississippi has one Senator who upholds and defends the honor of our country.

T. C. CARTER.

MONUMENT STREET, CHARLESTOWN, MASS.,
April 5, 1917.

Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS.

DEAR SIR: I heartily congratulate you on your great speech in the Senate yesterday. In my opinion, you voiced the sentiments of the great majority of true Americans. It is a blessing to humanity that you are a Member of the United States Senate. I am only an humble citizen, Senator, but I glory in your true American sentiments.

Very respectfully,

CHARLES P. HARRINGTON.

Hon. J. S. WILLIAMS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Good luck to you for your noble stand. A few more honorable gentlemen like you is what we need. I am 40 years of age, and have joined the Naval Reserve for active service because they wouldn't pass me for the Regular Navy or Army, but I'm in to do my bit. I would like to send a message to the slackers in Congress; if I did I'd be arrested for what I'd say.

Respectfully,

MEL. S. FORRESTER,
A Bostonian, Massachusetts.

CITY HALL, ROOM 458,
Philadelphia, April 5, 1917.

Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
United States Senate:

God bless you, my dear Senator WILLIAMS.

I know that I should not obtrude upon your time and attention, but I want to tell you that my soul responds to every one of the noble words in your speech of yesterday rebuking the Senator from Wisconsin. And the great mass of the American people are with you, too, and with the President. You touched a most important note that ought to be sounded and resounded when you said that we must either fight Germany now, joining the allies, or fight her single handed after the present war is over. To restore the prestige of the Kaiser his Government will be sure to attack us, as an easy prey to his trained forces, unless we now make common cause with the allies, so as to be included in and protected by the terms of peace. I grasp your hand in hearty thanks for your splendid words.

Faithfully, yours,

W. P. POTTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 5, 1917.

Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: By the eternal gods, you are a credit and honor to the glorious Commonwealth of Mississippi! Every Mississippian worthy to claim the grand old State as home is proud of your patriotic stand in support of President Wilson, whose indictment of the Imperial German Government and plea for world-wide democracy on the evening of the 2d instant before the joint meeting of the two Houses of Congress was immortal and will live in the hearts of patriotic, liberty-loving men as long as time endures. The honor and glory of beloved Mississippi will not suffer while you are in the Senate. May God have you in his keeping and give you many more years of life to bless the people whose commission you bear and maintain the high standard of statesmanship set up by the great Senators who preceded you in the most august lawmaking body on earth.

Sincerely,

JAMES S. MCCARTHY.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, April 5, 1917.

Senator WILLIAMS.

DEAR SIR: Have just finished work on the Cleveland Plain Dealer, where I am employed. Your remarks yesterday and your actions all along impress me very favorably.

I am sending you some copies of my new patriotic song, just off the press, which is being received with favor here.

Kindly give them to your friends, and if they like the title of the song and the words I shall appreciate an opinion from you as to its worth and any publicity you and your friends can give to the song.

Yours, in patriotism,

JOS. L. ALLABUGH, Publisher.

Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have just finished reading an article in the Commercial given out by you to the press expressing your views on the German situation, and wish to congratulate you on the stand you are taking. I am proud that Mississippi has such a representative in the Senate to-day. We are all very proud of the record you have made and are making still. I for one take off my hat in reverence when the name of JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS is mentioned.

Since leaving the Army I have come home and gone to farming, have married a red-headed Kentucky girl, and will say the world is serving me very well. While I would hate to leave my business, will say that I am ready to shoulder a gun again should Uncle Sam need my services.

With very best wishes, I am,

SIR: Permit a former naval officer to congratulate you on your manly and patriotic reply to the speech of Senator LA FOLLETTE.

Very respectfully,

CHARLES W. HAZELTINE.

WILLIAMSBURG, VA., April 5, 1917.

Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have read with great pleasure in the newspaper your speech against LA FOLLETTE, and it has brought back to my mind very vividly your appearance as a young orator when I first entered the Jefferson Society of the University of Virginia. I applaud your speech in two respects:

First, for its manly and patriotic stand, and especially, also, for your courageous references to the South in the Civil War in connection with the blockade and the employment of German soldiers, "mere hirelings, paid at the rate of $13 a month and given a bounty." It is very seldom now that we hear a voice raised for the old South, and I wish to express my appreciation of your happy remarks. When that pacifist the other day attacked LODGE I thought of Brooks and Sumner before the war. Then Brooks's violence was attributed to the evil effects of slavery, and what now must be said of a Boston pacifist breathing pugilism?

I am, cordially, yours,

LYON G. TYLER.

PITTSBURGH, PA., April 5, 1917.

Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I trust you will permit me to tender to you my sincere thanks for your noble speech in the Senate yesterday.

It must make every true American feel better of his country when one of its Senators can stand up in the Congress and express so eloquently those thoughts that have been surging through the minds of so many of us in this time of turmoil and stress.

I believe that the Government will have the united support of such a vast majority of citizens that the few pro-Germans and colossal egoists who unfortunately are with us will have as much influence on the course of events as one whistling against an 80-mile gale.

Respectfully, yours,

THOS. M. BENNER.

KOSCIUSKO, MISS., April 4, 1917.

Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I want to thank you for your efforts in my behalf in regard to the post office at Zama, and I want also to thank Mr. Burlew for his attention to it in your absence. I want to thank your office for their attention to a matter so trivial in this hour of great stress and national peril.

I have had the same duly filled out and forwarded to the Postmaster General, First Assistant, and will appreciate your giving them a push when you or your office has time; but I do not want to take one moment of your time now more than is absolutely necessary.

I want to tell you that we are duly proud of you and believe that you are right in all of the sense the word imports. This is an hour of national peril; we are fighting for the existence of government by the people and for the people, and it is our duty to help see "that it does not perish from the face of the earth." Mississippi is proud of you. We will stand in the line of honor and protection of our Nation and be counted; and you, and you only of our Senators, will hold our face up and answer to the roll call of honor for us, and we want to thank you for your American Mississippi stand

Again thanking you for your help in the matter above referred to and your patriotic stand for us in our national honor, I am,

Your friend,

C. E. MORGAN.

KOSCIUSKO, MISS., April 4, 1917.

Hon. JOHN S. WILLIAMS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WILLIAMS: I want to again say that I heartily indorse your course in the Senate and your recent public utterances in regard to the German situation.

I, in common with thousands of other Mississippians, am proud and thankful that in the hour of trial we are represented by one who is able and ready to speak out for true Americanism.

Your are still an unembroidered, unfringed, unironed Democrat as you were in 1892, when the old fifth district Democrats first named you for Congress in the old courthouse in Kosciusko. Our people are in favor of universal military training and service, and they are in favor of a vigorous prosecution of the war. And I want to say I have my first white man to talk to who is opposed to the negroes doing their half of the fighting.

I do not see how any white man with any sense should not want them to help bear the burdens of war. With white officers they will make good soldiers, and certainly if we send out our brave young men we should insist that the negroes send their full proportion.

With kindest regards and best wishes, I am

Your friend,

WARREN POTTS.

LEXINGTON, MISS., April 4, 1917.

Senator JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS.
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Accept my heartiest congratulations on the splendid support you are giving to President Wilson and the admirable presentation of the American side of the war which Germany has forced on us. For some time Germany has been making flagrant warfare of a detestable kind on our Nation through murderous assaults on our citizens while they were engaged in innocent and lawful enterprises. There was nothing left but acceptance of the warfare thrust upon us.

My stepson, H. H. Neilson, graduated with honor from the agricultural and mechanical college of this State in electrical engineering course and took a three-year similar course in the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He is skilled in mathematics and electrical work on certain practical lines. As to this, like the physical examination, proficiency would have to be demonstrated in the usual method of examination.

He is honorable, moral, energetic, and courageous. I would like very much to see him get a commission on that military line for which he is best equipped in the event of call for volunteers, and would greatly appreciate anything you might do in his behalf.

The people here are all of one way of thinking, except the few of ultra-German sympathies, or for "peace at any price," and these are very few, indeed.

Your friend, E. F. NOEL.

ABERDEEN, MISS.

Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WILLIAMS: I have just read your masterful speech in the Senate, and feel that your fellow Mississippians should not neglect to offer you their thanks for the way in which you represent them, and at the same time show yourself to be one of, if not the foremost, statesman now at Washington. Sir, I am proud that you represent the State of my birth; and while I am bowed down in sorrow that we are forced into this war—many of our brave boys will never return—still it is our duty now to act in concert, with but one aim, to maintain the honor and dignity of the greatest country upon which the sun shines.

I believe that men should be called as fast as the arrangements can be made; the small numbers now bespoken will be but a handful to the many to be required.

Wishing to assure that I stand ready at all times, in no half-hearted way, to stand by the will of our representatives, with myself and my substance, and for the liberty and glory of the principles of our Nation, I am,

Yours, truly, J. S. HOPKINS.

UNION, MISS., April 5, 1917.

Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,

DEAR SENATOR WILLIAMS: Your greatness at this moment of peril is an honor to our State of Mississippi, and we are proud of you, and think that your stand is true and right; and as our sons and men of the State shall enter the rank and file of service we shall trust that God shall rule and guide us to defend America, truth, liberty, right, and stand firm on the principles as indicated in your reply to LA FOLLETTE.

May your shadow never grow less.

Yours, truly, WM. N. MCLEMORE.

MEMPHIS, TENN., April 5, 1917.

Senator JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I am taking the liberty to mail you to-day a copy of my booklet "Hambone's Meditations." You may have noticed "Hambone" in the Commercial Appeal, and I thought perhaps you might like to see his collection. If in your moments of relaxation from your arduous duties you find time to look through it, and if it affords you any pleasure, then I will be glad. I am not sending this to get an indorsement from you, but simply because I wanted you to have a copy, since you are so intensely southern!

Will you allow me, while I am about it, to express my most sincere admiration for you. Particularly do I want to thank you for your recent speeches. We are all proud of you. Your speeches are so clear, so dignified, so simply presented, and withal they have such a darned good punch in them!

I read every word that I see printed about you and all of your speeches. Pardon me for taking up your time in this way, and in closing I want to say that I hope you stay in the United States Senate as long as you live.

Sincerely, yours, J. P. ALLEY,
Cartoonist Commercial Appeal.

MOSS POINT, MISS., April 4, 1917.

Senator JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I take pleasure in inclosing to you herewith copy of a resolution passed at the city council meeting yesterday. I am sure the resolution expresses the unanimous sentiment and feelings of all here.

If I can be of any service to you in any capacity at any time, please do not hesitate to call on me.

With best wishes for your health, comfort, and happiness, I beg to remain,

Very truly, yours, JESSE W. THOMPSON.

The following resolution unanimously adopted by the Board of Mayor and Aldermen of the City of Moss Point, Miss., at its regular session, Tuesday, April 3, 1917:

"Resolved by the Board of Mayor and Aldermen of the City of Moss Point in regular session assembled, this the 3d day of April, 1917, That while we have been and are anxious to live in peace with all the nations of the earth, we here and now unqualifiedly indorse our President, Hon. Woodrow Wilson, in all the steps which he found it necessary to take in dealing with the Imperial German Government, and his firm stand in defense of humanity and for the honor and integrity of American citizenship; and, since it seems that war and all its horrors has been forced upon this country, we pledge him our moral and material support in all that he may find it necessary to do to uphold our honor as American citizens and in defense of human rights and liberty, to the end that war may speedily cease, and that those responsible for the present one may have no further opportunities to bring such a curse upon mankind. We would also express our confidence that American citizens will not be found wanting in anything that they may be called upon to do, and that the traditions of our Army and Navy may be gloriously upheld.

"Resolved further, That as Mississippians we are proud of the stand taken by Senator JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS, by our immediate Representative, Hon. PAT HARRISON, and all his colleagues in the House of Representatives. We extend to them our thanks, and assure them of our confidence and esteem, as well as our support in all things within our power."

RESPECTED SIR: Once more I am happy to be allowed the privilege of thanking you for a great speech; wish to God we could write "New York" after your name instead of "Mississippi." Will you kindly add to the courtesy already shown me by having your secretary forward me a copy of your speech in answer to ——— NORRIS ———? I would very much like to preserve it. It was fine, just what we would expect from you.

Thanking you for past favors and wishing you every blessing, permit me to sign myself,

NEW YORK, N. Y., April 5, 1917.

Senator WILLIAMS.

DEAR SIR: I've just read extracts from your great speech made yesterday, and although I'm not a constituent of yours and am a Republican and unknown to you, I feel like sending you my congratulations as you hit the nail on the head right through your speech.

I'm tired of words with that Prussian outfit. Deeds and not words count. You're right, it's better to fight that enemy of civilization with the other great democracies of the world than to wait till after the war and fight them alone.

Respectfully, yours, C. C. AUCHINCLOSS.

P. S.—And now, Senator, for universal military training—the only democratic way and the best thing in the world for our young men and ourselves as a Nation. Besides the volunteer system has always failed and is unfair. Preparedness can't be bought with dollars and cents. People have to give themselves. If we are ever to defend ourselves lets do it successfully and not send our boys out without a sporting chance. As Light Horse Harry Lee, of revolutionary days, said, in effect, for a Government to send untrained troops against trained troops is murder. Its up to you gentlemen, you're responsible.

GREENSBURG, PA., April 5, 1917.

Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Heartiest congratulations and thanks on the speech made by you in the Senate yesterday on the attitude of Senator LA FOLLETTE toward the war resolution.

Both yesterday and the day before on the streets of Pittsburgh and Greensburg the news was passed from man to man of Mr. LA FOLLETTE'S attitude, and I heard no word said of it except in condemnation.

Now, as on previous occasions, you will receive the thanks of the people of this country for your assertion of the true American spirit. I am a Republican, but Republicans and Democrats alike stand in solid support of the President and Congress in their assertion of American rights.

With great respect, I am,

Yours, very truly, C. L. GOODWIN.

MANHATTAN CLUB,
Madison Square, April 5, 1917.

Senator JOHN S. WILLIAMS,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: As a Mississippian permit me to offer my congratulations that you have redeemed our State by your rebuke to disloyal Americans and your splendid tribute to true Americanism.

Yours, sincerely,

S. H. BUCK.

GREENWOOD, MISS., April 3, 1917.

Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
Washington City.

DEAR SENATOR: As a Mississippian and especially as a loyal American, I want to express my high appreciation of the able, manly support you have at every crisis given our sorely tried President—a cause which has met the unqualified approval of a vast majority of our people. There are some mollycoddie sentimental pacificists among us, but, thank heaven, nearly all the citizens of our beloved State are red-blooded Americans, who resent from their very souls the wrongs and insults which are daily heaped upon us by the war-mad Germans. Personally, my fighting days are over; but such service as a hale, hearty, ex-Confederate soldier nearing his eightieth year can render I will gladly give. I am confident that most of my old comrades feel the same way.

The memory of the "stars and bars" is very dear to us, but our parole of honor, given more than 50 years ago, has been, of course, kept inviolate, despite the insulting imputations of northern partisans. God help our beloved country and strengthen the arms of her loyal sons in this hour of peril. Hoping most earnestly that you may retain health and vigor to continue the able support you have heretofore given our President, I am,

Very truly, yours,

P. W. SHEARD.

WAYNESBORO, MISS., April 5, 1917.

Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your reply to LA FOLLETTE in the Senate is indorsed by every patriotic citizen of Mississippi. We did not want war, and we have no hatred for the German people, but we feel that the Kaiser and his minions are a menace to the peace of the world, and we of Mississippi stand squarely behind the President and are ready with all of our resources of men and property to protect and vindicate the honor of our country. And our women are ready also to do their part. This sensational stuff about negro risings in the South in favor of Germany is all bosh. You know that when our fathers were in the army fighting for what we then believed to be right the negro was the only protection our women and children had in many places, and they were loyal and true, although they were told that the North was fighting for their liberty. Even in many instances when the invading Army of the North visited our plantations and offered to take them North most of them refused to go. The migration of some of them now to the North is caused by the cotton crop being ruined last year by the boll weevil and the high wages offered them by agents from the North and West. Most of them expect to return as soon as times are better here.

With best wishes for your health and happiness and with the utmost faith and confidence in your honesty and patriotism and your ability to take care of the honor and liberty of our country, I am, sincerely,

Your friend,

D. M. TAYLOR.

P. S.—I was 61 years old on the 3d of this month, and have 6 children and 11 grandchildren. I am strong and healthy, and herewith tender my services to my country through you in any capacity. I will go to the front with the boys and ask no favors on account of my age.

NO. 271 SIXTH AVENUE,
Newark, N. J., April 6, 1917.

Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
United States Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The New York Times yesterday published a synopsis of your speech. I am anxious to read your speech in full. If it has been printed for distribution, I wish you would kindly send me a copy.

In this connection, Senator, I do not think it out of place to say that I am and have been for a number of years one of your most ardent admirers. I used to read with pleasure your speeches when you were the minority leader in the House of Representatives, and I never fail to read your speeches in the Senate. They are always interesting and instructive.

You are one man in public life with a fixed principle. You can always be found on the right side of all public questions. You are a credit to your country, your State, and your party.

Following is an extract from an editorial in yesterday's New York Evening Telegram: "When we want good, straight American talk we can usually get it from JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS, of Mississippi, who paid his respects to Senator LA FOLLETTE."

Very truly, yours,

C. E. PILLING.

PORT GIBSON, MISS., April 1, 1917.

Senator JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: As the newspapers of the country are calling on the people to let their representatives in Congress hear from them in regard to the German question, and as I am one of your constituents, I take the liberty of writing you this letter simply to express my opinion about it.

I believe I can best do that by stating what I would do about it if existing laws required a referendum vote to be taken on the German question.

In that case I would not go to the polls nor vote on the question because I would not vote for war for other men to fight out for me. I am not an able-bodied man and am now 67 years old. Neither would I vote against war, because I believe it is the duty of Congress to resent the acts of Germany against us.

It seems to me that a state of war now exists and Congress ought to so declare. In conclusion, will say that I regret that you have announced your intention of not being a candidate to succeed yourself in the United States Senate.

Very truly, yours,

JAMES M. HARDING.

ST. BOTOLPH CLUB,
Boston, Mass., April 2, 1917.

DEAR SIR: I beg to hand you herewith a copy of resolutions, moved by President A. Lawrence Lowell, of Harvard University, and adopted by the St. Botolph Club on March 31, 1917, and to ask your support for the principles and measures therein advocated.

Respectfully, yours,

THOS. TILESTON BALDWIN, Secretary.

Resolutions adopted by the St. Botolph Club, March 31, 1917, Boston, Mass.

Whereas the German Empire by her violation of Belgium, by her outraging and killing of civilians, by her destruction of private property and public monuments, and by her use of barbarous methods has been waging war against humanity and civilization, and by her destruction of American lives and property and by the lawless use of submarines has been waging war against all neutrals including the United States of America: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That the United States of America ought to take part with the entente allies, and to that end ought to organize the military, naval, financial, and industrial resources of its people.

That the United States of America ought to be in form, as it is in fact, at war with a common enemy, and that the Congress be therefore urged forthwith to declare that a state of war exists with Germany.

That we pledge our steadfast support to the Government of the United States in all measures which it may take for the protection of our citizens and the defense of those priciples upon which our Government is founded; be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to the President of the United States, to the members of his Cabinet, and to the Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States.

NEW YORK CITY, April 3, 1917.

Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Your attitude upon vital questions growing out of the conflict in Europe has been so sane, so consistent, so patriotic, you must pardon my bothering you occasionally. When it seemed you might be called to rank on the Foreign Relations Committee and speak for the administration to the new Congress, I felt a thrill of pride, for I knew the Nation and Mississippi would be honored in whatever were done or said in the case.

Because I was born in Mississippi, my mother, father, and early boyhood friends lie buried in her soil, she is home to me still, however remote in years, distance, or circumstances. I love to hear her voice, her true voice, as you accent it in the Nation's councils.

My Congressman has elicited an expression on points of paramount importance in issues now imminent at Washington, and I am taking the liberty to hand you a copy of my response to him.

I had an uncle who fought all through the Rebellion, a rebel; he died in my house here a few years ago. In his last semilucid moments he was leading his rebel comrades in charges and calling them by names who fell beside him. Nevertheless, he had lived to become a thorough patriot and how he would rejoice, if living to-day, to see you—Mississipian—upholding our flag and with it the cause of civilization and humanity.

Very truly, yours,

S. W. WINN.

Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Might I not suggest that it would be most appropriate at this time that you tell the people of the United States and of the world that Mr. Wilson, in his message to Congress, wrote what history will grant to be the declaration of independence of the world? While Mr. Wilson needs no such incentive to perform the finest services for this country it has ever received, at the same time it must be a source of satisfaction to him to have the proper recognition of these services; and, in my opinion, it would be a great delight for a man to be in a position, such as yours, to render these thanks. Coming from such a source it would have greater significance than the plaudits of all the press.

Very respectfully,

PAUL FRAME,
1833 S Street NW., Washington, D. C.

OXFORD, MISS., April 4, 1917.

Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. WILLIAMS: I can not forego the opportunity to express to you my hearty commendation of your public utterances in this and the last Congress. All right-thinking Mississippians are proud of your course.

In my judgment the State needs some stirring up. There seems to be an apathy among the people, as if they think there is little or nothing for the average citizen to do. Of course, the more thoughtful realize there is a duty for every man to perform and that each and all of us are capable of doing something.

I am unable to perform field service, but I stand ready and willing to discharge any service for the Government that I can, and would be glad for you to place my name with any department of the Government as one who stands ready to render any service of which I am capable.

With best personal regards, I am,

Yours, very truly,

JAS. STONE.

Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

HONORED SIR: I had the pleasure, the pride, and the happiness to read your address of yesterday to the United States Senate, and I can not resist the impulse to write you, expressing my heartiest approval of it and the admiration of the man who delivered it.

In my opinion it will go down to future generations in the history of our country along with the address of the President of the United States demanding their approval of his policy for war with Germany, and I prophesy that if it be read by the German people that they will wipe out with one fell stroke their entire Hohenzollern dynasty and assume their own self-government, like unto ours, and thus instantly end this bitter war, which has prevailed for nearly three years.

I have five sons, two of whom have already volunteered and the other three ready to go when called upon, they being older than the present requirement for service.

I have had the honor several times of meeting you, and remember the occasions with much pleasure. You may remember me as being the oldest surviving member of the southern family, Semmes, which cut some figure in the Civil War, so I feel I have some right to address this communication to the most distinguished representative of the South in this Congress.

Most respectfully,

JOS. MALCOLM SEMMES.

MY DEAR SENATOR: An American, with American coat of arms and flag to the fore; a Republican; a Roosevelt Republican; a Republican from the middle Tennessee town, Nashville; and white, as the Bryans have been since they landed in 1669 in Isle of Wight County, Virginia.

For your admirable stand yesterday in the Senate, my most hearty congratulations. I believe the ratio of 82–6 holds throughout the country.

You are a busy man; I merely want you to know.

Cordially, yours,

MY DEAR SENATOR: Ninety-nine per cent of our people are with you in standing by the President and in defending the honor of our country. They likewise indorse your views, given out yesterday, that we should wage offensive warfare. May God give you the health and strength to continue the fight that you are making. Mississippi and the whole South are proud of you.

Yours, very sincerely,

W. H. POWELL.

CHAMPAIGN, ILL., April 5, 1917.

Senator WILLIAMS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: The masterful way in which you handled the war resolution in the United States Congress has won the admiration of patriotic American citizens.

The majority of the people are too busy with their own immediate personal business affairs to have clearly before them the problems that concern our national welfare. This important work has been intrusted to our Government officials at Washington and to the Members of our Congress. What these high officials of our Government determine upon as being to the interest of our United States the patriotic public will most heartily approve.

Some few Senators, it seems, have put personal or selfish interests first and the interests and welfare of our National Government second. But I read with a supreme joy that 82 Senators feel clearly their public duty and have voted that liberty and right and honor must not be trampled upon.

It is to be hoped that the entry of the United States into the world's war will work to destroy the power of the Hohenzollerns in Germany and bring about a representative government of the people.

Your services as a true Senator are most highly appreciated.

Yours, very truly,

EDWIN ANDERS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 6, 1917.

Senator JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR OLD JOHN SHARP: I can not well tell you how your manly, patriotic, and eloquent course in the Senate recently, both in action and in speech, has delighted me personally and has powerfully served the country we both love so well. De re publica bene merui. You deserve that most honorable old description, and your countrymen are conferring it, in one form or another, on you all over this wide land in hearty appreciation of your stand by and with the President.

What a wonderful thing his speech was, and how even more wonderful that his speech should go out speeded by the momentum of our great sister Republic, Russia. Our times are even more "spacious" than those of great Elizabeth. "The federation of the world!" That you and I, two old gray heads, should be on the very verge of seeing that dream realized of which we read as boys as a poet's far-off vision—beautiful, but a mere dream; and here we are seeing it grow into shape before us. And you helping it to grow! I almost envy you that privilege, largely because it brings you into contact with Woodrow Wilson, whose wisdom of action the event is so finely vindicating.

With all good wishes,

Faithfully and affectionately, your old friend,

WM. TAYLOR THOM,
2022 N Street NW.

MEMPHIS, TENN., April 5, 1917.

Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: A telegram could not convey to you an expression of the pleasure and pride with which I read your speech of yesterday. You have interpreted the thought and sentiment of the country. We have thought out the issue, and under the cold conviction which has resulted lies a deep-seated and pervading sentiment which would have tolerated no other conclusion. We will fight both because we must fight and because we will to fight.

There is one other service you can render the country; there are many, but one overshadows all others. Let us get ready, but let us really be ready before we put an army in the trenches or the field. Courage can not take the place of that coordination of the units which training and drilling alone can produce. I saw as gallant a regiment as was in our Army go into utter panic when first under fire; it could not be rallied, because of the want of cohesion that comes from training.

I have but one apprehension; that the demagogue who preaches that the untrained "fellow citizen" on whose vote he depends, can by instinct do any thing from commanding a dreadnaught to playing a cathedral organ, will get in his work.

Smash such cattle as you have smashed LA FOLLETTE.

Your friend,

TIM E. COOPER.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I present telegrams embodying resolutions adopted at mass meetings of citizens of North Platte and Kearney, in the State of Nebraska, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NORTH PLATTE, NEBR., April 5, 1917.

Senator G. M. HITCHCOCK,
Washington, D. C.

To the President and Congress of the United States:

We, the people of North Platte, Nebr., have assembled in mass meeting to give public and unequivocal expression to our convictions and wishes in this great world crisis. We are convinced that our Government has done everything possible to save the country from the evils of war. In spite of the efforts of our Government to maintain the neutrality of this country, a situation has arisen in international affairs which is intolerable. We hereby express our confidence that the President and Congress of the United States will meet this crisis wisely, fearlessly, and with full realization of its gravity. Finally, if the President and Congress shall declare that a state of war exists, we pledge to them our united and loyal support in any steps they may deem it necessary to take to bring the war to a successful conclusion and to maintain the dignity and honor of our country.

Unanimously adopted.

Whereas the President, with authority from Congress, has declared war against the Imperial German Government: Be it

Resolved, That Kearney Lodge, No. 984, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, reaffirm allegiance to our country and our flag and tenders its services in whatever way they may be needed in defense of the great principles of humanity outlined in the President's message to Congress; and it is further

Resolved, That we deeply appreciate the gallant fight made by Senator HITCHCOCK, and assure him that Nebraska is very proud of his splendid efforts for America.

Mr. MYERS. I present a telegram from a committee representing a mass meeting of the citizens of Anaconda, Mont., in which I heartily concur. I ask that the telegram may be printed in the RECORD. I am in entire accord therewith.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ANACONDA, MONT., April 9, 1917.

Hon. HENRY L. MYERS,
Washington, D. C.:

The following resolution was unanimously indorsed here this evening: With full realization, with appreciation of the great privilege of being American citizens, entitled to the blessing of liberty guaranteed by the greatest and grandest Constitution ever framed, conscious of the great debt of gratitude to those heroes of 1776 who shed their blood and gave their lives in a struggle against the tyranny of kings that the people of this country might be free, and to those other heroes of 1861 who made the utmost sacrifice that this Government of the people, for the people, and by the people should not perish, and with full appreciation of the services of those Americans who suffered and endured in other wars waged for the preservation of our liberty or in the cause of humanity, we, the citizens of Anaconda, Mont., assembled in mass meeting to-night, acknowledge our duty to our country in this hour of great need. We believe that our President exercised the extreme of patience and exhausted every honorable means to prevent war, but that continued violence of our national rights and inhuman treatment of our unoffending citizens by an autocratic power left no other course to be pursued in support of our President and in defense of our rights. We therefore pledge ourselves to make every sacrifice necessary to bring to a successful conclusion the war in which our country is now involved.

Dr. J. M. SLIGH, Chairman.
F. H. CLINTON, Secretary.

Mr. MYERS. I have also a letter from a citizen of Anaconda, Mont., which breathes such pure patriotism and so nearly expresses my sentiments that I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ANACONDA, MONT., March 31, 1917.

Hon. HENRY L. MYERS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As you doubtless wish to ascertain public opinion in regard to the impending difficulty with Germany I shall tell you my opinion and what I have observed in regard to the opinions of others.

Although I am nominally a Republican I voted for Mr. Wilson at the last election, and, in order to support him, for Mr. Evans and yourself. I voted for him because I approved of his course in nearly every particular, except as to the immigration bill. He is right in keeping us out of war with Mexico and right in keeping us out of the European muddle up to this time. But now the hour has struck when National self-respect and honor, when love of freedom and of fair play, call this Nation to arms. Although war is senseless, barbarous, and out of date, still, as it is the going method of settling differences, we must do as the Romans do—"suffer it be-so now"—and engage in it. Perhaps preparation will accomplish our purposes, but if not, then I am personally in favor of pushing the deed to the utmost limit of arms and men, of credit and supplies, and cooperation. We must not suppose we are fighting or cooperating with men and nations; we are contending against false ideas and ideals, against fading forms of tyranny and autocracy, against the ignorance and misinformation engendered by a throttled press, against all the insidious influences that would make men truce breakers.

As to the opinions of others than myself, all with whom I come in contact seem to regard war as a calamity, but the only feasible way of vindicating our national honor. The calmness of the western people is perhaps largely due to the influence of President Wilson's restraint. It is a valuable asset and a thing to be thankful for, but it must not be mistaken for apathy. If the present Congress should repeat the treachery of the "little group of willful men" it would soon find out what the quality of this "apathy" is.

The loyal attitude of Montana's Representatives in the last Congress has been a matter of gratification to Montana's citizens, and gives reason for the expectation that you will consistently continue to uphold the President. The representative form of Government is not fitted for all the emergencies of war, however, hence I trust that Congress will vest the President with all possible power, to the end that the Nation's energies may be coordinated promptly upon the task before us.

I am expressing myself similarly to Mr. Walsh and to Mr. Evans.

Sincerely, yours,

ROY A. HOFFEDITZ.

DEAR SIR: We, the undersigned inhabitants of the Three R Mining Camp, Patagonia, Ariz., and citizens of the United States, hereby inform you of our desire that you use your influence and vote in favor of national legislation that will enable our beloved country to acquire an adequate fleet of submarines, submarine chasers, aeroplanes, and fortifications, and an Army with all needed modern equipment large and powerful enough (as calculated by reliable military and naval authorities) to resist and defeat any size army that any foe might land and organize for invading our country. We also desire that you disregard estimates of any expert which are below the requirements of the Navy and Army as popularly estimated by a majority of the foremost political leaders of this Nation, regardless of party politics of such leaders.

Furthermore, on account of recurring and persistent rumors that German invading forces are being organized and drilled below the Mexican border, we desire that proper military attention be diverted to this matter. We also favor precautionary and preventive measures to defeat and arrest any hostile Germanic uprisings that might take place in any of our cities or towns as a result of declaration of war against Germany.

We favor a surplus along all needed lines of national defense, rather than to make the unpardonable mistake of inadequate preparation at this critical time in our national existence. As true American citizens, we stand ready to sacrifice and suffer that the great principles of liberty and freedom may be perpetuated and handed down to succeeding generations of Americans, even as they were made secure to us.

Hon. K. D. MCKELLAR,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

In connection with universal military service we beg to suggest the wisdom of exempting young men who are at present in regular attendance at recognized mechanical and agricultural colleges, for they will be badly needed to help our country hold its own in the fight for commercial supremacy that is sure to come after the war is over. This is particularly true in regard to the South where we are just beginning to make rapid strides industrially and have sent thousands of our boys to technical schools to better fit them to aid in carrying the industrial South forward. We submit it would be a calamity to put these boys in military service unless a crisis called for them, in which case we would gladly give them to our country's cause.

COLUMBIAN IRON WORKS,
By H. M. LOFTON,
General Manager.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, it was my privilege last night to attend a great patriotic mass meeting at my home in Brooklyn. It was one of the finest demonstrations of loyalty to the Government that I have ever witnessed. Brooklyn has already equipped and made ready for service seven full National Guard regiments, which are now under Federal control, numbering over 10,000 of its best young men. I submit resolutions adopted at the meeting and ask that they be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions adopted at a patriotic mass meeting of the citizens of Brooklyn, at the Academy of Music, April 9, 1917.

Our hearts go out to all the peoples who have taken up arms in defense of national rights, in fulfillment of sacred treaty obligations, and in support of international law. But especially do we send greetings to the people of Russia. The recent political movement in that land is regarded by us and by all free peoples as "a capital action in human affairs." The transfer of political power from the few to the many in so vast a dominion is symbolic of that new world in which the traditions of absolutism are fading away and the institutions of democracy are slowly rising to power and permanence. We hail such an act as a victory for the principles of free government and as a living pledge of Russia's unconquerable passion for liberal institutions. Whether upon the same battlefields in this great war Russians and Americans shall fight together we do not know, but we are brothers in love of liberty and truth, and when the peoples of a free Europe return to the quiet of their homes and the enjoyment of their liberties, to translate their freedom into progress and self-government, we shall labor and rejoice together in a love that shall heal all jealousies, unite all policies, elevate all principles, ennoble all ambitions, and lead all nations to juster laws, sincerer friendships, and to Christian brotherhood; therefore be it

Resolved, That we take this first opportunity to express publicly to the people of Belgium our deep sympathy for their unmerited sufferings and our admiration for their heroism in maintaining their national honor in the face of cruel persecution. We rejoice that we are now standing side by side with their allies in this world struggle for the rights of mankind. And be it further

Resolved, That we, the people of Brooklyn, in mass meeting assembled, respectfully convey to the President, our chosen leader and the leader of militant democracy the world over, affectionate greeting. We desire to assure you, as we enter, with confident faith in the soundness and justness of our cause, on the supreme trial of war, of our loyalty and devotion and determination to dedicate ourselves whole-heartedly in whatever way we can toward its successful consummation that the principles of humanity and liberty, so nobly expressed by you, may prevail on earth.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I also submit resolutions adopted by the Republican Club of the city of New York at a meeting held last evening, which it was my pleasure to attend. These resolutions were presented by Mr. James R. Sheffield and were strongly advocated by that distinguished citizen of New York State and former Member of this body, Hon. Elihu Root. The resolutions were adopted unanimously and express the sentiment of the members of the Republican Party in the city of New York. I send them to the desk and ask that they may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the members of the Republican Club of the city of New York support with warm approval the address of the President of the United States to the Congress on the 2d of April, and the action of the Congress thereon committing the United States to the war to defend the free peoples of the earth against the control of military autocracy. It is with intense satisfaction that we see our great Republic awakening to a sense of its duty to do its part toward making the world safe for self-governing democracies.

It is our earnest desire that in this vital struggle, upon which our own freedom with that of the world depends, America may exhibit the competency and power of effective action demanded by the interests she has at stake and by her history and her traditions.

To the end that our country may answer to this supreme test, we deem it the duty of all Americans to abjure partisanship and sectionalism and personal advantage and all petty jealousies and dissensions, and to unite in common loyalty and devotion to support the Government of the United States in the most vigorous and effective prosecution of the war.

We are confident that the people can be trusted to rise to the duty of service for their country.

We urge that the rule of universal military training under Federal control and universal readiness for military service by all citizens physically fit be immediately applied, and that all other Americans may seek and through due organization and assignment to duty may find opportunities to do such things as their strength and skill permit in the vast field of civilian service necessary to successful war.

And we urge that at the earliest possible day an American Army shall raise the American flag in the battle lines of Flanders where the enemy of our country may be met.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, there are in Michigan, as I know there are in all the States, thousands of Germans, good American citizens who have a deep interest in the contest that has been going on in Europe and have naturally had a choice as to which of the belligerents should succeed. They have felt at times that there has not been equal impartiality shown by this country to the warring nations and have so expressed themselves. They have tried on every occasion to avoid war between the United States and Germany.

Among the number in Michigan is a gentleman by the name of Carl E. Schmidt, one of the leading Germans in the United States. I have this day received a telegram from a distinguished citizen of Michigan, which I desire to read. It is addressed to me:

BAY CITY, MICH., April 9, 1917.

Hon. CHARLES E. TOWNSEND,
Senate, Washington, D. C.:

I know you will be delighted to learn that Carl E. Schmidt to-day notified Dr. Burt Shurly, chief surgeon in charge of Michigan Red Cross, that he would donate $35,000 to equip a complete Red Cross base hospital. Mr. Schmidt worked most earnestly to prevent war, but now that war has been declared you can see where he stands.

WALTER E. OXTOBY.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Michigan, remonstrating against universal compulsory military training, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Michigan, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JAMES. I desire to have printed in the RECORD a resolution adopted by Princeton Lodge, No. 1115, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of Kentucky, approving the course taken by the President in support of the Government.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States, has been driven by ruthless warfare of the German Government upon American citizens in slaughtering defenseless men, women, and children upon the high seas, in defiance of the obligations and restraints of international law, to summons the Congress of the United States to meet in extraordinary session, and to appeal to it to adopt measures declaring a state of war between the United States and the German Government, and to take immediate steps to place the country in a more thorough state of defense, and to employ all of its resources to bring the German Empire to terms and end the war: Therefore be it

Resolved by Princeton Lodge 1115, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, in regular meeting assembled March 5, 1917—

First. That we heartily indorse the statesmanlike, forbearing, patient course hitherto pursued by our great President and enthusiastically approve his latest address to Congress and all of the recommendations therein made, and we pledge him our earnest sympathy and support in upholding and enforcing the great rights of humanity involved in the impending struggle.

Second. That copies of these resolutions be sent to the President and to the Representatives of the State of Kentucky in the United States Senate and to Hon. A. W. BARKLEY, representing the first congressional district of Kentucky in the lower House of Congress, and that the Twice-a-Week Leader be requested to publish same.

T. H. KING, Secretary.

Mr. THOMPSON. I desire to have printed in the RECORD a telegram adopted at a mass meeting of citizens of my home city and also other telegrams and a petition from the Order of Elks of Wellington, Kans.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I present resolutions passed by the Chamber of Commerce of Trenton, N. J., recommending a bond issue as the fairest and most equitable means of financing war expenditures. I ask that the resolutions be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas a state of war for national defense will make necessary increased expenditure and financial provision for the same; and

Whereas the sacrifices that will necessarily be made by this generation will inure to the blessings and greater benefits of the generations yet to come:

Resolved, That the Trenton Chamber of Commerce earnestly recommend to Congress a bond issue as the fairest and most equitable means of financing war expenditures and as the best method of distributing the burdens among those who will reap the benefits of the sacrifices of to-day;

Resolved, That we earnestly protest against an increased and excessive taxation upon our industries, enterprises, and incomes as detrimental to the prosperity of the land, the maintenance of which is necessary to successfully maintain the necessary burdens of war.

We believe that in this hour especially that the productive capacity of our people should be encouraged by relief from all possible burdens, that nothing should be done to cause a shrinkage in values and a consequent diminution of wealth that should be preserved in order that it may be available to be laid upon the altars of patriotism.

Mr. GALLINGER presented resolutions adopted by the Union Sunday School, Carroll County; the Free Baptist Church of Water Village; the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Water Village; 24 members of the Sunday School, East Sandwich; 82 members of the Methodist, Episcopal, and Baptist Churches, Center Sandwich; 10 members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Sandwich; 58 members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Alton; 35 members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of East Manchester; 41 members of the First Presbyterian Sabbath School, of Antrim; 150 members of the Baptist Congregation of Hudson; 100 members of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, of Salem; 60 members of the First Methodist Episcopal Sunday School, of Salem; 25 members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Hudson; 48 members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Epping; the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Candia; 150 members of the First Baptist Church, Sunday School, and Christian Endeavor Society, of Salem Depot; 100 members of the Congregational Church of Hudson; 110 members of the Methodist Episcopal Church Sunday School of Hudson; 48 members of the Epworth League of Hudson; the Congregational Sunday School of Hudson; 125 members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Manchester; and 70 members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Northwood, all in the State of New Hampshire, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present resolutions adopted at a meeting of colored citizens of Chicago expressing confidence in the President. I do not ask that they be read, but printed at length in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HEADQUARTERS COLORED CITIZENS' LOYALTY COMMITTEE,
Chicago, April 6, 1917.

Hon. LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At Bethel Church last Sunday (probably the largest meeting of colored citizens ever held in this city) our people expressed their attitude upon the impending national crisis in the following resolutions, copies of which were telegraphed to President Wilson and Gov. Lowden.

In accordance with further instructions of the committee, I am forwarding a copy of these resolutions to the Illinois congressional delegation, including Senators SHERMAN and LEWIS.

It is the hope of the committee that these resolutions be made a matter of record upon the Journals of the respective branches of Congress.

Respectfully submitted.

Dr. ALLEN A. WESLEY,
Chairman.

Committee: Dr. Allen A. Wesley, Edward H. Wright, S. A. T. Watkins, Franklin A. Denison, Charles S. Duke, Dr. George C. Hall, Rev. William D Cook, Edmund M. Ware, Dr. Theodore R. Mozee, Willis V. Jefferson, William H. Clark. Albert B. George, Robert A. J. Shaw, Robert L. Taylor, secretary.

Mindful of the fact that from the hour of the formation of this Nation, in every moment of its peril our fathers have consecrated their lives to the protection of our country, our flag, and our Nation, and have placed their hope for the full enjoyment of all the rights of American citizens in the pledge of the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of this, their country.

And further mindful of the fact that because the American people, in the midst of the terrible war devastating Europe, true to their traditions have found it to be their duty to insist upon the observance of the sacred rights of humanity and neutrals, on the part of the belligerents, this Nation finds itself to-day on the brink of a war which will engage the entire resources of this country, material and patriotic.

Be it resolved, That we, the colored citizens of Chicago, in mass meeting assembled, do reaffirm our readiness to discharge every duty incumbent on an American citizen, notwithstanding the fact that all rights and privileges are not always accorded to us.

Be it further resolved, That we reconsecrate our lives, our energies, and our resources to the protection of our country, our flag, and our Government, and that we hereby pledge to the President of the United States, Congress, and the governor of Illinois our unqualified loyalty and support in each and every exigency which may arise, and we do hereby call upon all loyal citizens to cooperate with us.

Be it further resolved, That as citizens of the State of Illinois, we pledge our unqualified support to sustain and maintain the Eighth Regiment Infantry, National Guard, and bespeak for them the same high measure of devotion and loyalty to the cause of the American people which it has shown in the past.

Mr. SHERMAN. I also present a telegram in the nature of a petition from Samuel M. Hastings, president of the Illinois Manufacturers' Association, making suggestions as to the method of entering into certain contracts for Government supplies during the war. I ask that the telegram be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., April 9, 1917.

Hon. LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN.
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

In the present great emergency the Government departments seem to be under the necessity of following exactly the same methods in securing competitive bids as they follow in peace, when time is no object, and manufacturers in this section are complaining of the delays in securing business from them; we think that manufacturers would be willing to agree with department officers upon bare prices made up by adding an average peace-time profit to costs and thereby enabling the Government to apportion orders among the manufacturers at a considerable saving of time. Will you kindly confer with the proper Government officials regarding this matter.

SAMUEL M. HASTINGS, President.

Mr. WATSON. I present a telegram from the governor of Indiana and one from J. W. Adams, of Indianapolis, Ind., which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., April 9, 1917.

Hon. JAMES E. WATSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We are having wonderful meetings all over the State for the purpose of conserving and increasing food supplies. Very important farmers should receive fertilizer and seeds of various kinds. They have been embarrassed by long delays in shipments. Would help immensely if Interstate Commerce Commission could be prevailed upon to enter immediate order requiring railroads to card all cars containing fertilizer or seeds. Mark them "Rush," and give strict preference to all such shipments. Similar messages to NEW, WOOD, and COX.

JAMES P. GOODRICH,
Governor of Indiana.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., April 9, 1917.

Senator JAMES E. WATSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Pass a decree prohibiting the slaughter of veal till 3 years old. Will increase output of meat millions and millions of pounds. Thousands of calves are destroyed at birth because of high price of milk. More money by killing calf and selling milk.

J. W. ADAMS.

Mr. WATSON presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Indiana, praying for the erection of a monument to the late Gen. William Henry Harrison, late President of the United States, at North Bend, Ohio, which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. WALSH. I present a telegram submitting resolutions adopted at a mass meeting of citizens of Anaconda, Mont., pledging loyalty to the President. I understand a similar telegram has been presented by my colleague and ordered printed in the RECORD. I will not ask that this telegram be printed, but that it be received and appropriately referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The telegram will lie on the table.

Mr. McLEAN presented petitions of Charles L. Upham Camp, No. 7, Sons of Veterans, and of sundry citizens of Meriden, Conn., praying for universal military training and pledging support to the President, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ADDITIONAL CAPITOL POLICE.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I understand that the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 28) authorizing the temporary employment of additional policemen for the Capitol Building and Grounds and the Senate and House Office Buildings, which was passed by the Senate on yesterday, has been transmitted to the House of Representatives. I enter a motion to reconsider the votes by which the joint resolution was passed, and I move that the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate the joint resolution. I make this motion in order that when the joint resolution is returned to the Senate I may offer an amendment to it that is very important.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina enters a motion to reconsider the votes by which the Senate passed Senate joint resolution No. 28, and that the House be requested to return the joint resolution to the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MEASUREMENT OF VESSELS FOR TOLLS.

Mr. SHIELDS. From the Committee on Interoceanic Canals I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 831) providing that the Panama Canal rules shall govern in the measurement of vessels for imposing tolls, and I submit a report No. 6) thereon. As this is a matter of some urgency and one which I expect to ask to have disposed of at this session, in order that it may be brought more readily to the attention of the Senate I ask that the report be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. PENROSE. I suggest to the Senator from Tennessee that he ask that the bill also be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SHIELDS. The bill is embodied in the report and will, of course, appear in the RECORD if my request is granted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Tennessee is complied with.

The report submitted this day by Mr. SHIELDS is as follows:

Mr. SHIELDS, from the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, submitted the following report (to accompany S. 831):

The Committee on Interoceanic Canals, to whom was referred the bill (S. 831) providing that the Panama Canal rules shall govern in the measurement of vessels for imposing tolls, after considering the same recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill under consideration is in these words:

"A bill providing that the Panama Canal rules shall govern in the measurment of vessels for imposing tolls.

"Be it enacted, etc., That in measuring vessels and determining the tolls to be paid thereon at the Panama Canal, the measurement shall be made and tonnage determined in all cases by the Panama Canal rules as they now exist, or as they may be changed from time to time; and the tonnage arrived at by those rules shall be the tonnage to which shall be applied the maximum and minimum rates now fixed by law or hereafter to be fixed for the purpose of determining the maximum and minimum tolls which may be charged.

"SEC. 2. That all laws and parts of laws, rules and regulations in conflict with this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed."

The facts and conditions calling for this legislation are as follows:

The Panama Canal act, approved August 24, 1912, authorized the President to prescribe the tolls to be levied by the Panama Canal within certain limits, and to decide upon the measurments to be adopted, but provided that "when based upon net registered tonnage for ships of commerce the tolls shall not exceed $1.25 per net registered ton."

This provision was interpreted by the Panama Canal authorities to mean the net tonnage of vessels as determined by the Panama Canal rules of measurement. These rules had been formulated by an authority on transportation matters who had been engaged by the Panama Canal authorities for this purpose, based on the fundamental principle that commercial vessels should be taxed in accordance with their earning capacities.

The Attorney General, however, when the question was submitted to him held that the words "net registered tonnage" as used in the Panama Canal act must mean the net tonnage under the United States rules of measurement, and that if the toll rate established at $1.30 per net ton, when multiplied by the tonnage as ascertained by the Panama Canal rules, exceeds the amount produced by multiplying the net registered tonnage as measured by the rules prescribed in the United States statutes by $1.25. the excess thus produced is uncollectible.

The effect of this ruling has been to vitiate the principle established that vessels should pay tolls according to their earning capacities, to discriminate against certain ships, and decrease materially the revenues of the canal, to increase the difficulties of administration through the measurment of ships under both sets of rules, and (as a large percentage of tolls previously collected were in excess of the amount collectible under the decision) to require the rechecking of all ships' measurements to ascertain the excess.

Practically all countries charge port and light dues, wharfage, etc., on the basis of net tonnage. In view of the fact that these dues are only a few cents per ton, a number of the leading maritime nations, including the United States, have entered into reciprocal relations whereby they recognize each other's tonnage certificates for levying these dues, notwithstanding the discrepancies in the different rules of measurement. The laws of the United States designate the Commissioner of Navigation as the official who shall prepare the necessary rules and regulations for the measurement of vessels of the United States. Such rules are naturally fixed so as to give our merchant vessels all the benefits possible in the reduction of any dues that may be imposed, and the rules are changed from time to time with this purpose in view. Hence, in a great majority of cases, the net tonnage of vessels under United States measurement rules is less than under the Panama Canal rules. Furthermore, the Commissioner of Navigation, in a circular dated March 16, 1915, exempted from measurement under certain conditions shelter deck and closed-in spaces. These changes, when taken into account in the levying of Panama Canal tolls, still further deviate from the principle that vessels using the canal shall be taxed according to their earning capacities.

The Panama Canal rules, following strictly the principle that the earning capacity of a ship should determine its tolls, take cognizance of the deck spaces utilized for the carrying of cargo, and charges are provided for deck loads, which are not computed in fixing the United States tonnage, as well as all passenger spaces. The exemption of practically all shelter-deck spaces and deck loads of vessels using the canal (deck loads not being included in the United States measurement rules) has resulted in discrimination against most of the United States vessels transiting this waterway, owing to the fact that almost all United States vessels are so constructed that they are unable to take advantage of shelter-deck space, while a large proportion of the foreign ships have been so constructed that they can take advantage of these exemptions. On the other hand, the United States rules provide for the exemption of certain cabin spaces above the upper deck; that is, not a deck attached to the hull, which would in most cases result in discrimination against foreign vessels in favor of the United States passenger steamers if the national register of the vessel were recognized as a factor to be considered in the levying of tolls.

As time goes on and traffic increases, with a resulting increase in the number of classes of vessels using the canal, it becomes more evident that it will be absolutely necessary to adopt some one rule for the levying of tolls, and experience has demonstrated beyond a doubt that the fairest rule for determining the tonnage of a vessel, in order that tolls may be assessed without discrimination, and on a just basis, are the Panama Canal rules for measurement. Furthermore, the Commissioner of Navigation has stated that the Panama Canal rules of measurement are without doubt the most exact application of the scientific principles governing the measurement of vessels yet prepared.

While the monetary loss to the Panama Canal during the fiscal year 1916, due to the Attorney General's ruling, amounting to $390,714.05, or 16.3 per cent of the amount actually collected, during the five months the canal was open, is considerable, and jeopardizes the success of the canal from a financial standpoint, the present unsatisfactory condition also results in discrimination for and against ships, which discrimination is in violation of our treaty obligations. This condition also results in difficult, as well as unsatisfactory administration which, it is believed, will be remedied by this bill.

The application of the United States rules in lieu of the Panama Canal rules in the levying of tolls has resulted in a great number of claims for refund of illegally collected tolls in the first instance, some of which will be impossible of settlement until an opportunity offers for the remeasurement of the ships affected in accordance with the United States rules. It is now necessary to measure according to both sets of rules (United States and Panama Canal) in order to determine correct assessment of tolls. The Panama Canal authorities on the Isthmus are not always aware of the changes made by the Commissioner of Navigation located in Washington until some time after they have been effected. This happened in July last, when rules were made effective July 13 that were not known of on the Isthmus until the last of the month, and complete information not received until August. In the interval tolls were collected under the rules as the authorities at the Isthmus knew them; consequently additional refunds are necessary. With measurers all over the United States it is not surprising that differences are found when check is made by the admeasurers on the Isthmus, and it becomes necessary at times to refer questions to Washington, where the final decision rests. The difficulties of administration under such a system are apparent, resulting in irritating and vexatious delays. Furthermore, this situation is very confusing and annoying to the owners and operators of steamships using the canal, who are obliged to have their vessels measured under two sets of rules, particularly those in foreign countries, who are unfamiliar with the present situation and unable to understand why the two sets of rules are involved.

Briefly, the difficulties at present existing and for which remedial legislation is sought may be summarized as follows:

1. The monetary loss to the United States: This loss is such as to jeopardize the financial success of the canal. During the fiscal year of 1916 it amounted to $390,714.05. When it is remembered that the canal was closed seven months of the year on account of slides, some idea may be gained of the loss which will be sustained during a full business year, especially after the close of the European war with the resulting increase in traffic, if the proposed legislation be not enacted.

2. Difficulties of administration: The necessity of measuring vessels under two sets of rules (United States and Panama Canal) in order to determine the correct assessment of tolls, and the further fact that the United States rules may be changed at any time without the knowledge of the canal authorities, greatly increases the difficulties of administration, besides causing irritating and vexatious delays to shipping.

3. Discrimination against American vessels and violation of treaties: Under present conditions particular classes of vessels may optionally take advantage of certain privileges in the classification and exemption of space, which gives them a decided advantage over others less favored. This is particularly true in the case of foreign vessels. Such discrimination is a clear violation of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, which stipulates that there should be no discrimination in favor of the vessels of any nation, and operates to the disadvantage of American ships of commerce. It is also in violation of the cardinal principles, which was adopted by the Panama Canal authorities in the preparation of their rules, to the effect that all vessels should be required to pay tolls on their actual earning capacity. The unrestricted application of the Panama Canal rules will avoid any question of discrimination and violation of treaties.

For further detailed information regarding the Panama Canal tolls situation, attention is invited to the attached pamphlet entitled "Statement prepared by Capt. Rodman and submitted to the Commitee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives by the Panama Canal authorities."

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 1552) to amend chapter 2582 of the Statutes of the United States, the same being entitled "An act to appoint Joseph Y. Porter a lieutenant colonel and deputy surgeon general and place him on the retired list of the Army," approved March 2, 1907; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SMITH of Arizona (for Mr. MCLEAN):

A bill (S. 1553) to give effect to the convention between the United States and Great Britain for the protection of migratory birds concluded at Washington August 16, 1916, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. CURTIS:

A bill (S. 1554) creating a board for the management of Indian affairs, to provide for the classification of Indians, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. SHAFROTH:

A bill (S. 1555) to repeal the last proviso of section 4 of an act to establish the Rocky Mountain National Park in the State of Colorado, and for other purposes, approved January 26, 1915; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota:

A bill (S. 1556) for the relief of the heirs of Harry Davenport, deceased; and

A bill (S. 1557) for the relief of Arthur Nelson; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 1558) for the relief of F. C. X. Boucher; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A bill (S. 1559) granting an increase of pension to Nelson Coffen; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES of New Mexico:

A bill (S. 1560) granting to certain States public lands for the construction, repair, and maintenance of public roads; and

A bill (S. 1561) limiting the creation or extension of forest reserves in New Mexico; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. PENROSE:

A bill (S. 1562) for the relief of every officer or private soldier who was honorably discharged after 90 days' service in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the War of the Rebellion;

A bill (S. 1563) granting an annuity equivalent to $50 per month to officers and enlisted men of the United States Army, Navy, and Marine Corps who have attained the age of 65 years and have been, or may hereafter be, awarded medals of honor for gallantry and heroism involving great personal peril, and authorizing the President of the United States to make rules and regulations for carrying the act into effect; and

A bill (S. 1564) granting an annuity of $100 to officers and enlisted men of the United States Army, Navy, and Marine Corps who have been awarded medals of honor for gallantry in action and other soldierlike qualities under acts of Congress, and authorizing the President of the United States to make rules and regulations for carrying the act into effect; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 1565) for the relief of certain officers of the Army and Navy in connection with the construction of the Panama Canal; to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

A bill (S. 1566) to limit the effect of the regulation of interstate commerce between the States in goods, wares, and merchandise wholly or in part manufactured, mined, or produced by convict labor or in any prison or reformatory; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 1567) granting an increase of pension to William D. Martin (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 1568) granting an increase of pension to Matilda C. Heilman; and

A bill (S. 1569) granting a pension to Katharine E. Bocaskey; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 1570) to authorize the appointment in the Army, and the immediate retirement, with the rank of captain, of Robert Armour, who was a captain in the Civil War, an employee of the War Department for 50 years, and 75 years of age; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LODGE:

A bill (S. 1571) to dissolve the Foundation for the Promotion of Industrial Peace, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. SHERMAN:

A bill (S. 1572) granting a pension to Eliza J. M. Clemens; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McLEAN:

A bill (S. 1573) granting a pension to Conrad Hockenberger; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FERNALD:

A bill (S. 1574) granting an increase of pension to William H. H. Knight (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 1575) granting an increase of pension to Mark P. Morton;

A bill (S. 1576) granting an increase of pension to Charles F. Wellman;

A bill (S. 1577) granting an increase of pension to George W. Townsend;

A bill (S. 1578) granting an increase of pension to Morey Milliken;

A bill (S. 1579) granting an increase of pension to Harriet E. Howard;

A bill (S. 1580) granting an increase of pension to Charles A. Holmes;

A bill (S. 1581) granting a pension to Mary E. Finson;

A bill (S. 1582) granting an increase of pension to Phoebe W. Chase;

A bill (S. 1583) granting an increase of pension to Ida E. Cook;

A bill (S. 1584) granting an increase of pension to William P. Cook; and

A bill (S. 1585) granting an increase of pension to John L. Bradford; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LEWIS:

A bill (S. 1586) for the conservation of alcohol in the manufacture of dealcoholized fermented beverages; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. GALLINGER:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 29) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

OFFENSES AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. POINDEXTER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2) to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

PRINTING OF DECISIONS OF SUPREME COURT.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, two decisions have recently been rendered by the Supreme Court of the United States touching matters that have had the earnest consideration of the Senate—one the eight-hour-law decision and the other entitled "The Utah Power & Light Co. against The United States," disposing of the question as to whether public lands of the United States are subject to the eminent domain power of the States. I ask that both these decisions be printed as a public document for the information of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator to allow his request to go to the Committee on Printing for action. The committee will then report it out.

Mr. WALSH. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The matter will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

ADDITIONAL CAPITOL POLICE.

Mr. OVERMAN. I introduce a joint resolution authorizing the temporary employment of additional policemen for the Capitol Building and Grounds and the Senate and House Office Buildings, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. The joint resolution is to correct a similar one which was passed by the Senate on yesterday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 30) authorizing the temporary employment of additional policemen for the Capitol Building and Grounds and the Senate and House Office Buildings was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That in order to secure a more complete protection of the Capitol Building and Grounds and the Senate and House Office Buildings there shall be employed, while Congress is in session, and not later than the 15th day of July, 1917, by the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate and the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives, 50 additional policemen, who shall be appointed solely on account of their efficiency and special qualifications.

To enable the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay the necessary expenses of said employment, at a rate not to exceed $3 per day, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $14,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the same to be immediately available and to be paid upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the Committee on Rules of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I believe at the time the Senate adjourned on yesterday there was pending before the Senate the provision with reference to advertising for recruits for the Army.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is on page 41, beginning in line 6, and will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on Military Affairs proposes to insert, beginning in line 6, on page 41, as follows:

Provided further, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ the services of one or more advertising agencies in advertising for recruits for the Army under such terms and conditions as he may deem to be most advantageous to the interests of the Government.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, just a word. I have no doubt that some form of advertising for recruits for the Army may be necessary, even under present conditions, but I hope that in any such advertisements that are framed by the department hereafter they will set out more the needs of the Government for men to enlist in the Army than present a roseate view of the opportunities which a man, after he has enlisted in the Army, has for his own benefit. The main objection I have had to many advertisements which have been put out heretofore was that they have not presented the needs of the Government, but they have presented a roseate picture of the opportunities which come to a man after he enlists in the Army, which I do not think ought to be presented by the Government and which is not warranted by the actual facts and conditions.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in consequence of illness I have not been able to follow the debates on this or on any other bill during the present session. This proposition looks to encouraging recruiting. Without discussing its merits, I will venture at this point to ask the chairman of the committee if there is in contemplation at the present time a forced draft or conscription to create an army for our country? I have noticed a suggestion—I think emanating from the President of the United States—that we should resort to that method of recruiting an army for our service. That does not appeal to me, Mr. President, I will say offhand, as a wise thing to do. I have no knowledge of any time—certainly not in this country, and I do not know of any such in any other country—where forced conscription was resorted to at the beginning of a war. I am very solicitous as to how a matter of that kind would be received by the people of the country.

My notion is, Mr. President, that we ought to encourage recruiting in a more liberal way than we are doing at the present time. I have an impression that there was some debate yesterday—somebody suggested it to me, for I was not in the Chamber—as to the pay that we should give to our soldiers, the present pay being, in my opinion, utterly inadequate. I have been looking casually over what our neighbor, Canada, is doing in that regard. Canada is a little country of 8,000,000 of people. She has recruited for the service in Europe 400,000 of her best young men; she has sent 350,000 of them to the front, where they are today, except those who have given up their lives in defense of the allied cause. Fifty thousand more are ready to go upon call. But what does Canada do? Canada pays her soldiers $1.10 a day; Australia pays her soldiers $1.50 a day; and Canada has also raised an enormous fund—I will not now venture to say what amount it is—to take care of the families of her soldiers while they are at the front.

Why, Mr. President, if we should recruit an army in proportion to our population which would compare with the number which Canada has recruited, we should have an army of over 5,000,000 soldiers. I do not, however, believe that we can recruit them by paying our soldiers the paltry sum which they are now being paid under existing law, which, I believe, is $15 a month. I will ask the Senator from Wyoming if I am correct in that statement?

Mr. WARREN. The basic pay is $15 a month, and then for each subsequent enlistment there is added an increase in pay. There is also an addition for excellent service in the way of sharpshooting, and all that. Then, of course, all noncommissioned officers receive more pay. So the pay ranges all the way from $15 up to $80 or $90 in the various grades and services.

Mr. GALLINGER. But the fact still remains that the private soldier upon enlistment gets only $15 per month.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But, if the Senator will allow me, to the men we are taking away from their business, whom we expect to keep for one or two years, this increase would not come.

Mr. GALLINGER. No.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is not to be their business permanently, and they are temporarily broken up in their incomes by the operation of this law of Congress.

Mr. GALLINGER. Absolutely so; and I contend that the young man who leaves his business to fight for his country should be adequately paid; and if he leaves a family very liberal provision should be made for their care during his absence.

Mr. President, I am reasonably familiar with conditions in Canada, and I know that the 400,000 men who have been enlisted in Canada for service in the trenches of Europe comprise the very best blood and sinew of that Dominion. They are a splendid army of young men. They were the admiration of the armies of France and of England when they appeared on the scene of action. I have a letter from the front stating that it was the first time they had seen regiments of gentlemen. Those young men left their occupations and enlisted because the country encouraged them to enlist, because the pay was liberal, and because their families were to be provided for in the most generous manner. And they have done the most valiant service that any army has ever done on the battle field.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator a question, purely for information. I have heard it stated, but I have no proof of it; I have never seen it officially stated, but I understand it is true that in Canada they are enlisting the men and the men volunteer for the war?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does not the Senator think that the main objection of the average young man in America who wants to go into the Regular Army or the Navy now is that he has to enlist for a fixed term? If we should change the term of enlistment so as to read "for the war," or, say, 30 days thereafter, would not that do away with the objection that most men have? They do not want to be enlisted in such a way as that, perhaps the war being over in a year, they shall be hanging around forts and encampments under the charge of drill sergeants.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think there is a great deal of force in the suggestion made by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is not this the Regular Army bill, and will we not have a special bill covering a different plan of enlistment for the emergency that confronts us?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; this is the Regular Army appropriation bill. As to what may follow, I am not fully informed. I will allow the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] to answer that suggestion.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, this is the appropriation bill for the present establishment if it remains the same from now until the end of the next fiscal year. The suggested bill, of which the Senator speaks, is not yet before Congress in any shape, except that an outline of the bill has been presented to the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee of the House, and the Secretary of War and officers of the Regular Establishment are explaining its provisions. What shape it may take I do not know, but there is a conscriptive idea in it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, what I wanted to say—and I am saying it very haltingly and without any coherence, perhaps, because I am not in a condition to discuss anything as I would like to discuss it—but the point I wanted to make, thinking that I might not be here when the bill is considered further, was that I have very grave apprehensions about this idea of conscription at the present time, and very grave apprehensions as to whether it will appeal to the people of the United States. I wanted further to make this appeal that we should be liberal to these men who are going to fight the battles of our country.

Why, Mr. President, if you will read the record of the soldiers that Canada has sent you will find that they engaged in and practically controlled the great Calais drive, which was one of the most memorable military exploits that the world has ever known; and if you have read the newspapers you will have observed that it was the Canadian troops who captured the famous Vimy ridge on yesterday. They are at the very front of this fight. They are the best young men that Canada has produced; and they go there because the Government is back of them in a liberal spirit, encouraging them, paying them well, and taking care of their families.

I do not believe we can raise a volunteer army unless we emulate what Canada has done and is doing, and give our young men to understand that they are not going to be sent to the front to fight the battles of the country for $15 a month, and that their families are to be taken care of in a parsimonious manner. I think we will have to adopt a very liberal policy, and in that way encourge enlistments, which are not, at the present time satisfactory, so far as numbers are concerned.

Now, Mr. President, that is all I care to say. I have no disposition to delay the consideration of this bill or of any other bill looking to the proper organization of the Army which will be called upon to defend the honor and the integrity of our country. On the contrary, I want to help in every way that I can the Senator from Oregon and other Senators who have this matter in charge, to get legislation that will enable us to carry on this war to a successful conclusion; but in that work we must not forget to take good care of the private soldier, who bears the brunt of the conflict on every battle field.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. I merely wish to say to the Senator from New Hampshire that I am more than delighted to hear the expressions which have fallen from his lips on this very important subject. I am cordially, heartily, almost enthusiastically in favor of the views which he has expressed. I believe there is enough patriotism in this country to organize a volunteer army at this time; and until that is demonstrated not to be true, I do not believe we should resort to the conscription of our young men to fight the battles of the country.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I do not propose to answer the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] now with reference to the pay of the enlisted personnel of the Army, because there is an amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] which brings this whole question before the Senate, and I will later have something to say on the subject and show what the soldiers of the armies of the world are receiving. The question immediately before the Senate is that of advertising for recruits; and, in order that the Senate may fully understand the matter, the question having been raised by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], I will call attention to the reasons which suggest this amendment to the bill, and then, if the Senate does not want to adopt it, of course, its disposition is with the Senate.

The Secretary of War recommends this amendment, and makes this explanation in reference to it:

> In an act of Congress approved August 22, 1912 (37 Stat. L., p. 332), authority was granted the naval authorities to employe the services of an advertising agency in advertising for recruits. The officers in charge of recruiting for the Navy consider the employment of an advertising agency as a considerable improvement over the old system, with no greater, if as great, expense, not to mention a material saving in paper work.
> The old system is still in use in advertising for recruits for the Army; and while, of course, all reasonable efforts are made to secure the best results from this system, yet it is reasonably certain that an experienced advertising agency can be of material aid in accomplishing more gratifying results.

I do not see the Senator from Washington now in the Chamber, but he spoke of these flaming advertisements yesterday. The Secretary of War continues:

> By utilizing reading articles instead of the present "Men wanted" advertisements, and by preparing short and interesting articles of actual experience in the Army, advertising agencies, with their experienced corps of writers and with their knowledge of advertising rates and the classes of persons reached by various publications, are in a position to secure better results than can be obtained through present methods of newspaper advertising.

Then the Secretary of War recommends the provision which the committee adopted, feeling that it would be a more reasonable way to reach the intelligence of the men of the country than by the use of flaming advertisements. The Secretary is very anxious to have it; the Navy has it; I think that good results will come from it; and that it will accomplish what the Senator from New Hampshire wants to accomplish, and that is, to secure recruits for the Army.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the purposes of the Secretary of War are very commendable and worthy, but I think it would be a serious mistake in this great emergency for this Government to undertake any campaign of paid advertising in the newspapers. There is no appropriation that is available to the Government to make an adequate campaign. All that it could do would be merely a drop in the bucket, and to advertise in some papers would inevitably result in diminishing the spirit of others. To my mind the newspapers of the country ought to be asked and expected to contribute voluntarily all of the publicity which the War Department and the Navy Department desire; and I have no doubt the newspapers will respond and give gratuitously all the space which the Government of the United States can reasonably require. There is some reason more than the ordinary reason why the newspapers should do this. They are to some extent at the present time, and have been for 30 years, the beneficiaries of a liberal Government spirit. They are given preferred privileges in the public mails for the reason that they contribute to the public good. I believe that in this occasion of emergency, when individuals are volunteering their services, not only in the Army but also in civil walks of life, gratuitously to the service of the Government, the newspapers ought to be given an opportunity to contribute.

Therefore, Mr. President, I have prepared as a substitute the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The substitute offered by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the amendment proposed by the committee it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to accept the gratuitous services of one or more advertising agencies, and in connection therewith such free services and free advertising as patriotic newspapers and magazines may be willing to give in stimulating recruiting.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if that would be necessary? Has not the Secretary that authority without an act of Congress?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, at least it would be directory and suggestive, and it would put back of the act of the Secretary of War the authority of Congress. This is not now a case for routine advertising. If this country is to be aroused as it ought to be aroused there must be the united, the spontaneous, and the gratuitous effort of the newspapers to do it, and they will do it. Many of them are already active. The substitute which I propose will simply direct the Secretary of War in the course which he will pursue; and I have no doubt in the world that it will be met by the almost unanimous support of newspapers, big and little, all over the United States.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me a moment further, I wish to say I do not desire to have my interruption construed as being in any way antagonistic to his suggestion. I think the matter proposed by the able Senator from Nebraska is a very proper thing to do. I believe the newspapers ought to do it; and, as I always indulge the presumption that a man will do the thing he ought to do, I am going to be just enough to the newspapers to believe they will do it. It is the patriotic thing to do, and the patriotic thing is the thing that ought to be done at this time. I agree with all my heart to the suggestions that have been made on the floor of this Chamber this morning—that nothing will bring men to the colors like firing the patriotic spirit. It is not the lure of gold or the greed for gain that will cause the citizen to bear his breast to the enemy's bullet, but rather a matter of love for the flag, reverence for the Constitution, and adoration for the home of his fathers and the hearthstones of his loved ones. The greatest asset in the enterprise of war is love of country. Men may be brave and strong and well trained, but if they are lacking in patriotism the conquering force is lacking. I think every opportunity should be given the men of America to volunteer for service to the Government in this great emergency. Compulsion is inconsistent and discordant with the higher ideals of the duties of citizenship. The man who is to be forced to fight his country's battles in time of war is fatally deficient in the higher and better elements of citizenship. I am not going to consent to the humiliation of the white men of this Republic by providing for compulsory military service until the citizen has had an opportunity to show his patriotism. After he fails in his duty will be ample time to enact laws compelling him to serve his country.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska permit an interruption?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I called upon the Secretary of War yesterday with a suggestion along the lines of that proposed by the Senator from Nebraska, and I think there would be no objection at all upon his part if I should repeat what he said to me—that this suggestion has been acted upon by the War Department and this course is being pursued now.

While I think the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska is very appropriate and perhaps ought to be put in the bill, yet I was very much pleased, when I presented to the War Department the suggestion from a prominent journal in my State, to have the Secretary say that the department had already acted along the lines suggested by this journal and by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, that is true; and it is true also at the present time that a number of newspapers in the country are giving thousands of dollars' worth of space gratuitously and enthusiastically to encouraging recruiting. All that we now need is to direct it and coordinate it. I have proposed in this amendment that the War Department be authorized to accept the gratuitous services of one or more advertising agencies; and while I have no knowledge of any particular advertising agency at this moment, I have no doubt in the world that practically every advertising agency in the country would be glad of an opportunity to serve the War Department without charge, and that they will emulate and compete with each other in furnishing ideas and in furnishing services to the War Department.

I am not in possession of a list of newspapers which have already voluntarily taken action without any cooperation with each other, but simply from a spontaneous desire to do their bit. I know that in New York, Mr. Hearst's paper, and throughout the country his other papers, have taken the lead, and other papers in New York and some in Boston; and I know that other papers in the West have already taken action in this direction.

All that I propose by this amendment is to give form and method to the work; let it be directed by the War Department, and it will be carried out, I have no doubt, practically unanimously by all the newspapers of the country; and $10,000,000 would not suffice to pay for the publicity which can be gratuitously given in this way within six months.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, this amendment does not compel the Secretary of War to do this work through an advertising agency, but it authorizes him to do it in case of necessity. Now, nobody questions the patriotism of the newspapers and magazines of the country; but even the most ably written editorials, and a recitation of the conditions that threatened our country on the border, did not get 20,000 men to enlist in the service of the United States for the purpose of the Mexican mobilization, and I question very much if they will do it now, Mr. President.

I hope that this provision will remain in the bill. It will not preclude the Secretary from appealing to newspapers to assist in the work of recruiting; but it is rather a humiliating position for the great Government of the United States to be in to go about appealing to the newspapers of the country to give space for the richest Government in the world to advertising matter that will induce men to recruit. If people want to insist that they shall be paid, they are entitled to be paid, and the Government ought not to be in the position of begging to have it done.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I desire to say a word in reply to my friend from Oregon, the chairman of the committee.

I would regard it as a serious mistake for the Government in this emergency to begin paying newspapers for space. The way to get that space is to have it known that it is to be given freely, so that the newspapers may have the credit of giving it, just as individuals give their services to the country and are giving those services to the country at this time. It is all right enough in times of peace for the War Department to insert little notices of "recruits wanted" in different parts of the country; but we are now confronted with a situation in which the thing must be done by wholesale; and, as I have said, it would require millions of dollars to procure the publicity which may be given, and be given freely, if the Government is only directed to accept it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska this question: Does he not think, moreover, that if the people knew that a part of what was being said in the newspapers and magazines consisted of paid advertisements to stir up and create patriotism, it would cause other things said in the newspapers, that had not been paid for, to be suspected of having the same origin?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. To be sure.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And would it not weaken everything that those who were giving spontaneous support to the Government could say?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It would undoubtedly give a mercenary character to a matter which ought to be purely patriotic. The newspapers are not only in position to render this great service, but they have a public duty to render this service, just as every newspaper in its own community always comes to the front, if it amounts to anything as a newspaper, in a public-spirited way, where the community is involved.

I deem this of particular importance, Mr. President. I would prohibit the Secretary of War from spending one dollar in publicity. I would have it known that every line of publicity comes from patriotism, and not from pay.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator just a moment?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. What would the Senator do in a community where there is one paper denouncing the policies of the administration and denouncing the cause that the administration has espoused, while another paper in the community is advocating all that?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That paper will not live long in these circumstances, Mr. President.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. They are living now.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If we enter upon this enterprise in the spirit in which we must enter upon it in order to succeed, each community will take care of papers that are of a "copperhead" character, and we can depend upon the communities to do it. I believe that while this is not a matter of tremendous importance, it is a matter of considerable importance for us to start off right here, and have the Congress notify the War Department that it is to have the free space of the newspapers of the country for whatever publicity is needed to encourage recruiting and to give the facts concerning recruiting. I find from constituents of mine that they are not advised what the facts are, what the regulations are; and we want all the publicity possible, so that men may be advised—men who aspire to be officers as well as men who desire to enter as privates.

I have changed this provision as little as possible. I have left in it the securing of the services of advertising agencies, because that will systematize the publicity, and bring to the aid of the War Department men of genius in putting publicity in an attractive form. Those services will be rendered freely. There will be a half dozen great agencies in the country that will rush to the War Department, tendering freely their services in arranging this publicity; and there will not be an exception of any great paper in the country, or any considerable paper, in doing its part.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether he has made any investigation so that he can give assurances as to the percentage of papers that would grant this space freely to the Government?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have not; but I will gamble on it. I have been a newspaper man for 30 years, and I have never found in any community of any size the lack of some paper that would stand up for the public interests in an emergency.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I agree with him about the readiness of the newspapers to do their part, and I think we ought to take full advantage of it; but the Senator surely does not mean to cut out the right of the Government to issue posters.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Oh, no. That involves an expenditure.

Mr. LODGE. Because those have played a great part in all the recruiting abroad, I know.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There may be some concerns engaged in the business of putting up posters who, for patriotic reasons, will tender their services, or do it at cost, or at a discount; but the man in the poster business is different from the newspaper publisher, who serves the public and who is recognized as a part of the public educational system of the country, who has been given preferred privileges in the United States mails, who lives really by public favor. That is the position of the newspaper; and the newspapers of the country will be ready, I have no doubt, to do their share and do it with great liberality, as the country will learn.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I hope this provision will not be stricken from the bill. We are going to need these recruits in the Army since war is declared. Every business that ever has succeeded has required advertising and publicity, and that advertising and publicity are required here.

There are but two methods by which to get that publicity. One is to pay for it, like everybody else in this country does, and the other is to require it as a matter of public service by the power of the Government. Those are the only two ways in which advertising can be procured.

Some of the newspaper people are patriotic, and many of them are sordid. Many of them are looking after their own private affairs, as all must do in this country of ours. Then shall this Government say to a newspaper man: "We would like to have you publish this advertising," and not be able to compel him to do it?

The time has come now when these things must be done. This must be paid for, or the service must be required by law; and I do not believe, as yet, that the necessity is so great that it should be compelled. Therefore I say, let us proceed; let this amendment be retained in the bill; and let these services be paid for on the basis of a reasonable compensation, as they ought to be. I think the time has come when these things must be done, and it is useless to dillydally about it or to delay longer.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether the suggestion coming from the Secretary of War, that he be allowed to advertise or to enter into negotiations with advertising agencies, was made before the declaration of war or since?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It was made on the 9th day of January, 1917.

Mr. FALL. Long before the declaration of war?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

Mr. FALL. I presumed that that was the case, Mr. President, because otherwise I could not see why it would be necessary to advertise for recruits or what you would say in the advertisement, provided the plan of the Secretary of War is to be carried out. I presume that the advertisements, if this plan were followed, would set forth the great advantage that would accrue to 250,000 or 300,000 men from joining the Regular Army voluntarily, as opposed to the disadvantages if they waited to be forced into the service by conscription.

We are providing an Army, as I understand, of something like 2,000,000 men, whom we are going to conscript. Advertising for soldiers, by way of poster or otherwise, in any foreign country has been done where the volunteer system was being followed, and not where conscription was being followed. This whole bill is a peace measure. It has nothing at all to do with war. This is simply the regular appropriation bill for the Regular Army of the United States, with such amendments as may be thrown in or injected, which have nothing to do with it, exactly like the amendment now offered.

We are in war. The Congress of the United States has declared war. It is providing now for raising an enormous Army—a greater Army than this country ever dreamed of calling for before, even during the perilous days of the Civil War. We are providing, or supposed to be providing, for that Army by drafting into the service all the young men between 20 and 25 years of age; and here the Senate of the United States, yesterday afternoon and again to-day, has been wasting hours of its time in discussing a proposition as to whether, in times of peace, for the recruiting of the Regular Army, the Secretary of War may enter into advertising contracts with advertising agencies.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to state that I am sure the advertising agencies will be ready to furnish the Secretary of War all the assistance he needs. I have in my office a letter from the leading advertising agency of the Southeast requesting that I communicate with the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy their willingness to put free of charge their office and their force at his disposal.

I do not believe there is a daily paper in the United States that will not print gladly any matter that is furnished which pertains to this subject. The daily papers desire to print what the people want to read, and there is nothing that to-day the average man wants to read about and know about more in detail than how this army is to be organized. Every particular connected with it can be carried and will be carried by the daily papers if it is intelligently furnished to them. To single out a few and pay them casts a reflection upon all of them. I think it is a bad policy. I think it would be very unfortunate at this time to let them feel that we were paying these papers for matter they carried about filling up the Army. As I think the provision of the bill would be hurtful, I shall vote for the substitute offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the substitute offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK].

On a division, the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, on yesterday there was an amendment offered following this amendment to the bill. I ask if this is the proper time for it to come up for consideration?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The committee amendments are first to be considered.

Mr. KIRBY. Very well.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 14, after the word "baggage," to insert "including members of the Officers' Reserve Corps, enlisted men of the Enlisted Reserve Corps, and retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty," and, in line 20, before the word "enlisted," to insert "officers and," so as to read:

Transportation of the Army and its supplies: For transportation of the Army and its supplies, including transportation of the troops when moving either by land or water, and of their baggage, including members of the Officers' Reserve Corps, enlisted men of the Enlisted Reserve Corps, and retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty, including the cost of packing and crating; for transportation of recruits and recruiting parties; of applicants for enlistment between recruiting stations and recruiting depots; for travel allowance to officers and enlisted men on discharge; for payment of travel allowance as provided in section 126 of the act approved June 3, 1916, to enlisted men of the National Guard on their discharge from the service of the United States, and to members of the National Guard who have been mustered into the service of the United States and discharged on account of physical disability; for payment of travel pay to officers of the National Guard on their discharge from the service of the United States, as prescribed in the act approved March 2, 1901; for travel allowance to persons on their discharge from the United States disciplinary barracks or from any place in which they have been held under a sentence of dishonorable discharge and confinement for more than six months, or from the Government Hospital for the Insane after transfer thereto from such barracks or place, to their homes (or elsewhere as they may elect), provided the cost in each case shall not be greater than to the place of last enlistment; of supplies furnished to the militia for the permanent equipment thereof; of the necessary agents and other employees, including per diem allowances in lieu of subsistence not exceeding $4 for those authorized to receive the per diem allowance; of clothing and equipage and other quartermaster stores from Army depots or places of purchase or delivery to the several posts and Army depots and from those depots to the troops in the field; of horse equipment; of ordnance and ordnance stores, and small arms from the foundries and armories to the arsenals, fortifications, frontier posts, and Army depots; for payment of wharfage, tolls, and ferriages; for transportation of funds of the Army; for the hire of employees; for the payment of Army transportation lawfully due such land-grant railroads as have not received aid in Government bonds (to be adjusted in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court in cases decided under such land-grant acts), but in no case shall more than 50 per cent of full amount of service be paid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item of appropriation for "Transportation of the Army and its supplies," on page 45, line 3, after the word "Oceans," to strike out "$15,000,000" and insert "$16,373,780," so as to read:

And provided further, That nothing in the preceding provisos shall be construed to prevent the accounting officers of the Government from making full payment to land-grant railroads for transportation of property or persons where the courts of the United States have held that such property or persons do not come within the scope of the deductions provided for in the land-grant acts; for the purchase and hire of draft and pack animals in such numbers as are actually required for the service, including reasonable provision for replacing unserviceable animals; for the purchase, hire, operation, maintenance, and repair of such harness, wagons, carts, drays, other vehicles, and motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, as are required for the transportation of troops and supplies, and for official, military, and garrison purposes; for drayage and cartage at the several depots; for the hire of teamsters and other employees; for the purchase and repair of ships, boats, and other vessels required for the transportation of troops and supplies and for official, military, and garrison purposes; for expenses of sailing public transports and other vessels on the various rivers, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, $16,373,780.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 9, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "$15,000" and insert "$20,000," so as to make the clause read:

Provided further, That of the amount herein appropriated not exceeding $20,000 may be used for extraordinary expenses of transportation of West Point cadets to Washington, D. C., to attend inaugural ceremonies and return, which sum shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, line 1, after the word "Army," to insert "including enlisted men of the Regular Army Reserve and retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty," and in line 20, after the word "reasons," to strike out "$15,000,000" and insert "$28,643,233," so as to make the clause read:

Clothing and camp and garrison equipage: For cloth, woolens, materials, and for the purchase and manufacture of clothing for the Army, including enlisted men of the Regular Army Reserve and retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty, for issue and for sale at cost price according to the Army Regulations; for payment for clothing not drawn due to enlisted men on discharge; for altering and fitting clothing and washing and cleaning when necessary; for equipage, including authorized issues of toilet articles, barbers' and tailors' materials, for use of general prisoners confined at military posts without pay or allowances and applicants for enlistment while held under observation; issue of toilet kits to recruits upon their first enlistment, and issue of housewives to the Army; for expenses of packing and handling, and similar necessaries; for a suit of citizen's outer clothing, to cost not exceeding $10, to be issued upon release from confinement to each prisoner who has been confined under a court-martial sentence involving dishonorable discharge; for indemnity to officers and men of the Army for clothing and bedding, etc., destroyed since April 22, 1898, by order of medical officers of the Army for sanitary reasons, $28,643,233.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, line 2, after the word "Corps," to insert "to be immediately available," so as to make the clause read:

Provided, That $20,100, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the above sum may be expended for the purchase of the necessary machinery for the manufacture of clothing at the Jeffersonville Depot of the Quartermaster Corps, to be immediately available.

Mr. NEW. I desire to offer an amendment as a substitute.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Would it not be proper that it should come up after the committee amendments have been disposed of?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not know what it is until it has been read. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 46, strike out the proviso contained in lines 22, 23, and 24, and on page 47, lines 1 and 2, and insert in lieu thereof:

Provided, That $20,100, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated in addition to the above sum for the purchase of the necessary machinery for the manufacture of clothing in the Jeffersonville Depot of the Quartermaster Corps, to be immediately available.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection to the amendment to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What is the difference?

Mr. FLETCHER. It makes an appropriation of $20,100 in addition to the other appropriation, and provides specifically for the Jeffersonville Depot.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It would be $20,100 more.

Mr. NEW. The difference is that the War Department, under the language of the bill, declines to expend that money at the Jeffersonville Depot. This makes it mandatory, and gives them the money extra.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There being no objection on the part of the chairman, the substitute is agreed to and the amendment as amended is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was, on page 47, line 18, after the words "of the," to strike out "Hospital Corps" and insert "Medical Department," so as to read:

Horses for Cavalry, Artillery, and Engineers: For the purchase of horses of ages, sex, and size as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War for remounts, for officers entitled to public mounts for the Cavalry, Artillery, Signal Corps, and Engineers, the United States Military Academy, service schools, and staff colleges, and for the Indian scouts, and for such Infantry and members of the Medical Department in field campaigns as may be required to be mounted, and the expenses incident thereto, and for the hire of employees.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 3, after the word "officers," to strike out "and acting dental surgeons" and insert "including members of the Officers' Reserve Corps when ordered to active duty," and, in line 9, after the word "available," to insert "including enlisted men of the Regular Army Reserve, retired enlisted men, and members of the Enlisted Reserve Corps when ordered to active duty," so as to make the clause read:

Barracks and quarters: For barracks, quarters, stables, storehouses, magazines, administration and office buildings, sheds, shops, and other buildings necessary for the shelter of troops, public animals, and stores, and for administration purposes, except those pertaining to the Coast Artillery; for constructing and repairing public buildings at military posts; for hire of employees; for rental of the authorized allowance of quarters for officers, including members of the Officers' Reserve Corps when ordered to active duty, on duty with the troops at posts and stations where no public quarters are available; of barracks or authorized allowance of quarters for noncommissioned officers and enlisted men on duty where public quarters are not available, including enlisted men of the Regular Army Reserve, retired enlisted men, and members of the Enlisted Reserve Corps when ordered to active duty; of grounds for cantonments, camp sites, and other military purposes, and of buildings or portions of buildings for occupation by troops, for use as stables, storehouses, and offices, and for other military purposes; for the hire of recruiting stations and lodgings for recruits; for such furniture for the public rooms of officers' messes and for officers' quarters at military posts as may be approved by the Secretary of War; for wall lockers in permanent barracks, and refrigerators in barracks and quarters; for screen doors, window screens, storm doors and sash, and window shades for barracks, offices, and quarters, and for flooring and framing for tents, and for the National Guard when called or drafted into the service of the United States, $3,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 4, after the word "California," to insert "to be open to the use of all denominations, subject to such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe," so as to make the clause read:

Provided, That not to exceed the sum of $18,000 of the above amount may be used for the construction, including plumbing, heating, and lighting, of a chapel at the Presidio of San Francisco, Cal., to be open to the use of all denominations, subject to such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 19, after the word "clothing," to insert "to be immediately available," so as to make the clause read:

Provided further, That $9,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the above sum may be expended for the necessary alterations and additions to buildings at Jeffersonville depot of the Quartermaster Corps, for the installation of machinery for the manufacture of clothing, to be immediately available.

Mr. NEW. I offer a substitute for that clause.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 50 strike out all of lines 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19 and insert:

Provided further, That $9,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated in addition to the above sum for the purchase or alterations and additions to buildings at Jeffersonville Depot of the Quartermaster Corps for the installation of machinery for the manufacture of clothing, to be immediately available.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection to that amendment. My reason for accepting these two amendments is that this will very greatly increase the output of clothing at that institution, and clothing is very much needed now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the substitute is agreed to and the amendment as amended is agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 24, to strike out the words "barracks and quarters" and insert "construction and repair of hospitals," so as to read:

Provided further, That the limit of cost of the nurses dormitory at Fort Sam Houston, Tex., be increased to not more than $30,000, including the heating and lighting fixtures, which sum shall be paid from the appropriation for construction and repair of hospitals in the bill for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, after line 2, to insert:

Provided further, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to accept deeds of gift or conveyance from the State of Tennessee, or any county or counties thereof, or any citizen, person or association, of lands in Davidson County, Rutherford County, and Williamson County, State of Tennessee, embracing the battle fields, or any part or parts thereof, where were fought the battles of Nashville, Stones River, Murfreesboro, and Franklin, in the State of Tennessee, during the Civil War; also the "Hermitage," the home of Andrew Jackson, in Davidson County, State of Tennessee, which may be donated by deeds of gift or conveyance to the United States of America for the purpose of establishing national military parks thereon; said lands to be forever dedicated for the purposes of national military parks or reservations, and to be developed and maintained as such by the United States of America; and no charge or fee is to be made to or asked from the public for admission to the grounds of said parks or reservations: Provided further, That the United States of America, upon the completion of the transfer of title to the lands so donated and dedicated for national military park purposes, shall establish and maintain post roads connecting said battle fields, and connecting each of said battle fields with the national cemeteries in Davidson County, Rutherford County, and Williamson County, State of Tennessee, and with the "Hermitage," the home of President Andrew Jackson, in Davidson County, State of Tennessee: Provided further, That the national military parks to be hereby established shall be under the control of the Secretary of War: Provided further, That the post roads to be hereby established shall be under the control of the Postmaster General: And provided further, That the Secretary of War is directed to take steps to have the State of Tennessee cede jurisdiction over said lands to the United States of America.

Mr. LODGE. The next is a separate amendment. That is the end of this amendment.

Mr. President, this is a proposition to take certain battle fields and convert them into parks and connect them with post roads, the land to be given to the Government, but of course the parks to be cared for by the Government and the roads to be built by the Government. It seems to me at this time, when we have such vast expenditures upon us for purely military purposes, this is something that can wait. The bill is for the support of the Army. Of course, this has nothing to do with the support of the Army. It appears to me that the amendment is clearly general legislation, and I make a point of order upon it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is also proposed to insert, on page 52, beginning at line 11, the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to purchase such parcels of land, not exceeding 1,500 acres, adjoining the military reservation of Fort Sam Houston, Tex., as may be needed for the uses of said post, considering present and future needs, and such as may be suitable for encampments, maneuvers, and field instruction of the mobile army of the United States or parts thereof; and for the purposes of this act there is hereby authorized to be expended, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $330,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee whether or not this $330,000 is necessary for the purchase of the thousand acres of land or more at Fort Sam Houston. It was all in one paragraph, but the other part was cut out on a point of order. I wondered whether the $330,000 was to apply on the roads and also for the purchase of this land. I ask the chairman whether or not the $330,000 is necessary for the purchase of this land. In other words, it would be paying over $300 an acre for land around this post.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator refers to the part between lines 11 and 22.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. We understood that that was necessary in view of the results that were ascertained during the recent mobilization down there. We made an expenditure of quite a little money last year in order to complete the post for the purpose of the mobilization.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], who is a member of the committee, can explain to the Senate exactly what the situation is there.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The reason why I asked is that before the part was stricken out on the point of order raised by the Senator from Massachusetts the matter relating to this park proposition and this Fort Sam Houston were all in one paragraph, and I supposed that the $330,000 was to be expended in carrying out both propositions.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. This appropriation of $330,000 is just for Fort Sam Houston.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is all it relates to?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is all.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Is there any statement as to the value of the land, showing why it is worth $300 an acre?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have here the recommendation of Gen. Funston, from whom the suggestion originally came. I shall read it to the Senator, if he desires.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; I should like to hear it.

Mr. SHEPPARD (reading)—

5. As already stated in previous correspondence, the purchase of all of this land is considered to be imperatively necessary in order to provide sufficient drill and maneuver grounds for troops stationed at this post, and in order to cover the purchase of the leased land on which options have been granted, as above stated, and also the land of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Co., for the required purposes, I request and urgently recommend that the matter be presented to Congress at its present session, with recommendation by the War Department that necessary legislation be enacted authorizing the purchase of said land at a cost of $330,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary. It is recommended that this matter be presented before Congress at the earliest possible moment in order that the necessary legislative authority for the purchase may be obtained during the present session.

Mr. JONES of Washington. From whom does that come?

Mr. SHEPPARD. From Gen. Funston. It was one of his last official acts.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I recollect he says there it is imperatively necessary.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes; imperatively necessary.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does the Senator know why it is imperatively necessary?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is necessary because there is not enough maneuvering ground at present in connection with that post. This land has been leased for drilling and maneuvering purposes. The lease will expire at the end of the present fiscal year and it may not be possible to renew it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Are the thousand acres sufficient for the maneuvers that may be necessary there?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Gen. Funston so states. He thought this amount of land would be sufficient for all drill and maneuver purposes. The tract to be acquired comprises 1,500 acres.

Mr. JONES of Washington. How much land have they in the reservation now?

Mr. SHEPPARD. In the reservation there are at present something like four or five hundred acres.

Mr. JONES of Washington. How many troops are there usually?

Mr. SHEPPARD. In time of peace there have been several thousand troops. If I remember correctly, troops are constantly being concentrated there from all parts of the Southern Department for training purposes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does Gen. Funston say anything about what it is that makes the land worth $300 an acre?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is just outside the city limits. The present post is just inside the city limits. The land to be acquired immediately adjoins the city limits, and is not more than a mile and a half or 2 miles from the center of the city—a city of 125,000 or 130,000 people.

This land can not be purchased at this price after the expiration of the present fiscal year. It is constantly going up in value. The recommendation came from Gen. Funston, not from anyone else. He communicated it as an official matter after he had been placed in charge of the Southern Department. He saw the necessity of acquiring this land himself and earnestly recommended it to the day of his death.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does the Senator know what rental they are paying for the land?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Six hundred and eighty-one dollars a month.

Mr. SHEPPARD. They are paying $681 per month now.

Mr. JONES of Washington. How long have we been paying that?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It has been leased since Gen. Funston has been put in charge. I am not sure how long it has been.

Mr. JONES of Washington. This land was not leased before the trouble arose on the border.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I think it was.

Mr. JONES of Washington. What I was trying to get at is how long the Government used this land. That would indicate how long it has really been necessary. Can the Senator state?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Something like two or three years.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Is this recommended by the Secretary of War?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is. Gen. Bliss came before the committee, representing the Secretary of War, and also urged the acquisition of the land. I have the statement of Gen. Bliss here.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President. if the Senator from Washington will yield to me, I desire to supplement what the Senator from Texas has said about this tract of land. It so happens that I was all over it in the visit which I made to San Antonio when about twelve or fifteen thousand men were mobilized there; and I got somewhat an impression of the situation in which the Army post at San Antonio is now placed.

It is perfectly apparent that San Antonio will always be an exceedingly important concentration point for American troops. It is the strategic center, as it were, in a railroad sense and in a military sense for the entire eastern end of the Mexican border, and if it shall ever be necessary in the future, as it has been in the past, for the Government to prepare for eventualities in Mexico, San Antonio will undoubtedly be the mobilization center and the base.

It is true, as the Senator from Texas says, that the present reservation occupied by the Army post at San Antonio is exceedingly cramped. It is directly on the edge of the city of San Antonio. Some portion of the city streets run alongside the reservation. There is not room enough there for troops to conduct any sort of training. A good part of the land which is under contemplation for purchase was used for the encampment of a division of troops during the last 8 or 10 months. The National Guard troops that were summoned to the colors June 18 last were sent there in large numbers. It is easily apparent to anyone who goes there that that post should be very largely increased in acreage in order that it may be ready to accommodate the mobilization of troops in the future, as it has been called upon to accommodate them in the past.

Without having been requested to do so by anybody connected with either Texas or the War Department, but merely on my own somewhat amateurish judgment, I am very strongly of the opinion that this would be a most valuable acquisition for the Government.

As to the price, I imagine that $300 an acre, or thereabouts, for land in the neighborhood of a city, and which is located practically in the outskirts of a city of 100,000 people, will not be found to be excessive.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am satisfied, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I also have been at San Antonio, and I consider it very important that this amendment should be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NEW in the chair). Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 53, after line 12, to insert:

Provided, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to convey to the regents of the University of California, their successors and assigns, for art, educational, and park purposes, that portion of the military reservation of the Presidio of San Francisco, in the city and county of San Francisco, Cal., on which the Palace of Fine Arts is located, included within metes and bounds described as follows, namely: Commencing at the point on the westerly line of Lyon Street, distant therefrom 5.17 feet southerly from the northerly line of Bay Street, if extended and produced westerly, and running thence northerly along the westerly line of Lyon Street 1,196.80 feet; thence southwesterly on a curve to the left of 612 feet radius, central angle 155° 47′ 50″, tangent to a line deflected 102° 6′ 5″ to the left from the preceding course a distance of 1,664.13 feet to the westerly line of Lyon Street and the point of commencement, containing 9.93 acres,, more or less: Provided, That if at any time in the future the property so conveyed to said regents shall cease to be used for the purposes for which conveyed, then all right and title thereto herein authorized to be granted to said regents shall revert to the United States: And provided further, That in consideration of the said grant the said regents shall procure, to be conveyed to the United States, for use in connection with said military reservation, other lands situated within the city and county of San Francisco, Cal., located as the Secretary of War may approve and which he may deem satisfactory and useful in connection with said reservation, the title thereto to be subject to the approval of the Attorney General of the United States as required by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, after line 6, to insert:

Construction, repair, and maintenance, military and post roads, bridges, and trails, Alaska: For the construction, repair, and maintenance of military and post roads, bridges, and trails, Territory of Alaska, $500,000.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator having the bill in charge whether the amount embodied in that amendment has been estimated for at any time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The chairman of the committee, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], is temporarily absent from the Chamber.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, in the temporary absence of the chairman of the committee I will state that the amount embodied in the amendment was estimated for. Indeed, the estimate was for $600,000, but the committee allowed only $500,000. Perhaps the Senator from Colorado knows that there has been quite a little return from expenditures which have been made in Alaska on telephone and telegraph lines, and so forth; and all that portion of Alaska which is uninhabited must be provided for, as to modes of transportation, by the Government.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not object to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to. The Chair hears none.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 55, line 21, after "$500,000," to insert:

Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended for the construction of quarters for officers of the Army the total cost of which, including the heating and plumbing apparatus, wiring and fixtures, shall exceed in the case of quarters of a general officer the sum of $8,000; of a colonel or officer above the rank of captain, $6,000; and of an officer of and below the rank of captain, $4,000.

So as to make the clause read:

Barracks and quarters, Philippine Islands: Continuing the work of providing for the proper shelter and protection of officers and enlisted men of the Army of the United States lawfully on duty in the Philippine Islands, including repairs and payment of rents, the acquisition of title to building sites, and such additions to existing military reservations as may be necessary, and including also shelter for the animals and supplies, and all other buildings necessary for post administration purposes, and for shelter and repair thereof, and rentals for the United States troops in China, $500,000: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended for the construction of quarters for officers of the Army the total cost of which, including the heating and plumbing apparatus, wiring and fixtures, shall exceed in the case of quarters of a general officer the sum of $8,000; of a colonel or officer above the rank of captain, $6,000; and of an officer of and below the rank of captain, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, line 13, after "$750,000," to insert, "of which amount not to exceed $25,000 may be used to build a modern hospital at Fort Ward, Wash.; $100,000 to build a modern hospital at Schofield Barracks, Hawaii; $90,000 to enlarge the Walter Reed General Hospital; $90,000 to build a modern hospital at Fort McPherson, Ga.; and $60,000 to build an officers' infirmary at Fort Bayard, N. Mex.: Provided, That no building or structure of a permanent nature, the cost of which shall exceed $30,000, shall hereafter be erected for use as an Army hospital unless by special authority of Congress," so as to make the clause read:

Construction and repair of hospitals: For construction and repair of hospitals at military posts already established and occupied, including the extra-pay pay of enlisted men employed on the same, and including also all expenditures for construction and repairs required at the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., and for the construction and repair of general hospitals and expenses incident thereto, and for additions needed to meet the requirements of increased garrisons; and for temporary hospitals in standing camps and cantonments, $750,000, of which amount not to exceed $25,000 may be used to build a modern hospital at Fort Ward, Wash.; $100,000 to build a modern hospital at Schofield Barracks, Hawaii; $90,000 to enlarge the Walter Reed General Hospital; $90,000 to build a modern hospital at Fort McPherson, Ga.; and $60,000 to build an officers' infirmatory at Fort Bayard, N. Mex.: Provided, That no building or structure of a permanent nature, the cost of which shall exceed $30,000, shall hereafter be erected for use as an Army hospital unless by special authority of Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, line 10, after "$45,000," to insert:

Provided, That the sum of $100,000 appropriated for the acquisition of a target range of approximately 504 acres of land situated near the city of Vancouver, and for the construction thereon of target butts, range buildings, etc., under "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes," approved August 29, 1916, shall be available for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918: And provided further, That the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, use said appropriation or any part thereof for the purchase only, and not for the purchase and improvement of a larger tract than that mentioned above, provided only the same shall be conveniently reachable from large centers of population as well as from Vancouver, Wash.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, after line 7, to insert:

That the Secretary of War is authorized to purchase for the United States the lands on the battle fields of the first and second Bull Run, recommended by the Army officers appointed in Special Orders 104, from the War Department on May 5, 1913, in their report dated November 12, 1913, and forwarded to Congress by the Secretary of War; or so much of said lands as the Secretary shall deem advisable. The prices paid for said lands shall not exceed the amounts named in sections 13 and 14 of said report as satisfactory to the landowners.

Second. The Secretary of War shall repair and protect the two original monuments erected by United States troops and dedicated June 11, 1865. He shall also assume the care of any other monuments or markers on said battle field, heretofore or hereafter erected without expense to the United States, by any State or private association, either on lands owned by the United States or on lands adjacent thereto: Provided, That the locations and plans of said monuments or markers shall be approved by the Secretary of War, who shall only assume the care of the same upon application of the parties responsible therefor and upon such stipulations or conveyances as are deemed reasonable by him.

Third. That the Secretary of War shall provide such fencing, clearing, and other improvements for the lands purchased as shall seem desirable to him for the purposes of this act; also convenient approaches from the public roads for visitors, and temporary markings of the lines of battle and location of troops during military operations from 1861 to 1865.

Upon securing satisfactory arrangements with the local road authorities, he may, in his discretion, put the public roads in repair between the two original monuments aforesaid, and from the battle field by the way of Sudley Road and Grant Avenue to the commemorative group and tablet, on the corner of Grant and Lee Avenues, dedicated September 30, 1915, in commemoration of the Manassas Jubilee of Peace, celebrated on the fiftieth anniversary of the first Battle of Bull Run; to the end that citizens of the United States and visitors from abroad may conveniently travel from the railway to the battle field and inspect the same.

Fourth. For the purpose of the act $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necesary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, on page 59 and extending over to the bottom of page 61, there are certain provisions which, it strikes me, might be desirable at some time, but at this time it seems to me that they could be avoided. I am therefore going to make the point of order on those provisions, in order to save time, that the matter proposed to be inserted by the committee is new legislation, and is therefore not in order on this bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator allow me to say a word?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS. I myself had intended to make the same point of order which the Senator has made, but upon examining the entire amendment I have discovered that the part of it which is found on page 61, beginning in line 6, refers to a different subject, which is the Gettysburg National Military Park. It provides for the payment of a sum of money which represents an amount awarded in certain condemnation proceedings. It seemed to me, as that amendment is designed to pay a judgment, evidently awarded to the owners of private property, it might therefore be eliminated from the point of order.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I had not noticed that; but I will make the point of order on the amendment down to line 6 on page 61.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I happen to know something about the amendment relating to the Gettysburg National Military Park. What the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] says is correct. I know the point of order has been withdrawn as to that, but I simply rise to ask to have inserted in the RECORD a communication from a person describing fully the litigation and the circumstances which render this amendment necessary. For the information of the conferees and those interested in the matter, I ask unanimous consent to have this communication inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The communication referred to is as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, February 10, 1917.

Hon. G. W. EDMONDS,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. EDMONDS: A bill was introduced by Mr. Beales for the purchase by the Government of the right of way and other land owned by the Gettysburg Railway Co. within the limits of the Gettysburg Battle Field.

It was referred to the War Department, and the Secretary reported in favor of the purchase.

Many years ago, on proceedings begun by the Government, a jury had fixed the value of one tract at $30,000. The railroad company was not satisfied with the award. Both it and the Government appealed.

The story of the proceedings will be found reported in 160 U. S., 668.

After the Supreme Court settled in favor of the Government—the contention that the Government could take by its right of eminent domain the right of way of the railway—nothing further was done. You may recollect that about that time the then district attorney and his first assistant were indicted and convicted.

Ever since that time the Gettysburg Battle Feld Commission has been anxious to acquire the land owned by the railway. The title to the land is in either the railway or the Central Trust & Savings Co., and the Central Trust & Savirgs Co. is the trustee of the mortgage on the railway. The Central Trust & Savings Co. and the railway company are willing now that the Government should have not only the tract for which $30,000 was awarded, but, in addition to that, various other tracts, most of which were embraced in the second proceedings, referred to in the report in 160 U. S., for the price then awarded, provided that the railway company be given the right to remove the wires and rails from the right of way.

The bill as drafted provides that the railway company shall give what it has to the Government; and while it is in no way provided in the bill, the Central Trust & Savings Co. will also give what it has, which is, however, a very small holding.

Your colleague, THOMAS S. CRAGO, who is on the Committee on Military Affairs, has written me that there seems to be a movement in favor of purchasing the Bull Run Battle Field, and those who are in favor of that purchase are willing to join with those who are in favor of the acquisition of the right of way across the Gettysburg Battle Field in asking the Rules Committee to report a rule which would make the consideration of the Gettysburg appropriation and the Bull Run appropriation both in order.

This proposition was made in the Committee on Military Affairs and agreed to by the committee, and Mr. CRAGO writes me:

"If the Rules Committee will provide this rule, we will be able to get it through with our bill. If they do not present this rule and we would merely report the bill favorably from our committee, it would go on the calendar, where it would have a very poor chance of being considered during this session."

Mr. CRAGO writes further:

"I would suggest that you interest the Philadelphia Members in the matter to the extent of having them bring all the influence on the Rules Committee they can, in order to accomplish our purpose."

I, of course, represent the owner of the property, but I have an interest in the matter as a Pennsylvanian. The railway company's right of way mars the beauty of the field. It ought to be acquired by the Government. If it is not now acquired by the Government, it may be acquired as a part of a through trolley route; and if it is, the Government will never get it for the price at which it is now offered.

I would feel much indebted to you if, after conference with your colleague, Mr. CRAGO, you feel that you can assist him in the matter.

Very truly, yours,

ABRAHAM M. BEITLER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order made by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] on the amendment down to line 6, on page 61, is sustained.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 61, after line 5, to insert:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, for the Gettysbury National Military Park the land composing the right of way of the Gettysburg Railway Co. (the rails, ties, and superstructure of same to remain the property of the Gettysburg Railway Co. and to be removed by the said company as required by the Secretary of War), said right of way embracing the tracts known as the Amos Leister tracts, the F. G. Pfeffer tracts, the Jacob Benner estate tract, the Simon J. Godori tract, the Jacob Masonheimer tract, the Annie E. Beecher tract, the Rosanna E. Wible tract, the James W. Timbers tract, the S. W. Crawford tracts, the William H. Tipton tract, the Calvin P. Krise tract, the George Bushman tract, and the Peter D. Swisher tract within the limits of the battle field of Gettysburg and within the limits of the Gettysburg National Military Park for the sum of $30,000, that being the amount awarded in condemnation proceedings in the eastern district of Pennsylvania, which sum is hereby appropriated and made immediately available for such purchase.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, line 17, after the word "occupations," to strike out "part of this instruction to consist of vocational education either in agriculture or the mechanic arts, $75,000" and insert "$250,000: Provided, however, That the Secretary of War shall, in order to carry out the last provision, select one regiment of Infantry, Cavalry, or Field Artillery to be stationed at a regimental post within the continental limits of the United States on or before July 1, 1917, and shall transfer from such regiment to other organizations any enlisted man or men who do not desire educational or vocational training and instruction such as is contemplated by the concluding paragraph of section 27 of the national-defense act approved June 3, 1916, and shall transfer thereto from other organizations a number of enlisted men to be selected under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe who do desire such instruction and training or may receive recruits thereto sufficient to bring the enlisted strength of the regiment up to that authorized by law. During such part of the year beginning July 1, 1917, and thereafter as the enlisted men of the regiment so selected shall not be engaged on field service or in field training they shall be under training or instruction nine hours of each day, or as near that number of hours as possible, Sundays and holidays excepted, at least three hours of each day to be devoted to military training and six hours of each day, or as nearly that as possible, to educational and vocational training and instruction such as is contemplated by the concluding paragraph of section 27 of the national-defense act. The educational and vocational training to be had under civilian instructors employed for that purpose under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of War shall prescribe: And provided further, That said civilian instructors, as well as the discipline of the said post, shall be under the jurisdiction of the military authorities, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe," so as to make the clause read:

Vocational training: For the employment of the necessary civilian instructors in the most important trades, for the purchase of carpenter's, machinist's, plumber's, mason's, electrician's, and such other tools and equipment as may be required, including machines used in connection with the trades, for the purchase of material and other supplies necessary for instruction and training purposes and the construction of such buildings for shops, storage, and shelter of machinery as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of section 27 of the act approved June 3, 1916, authorizing, in addition to the military training of soldiers while in the active service, means for securing an opportunity to study and receive instruction upon educational lines of such character as to increase their military efficiency and enable them to return to civil life better equipped for industrial, commercial, and general business occupations, $250,000: Provided, however, That the Secretary of War shall, in order to carry out the last provision, select one regiment of Infantry, Cavalry, or Field Artillery to be stationed at a regimental post within the continental limits of the United States on or before July 1, 1917, and shall transfer from such regiment to other organizations any enlisted man or men who do not desire educational or vocational training and instruction such as is contemplated by the concluding paragraph of section 27 of the national-defense act approved June 3, 1916, and shall transfer thereto from other organizations a number of enlisted men to be selected under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe who do desire such instruction and training or may receive recruits thereto sufficient to bring the enlisted strength of the regiment up to that authorized by law. During such part of the year beginning July 1, 1917, and thereafter as the enlisted men of the regiment so selected shall not be engaged on field service or in field training they shall be under training or instruction nine hours of each day, or as near that number of hours as possible, Sundays and holidays excepted, at least three hours of each day to be devoted to military training and six hours of each day, or as nearly that as possible, to educational and vocational training and instruction such as is contemplated by the concluding paragraph of section 27 of the national-defense act. The educational and vocational training to be had under civilian instructors employed for that purpose under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of War shall prescribe: And provided further, That said civilian instructors, as well as the discipline of the said post, shall be under the jurisdiction of the military authorities, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I call the attention of Senators to the fact that both the language of the bill as contained on page 62 and page 63 as passed by the House and the amendment suggested by the Senate committee refers to vocational training for soldiers of the Regular Army? Now, Mr. President, we are at war, and this bill, if passed in this shape, will provide that from July 1, 1917, to July 1, 1918, the soldiers of the Regular Army shall spend a stated percentage of their time, a stated number of their daylight hours, learning trades and professions. I desire to suggest to the Senate, in view of the fact that every soldier whom we can bring to the colors, either in the Regular Army, in the guard, or in the conscript army, will have to spend every available moment of the day in training himself for strictly military purposes, that it would be well for the next ensuing fiscal year to leave out all questions of vocational training and incidentally save $250,000.

I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], because I know that he is interested in the subject of vocational training in the Army; but this is not a time of peace. These men will have no time to spend in learning how to become carpenters or plumbers; they will be learning how to be soldiers, and nothing else. So I suggest that not only the Senate disagree with the amendment suggested by the committee but that in its proper parliamentary order we strike out the entire paragraph.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the national-defense act of June 3, 1916, provides for vocational training in the Army. It was very urgently insisted upon at that time, just as the increase in the pay of the private soldier is now insisted upon in the Senate; but there was no appropriation made for it and no legislation to enable the Secretary of War to carry it out. I recognize the force of the point made by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], but I think we can relieve that situation by simply adding, in line 11, page 63, after the word "thereafter," the words "if the Secretary of War shall deem it advisable," or other appropriate words, so as to leave it entirely to the discretion of the Secretary of War.

Mr. WARREN. Or we can put in the words "in time of peace."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Or we can put in the words "in time of peace." But the Senator from New York knows that even in time of war there are frequently regiments that are not on duty, possibly returning soldiers, possibly men who have been in the service, who need recreation or rest. So that such a provision could be used even in time of war. What I mean is that if we place the matter in the discretion of the Secretary of War he can utilize it or not, as he may see fit.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to line 20, page 62, where it is provided "that the Secretary shall, in order to carry out the last provision, select a regiment of Infantry," and so forth.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. We can change the word "shall" to "may."

Mr. WADSWORTH. If you will make the entire matter discretionary, I am entirely satisfied it will never be done during war time.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I should like to try it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Just a moment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That will satisfy me.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have some doubt about this provision working out efficiently, and I have doubt about its attracting men to the Army of the United States; but there are a great many people in this country who testified before our committee that it would attract men; and the committee thought it would be a good time to give this matter a trial and see what effect it will have upon the Army.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have no objection to experiments of this kind on a limited scale in time of peace, but I do not want to see this legislation passed in mandatory language in time of war.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I have the utmost confidence in the great value of legislation of this character in helping us obtain enlistments for the Regular Army in time of peace, and also in its great value to the privates who do enlist. I believe that by such a policy we can make the two years' service in the Army for privates a privates' West Point, which will turn them out fit soldiers and also splendidly prepared for private life. I would not, in any sense, urge that in time of war such a provision should be compulsory. I agree with the Senator from New York and the Senator from Oregon that this matter should at least be left discretionary with the Secretary during times of war. I hardly think it probable that he would be able to do anything of vocational instruction for privates during times of war, unless we find that after having drilled our men for a period we are not compelled to put them into active service. If they are retained in camp after they have been thoroughly drilled for active service, it would be excellent for the officers and others in charge not to leave the men with their time wasted, but to seek, during the time they are in camp, to train them on lines that will make them stronger as citizens when they return from the Army to civil life.

I am gratified that the Senator from New York, with the modification made by the Senator from Oregon, makes no further objection to this amendment. I have given a great deal of thought to this subject. I have investigated it in connection with a large number of the brightest young Army officers who have been connected with the War College. It was enthusiastically supported by the brainiest and most promising of the young officers. Some of the old officers, who are passing off the scene, rather objected; but when it was put into the bill before the Senator from New York joined us, I think it received the unanimous approval of the Senate.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Last year?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think it was before the Senator from New York took Senator Root's place. I do not at all question the propriety of the modification the Senator from Oregn has made, because I doubt whether it can be done now.

Mr. BRADY obtained the floor.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Idaho will allow me for just a minute——

Mr. BRADY. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will suggest to the Senator from Georgia that perhaps the last clauses would save the situation anyhow, because it has to be done under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of War. If he does not prescribe rules and regulations, it can not be put into effect.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, I think we can insert in the bill some language that will make this provision workable in time of war. I believe that this is a very important amendment and that it should be tried out by our Government at the earliest possible time consistent with good business methods.

We discussed this matter in the committee very fully, and it was practically the unanimous opinion of the members of the committee that by making a selection of one particular regiment—and, if you will observe, the amendment provides that they shall select one particular regiment and let that regiment be the one that takes the vocational education and training—it will enable those who join the Regular Army, if they prefer to take a course in vocational education, to make a choice of which regiment they shall enter. It is not obligatory, but it is to be done by the voluntary action of the men who enlist; and it seems to me that we could do splendid work along these lines, even in time of war. All of our regiments are not going to go to the front at once, and there will be young men that will be enabled to take a course of training of three hours a day, which Gen. Wood testified before our committee was the average amount of training that was given to the Regular soldier, and in addition to that have six hours for educational improvement.

I hope that the slightest possible amendment will be made in the language, so as, if we do anything, to give the Secretary of War more power than he has now; that is to say, to give him power enough to dispense with this line of educational work for a short while, if necessary, or to continue it according to the original intent of the bill. I hope the chairman of the committee will see to it that no language is placed in the bill that will in any way interfere with vocational educational training.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I think the perfection of the committee amendment will be exceedingly simple if the chairman of the committee will follow me. I suggest that on page 62, line 20, the word "shall" be stricken out, and the words "may in his discretion" be substituted in its place.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And two more changes, I think, will correct the whole thing. I suggest, in line 24, striking out the word "shall" and inserting the word "may"; and on page 63, line 4, striking out the word "shall" and inserting the word "may."

From a somewhat hasty reading of the amendment, I think that will make it discretionary on the part of the Secretary of War.

Mr. BRADY. With those corrections, the amendment is certainly entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If there are any other corrections needed in the amendment, they can be arranged in conference.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I will say that I am in entire sympathy with the suggestion of the Senator from New York. If this does not do what we are now hoping it may do, we will try to fix it in conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment on page 62, line 20, by striking out the word "shall" after the word "war," and inserting the words "may in his discretion."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. Also, in line 24, page 62, it is proposed to strike out the word "shall" and insert the word "may."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 63, line 4, before the word "transfer," it is proposed to strike out the word "shall" and insert the word "may."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 64, after line 2, to strike out:

Filing equipment for the Army: For the purchase and supply of filing cases and other filing equipment for the installation in the Military Establishment of an improved system of recording and filing correspondence, to be immediately available, $45,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Engineer Department," on page 69, line 2, after the word "equipment," to strike out "to be available until expended" and insert "to be immediately available," so as to make the clause read:

Engineer equipment of troops: For pontoon material, tools, instruments, supplies and appliances required for use in the engineer equipment of troops, for military surveys, and for engineer operations in the field, including the purchase and preparation of engineer manuals and procurement of special paper for same, and for a reserve supply of above equipment, to be immediately available, $1,174,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 69, line 21, after the words "War Department," to strike out "$150,000" and insert "$300,000," so as to make the clause read:

Engineer operations in the field: For expenses incident to military engineer operations in the field, including the purchase of material and a reserve of material for such operations, the construction or rental of storehouses within and outside the District of Columbia, the purchase, operation, maintenance, and repair of horse-drawn and motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, and such expenses as are ordinarily provided for under appropriations for "Engineer depots," "Civilian assistants to engineer officers," and "Maps, War Department," $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 69, after line 21, to insert:

Provided, That the appropriations for "Engineer operations in the field," during the fiscal year 1917 may be used for any of the purposes covered by the appropriation, "Engineer operations in the field," in this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, after line 2, to strike out:

Provided, That any proceeds received from the operation of a public utility with funds appropriated herein or hereafter for this purpose shall be available for the purposes of the appropriation until the close of the fiscal year following that in which the proceeds are received.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, after line 17, to insert:

Military surveys and maps: For the execution of topographic or other surveys, the securing of such extra topographic data as may be required, and the preparation and printing of maps required for military purposes, to be immediately available and remain available until December 31, 1918: Provided, That the Secretary of War is authorized to secure the assistance, wherever practicable, of the United States Geological Survey, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, or other mapping agencies of the Government in this work, and to allot funds therefor to them from this appropriation, $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Ordnance Department," on page 72, line 13, after the word "homes," to strike out "$12,000,000" and insert "$12,970,000," so as to make the clause read:

Ordnance stores, ammunition: Manufacture and purchase of ammunition for small arms and for hand use for reserve supply, ammunition for burials at the National Soldiers' Home, in Washington, D. C., ammunition for firing the morning and evening gun at military posts prescribed by General Orders, No. 70, Headquarters of the Army, dated July 23, 1867, and at National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers and its several branches, including National Soldiers' Home in Washington, D. C., and soldiers' and sailors' State homes, $12,970,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 72, line 15, after the words "more than," to strike out "one-third" and insert "one-half," so as to make the clause read:

Provided, That not more than one-half of this sum shall be expended in the purchase of the articles provided in this appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 72, line 24, after the word "instruction," to strike out "of able-bodied males capable of bearing arms," and, on page 73, line 3, after the word "prescribe," to strike out "$2,000,000" and insert "$2,850,000," so as to make the clause read:

Small-arms target practice: For manufacture and purchase of ammunition, targets, and other accessories for small-arms, hand, and machine-gun target practice and instructions; marksmen's medals, prize arms, and insignia for all arms of the service; and ammunition, targets, target materials, and other accessories which may be issued for small-arms target practice and instruction at the educational institutions and State soldiers' and sailors' orphans' homes to which issues of small arms are lawfully made, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, $2,850,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 73, after line 4, to insert:

For manufacture and purchase of arms, appendages and accessories, ammunition, targets, target materials, and other necessary accessories for small-arms target practice for issue, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice, to rifle ranges, in connection with the encouragement of rifle practice of civilians in pursuance of the provisions of section 113 of the act approved June 3, 1916, and to organize rifle clubs for use in target practice, $500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 73, line 16, after the word "armories," to strike out "$6,000,000" and insert "$7,350,000," so as to make the clause read:

Manufacture of arms: For manufacturing, repairing, procuring, and issuing arms at the national armories, $7,350,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 73, line 20, after the word "That," to strike out "$200,000" and insert "$600,000," so as to make the clause read:

Provided, That $600,000 of this appropriation may be used to procure gauges, dies, jigs, tools, fixtures, and other special aids and appliances, including specifications and detailed drawings, necessary for the manufacture by private manufacturers, of arms necessary to arm the land forces likely to be required by the United States in time of war, and in the purchase of lots of arms to complete the object of this proviso the existing laws prescribing competition in the procurement of supplies by purchase shall not govern in orders not to exceed $50,000 in any one case.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 74, line 13, after the words "more than," to strike out "$5,000,000" and insert "$6,000,000," so as to make the clause read:

Provided, That not more than $6,000,000 of this appropriation may be used for the purchase of ordnance stores.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 74, after line 15, to strike out:

Provided, That the Secretary of War is authorized to loan, without expense to the United States, under appropriate bond for its safe return, service material for exhibition purposes in cases when, in his judgment, the educational value of such exhibits justifies the loan.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, after line 9, to strike out:

Provided, That the Secretary of War, in his discretion, and under such regulations as he may prescribe, may authorize the detail of enlisted men of the Army as temporary instructors in rifle practice to organized rifle clubs requesting such instruction.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, line 19, after the date "1919," to strike out "$3,000,000" and insert "$7,350,300," so as to make the clause read:

Automatic machine rifles: For the purchase, manufacture, and test of automatic machine rifles, including their sights and equipments, to be immediately available and remain available until the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, $7,350,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, line 22, after the words "motor cars," to insert "to remain available until June 30, 1919," so as to make the clause read:

Armored motor cars: For the purchase and manufacture of armored motor cars, to remain available until June 30, 1919, $600,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, line 13, after the word "available," to insert "and to remain available until the end of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919," so as to make the clause read:

Ammunition for field artillery for the National Guard: For the purpose of manufacturing and procuring reserve ammunition for field artillery for the National Guard of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, the funds to be immediately available, and to remain available until the end of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, $10,000,000: Provided, That not more than $200,000 of this appropriation may be used to procure gauges, dies, jigs, tools, fixtures, and other special aids and appliances, including specifications and detailed drawings necessary for the manufacture by private manufacturers of field artillery ammunition necessary for the use of the land forces of the United States in time of war, and in the purchase of lots of ammunition to complete the object of this proviso the existing laws prescribing competition in the procurement of supplies by purchase shall not govern in orders not to exceed $50,000 in any one case.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 78, after line 13, to insert:

Provided further, That all material purchased under the appropriations for the Ordnance Department in this act shall be of American manufacture, except in cases when, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, it is to the manifest interest of the United States to make purchases in limited quantities abroad, which material shall be admitted free of duty.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 78, after line 20, to insert:

Provided further, That hereafter mileage to officers of the Ordnance Department traveling on duty in connection with that department shall be paid from the appropriation for the work in connection with which the travel is performed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "National Guard," on page 79, line 16, after the word "thereto," to strike out "under the provisions of this act"; in line 19, before the word "required," to strike out "nor" and insert "not"; in line 22, after the words "Secretary of War," to strike out "as set forth herein"; and on page 80, line 1, after the word "one," to insert "radio company," so as to make clause read:

Provided, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to transfer to those organizations of the National Guard entitled thereto such number of horses and pack mules purchased by the Quartermaster Corps of the Army under the provisions of the act of July 1, 1916, not required for the proper equipment of organizations of the Regular Army, that can be issued to National Guard organizations under the regulations prescribed by the Secretary of War, all expenses incident to such transfer to be met from appropriations made for and on behalf of the National Guard; pack mules so transferred may be issued not to exceed six to any one radio company, machine-gun troop or company, or four to any one ambulance company, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 84, line 5, after the name "District of Columbia," to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$60,000," so as to make the clause read:

To provide for pay of property and disbursing officers of the several States, Territories, and District of Columbia, $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 84, line 11, before the word "equipment," to strike out "acquisition, construction, and maintenance, and," so as to make the clause read:

For providing arms, ordnance stores, quartermaster stores, camp equipage, and all other military supplies for issue to the National Guard; for the promotion of rifle practice, including the equipment of shooting galleries and suitable target ranges; for the hire of horses and draft animals for the use of mounted troops, batteries, and wagons; for forage for the same; and for such other incidental expenses in connection with lawfully authorized encampments, maneuvers, and field instruction as the Secretary of War may deem necessary; and for such other expenses pertaining to the National Guard as are now or may hereafter be authorized by law, $2,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 84, after line 18, to insert:

For the purchase of a rifle range for the use of the District of Columbia National Guard, upon a suitable site to be selected by the Secretary of War, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 85, line 18, after the date "1916," to strike out "$25,000" and insert "$35,000," so as to make the clause read:

Travel of officers and noncommissioned officers of the Regular Army in carrying out the provisions of section 93, act of June 3, 1916, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 85, line 20, after the words "Travel of," to strike out "inspector-instructors and sergeant-instructors" and insert "officers and noncommissioned officers of the Regular Army on duty with the National Guard," so as to make the clause read:

Travel of officers and noncommissioned officers of the Regular Army on duty with the National Guard, joining at State stations for duty and returning to duty with regiments, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 85, line 24, after the words "Travel of,' to strike out "inspector-instructors and sergeant-instructor" and insert "officers and noncommissioned officers of the Regular Army on duty with the National Guard," so as to make the clause read:

Travel of officers and noncommissioned officers of the Regular Army on duty with the National Guard in making visits of instruction and inspection to armories, $130,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 86, line 3, after the word "said," to strike out "inspector-instructors" and insert "officers and noncommissioned officers of the Regular Army on duty with the National Guard," so as to make the clause read:

Provided, That officers and noncommissioned officers of the Regular Army on duty with the National Guard traveling shall not receive more than their actual expenses out of these appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 86, line 8, after the words "Regular Army," to insert "on duty with the National Guard," so as to make the clause read:

Travel of officers and noncommissioned officers of the Regular Army on duty with the National Guard in connection with State camps of instruction and joint camps, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 86, line 19, after the words "Expenses of," to strike out "sergeant-instructors" and insert "noncommissioned officers of the Regular Army," and in line 21, after the word "attendance," to strike out "$80,000" and insert "$100,000," so as to make the clause read:

Expenses of noncommissioned officers of the Regular Army on duty with the National Guard, including quarters, fuel, light, medicines, and medical attendance, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 86, after line 22, to strike out:

Provided, That whenever practicable inspector-instructors shall use the State armories or other public buildings for offices.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 87, to strike out:

Office rent and other necessary expenses of inspector-instructors, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 87, line 16, after the word "animals," to strike out "and a reserve supply of such arms, material, accouterments, field uniforms, clothing, equipage, and military stores of all kinds," so as to make the clause read:

Arms, uniforms, equipment, etc., National Guard: To procure by purchase or manufacture and issue from time to time to the National Guard upon requisition of the governors of the several States and Territories, or the commanding general, National Guard of the District of Columbia, such number of United States service arms with all accessories, Field Artillery and Coast Artillery material, Engineer, Signal, and sanitary material, accouterments, field uniforms, clothing, equipage, publications, and military stores of all kinds, including public animals, as are necessary to arm, uniform, and equip for field service the National Guard in the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, from a very hasty consideration of that, it seems to me that that language would prevent the War Department accumulating any reserve.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that that is transferred to the clothing portion of the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It applies only to clothing thereafter?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not remember how general it is, but it was the purpose of it to allow the accumulation, and it has been transferred to another part of the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is one of the great troubles that I pointed out in one instance yesterday as prevailing—the lack of supplies and reserve. I should very much dislike to see the accumulation of such reserve supplies forbidden.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator will find it on page 46, line 21.

Mr. BRADY. It was the intention of the committee to transfer that where it would be available.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But, Mr. President, that applies, as I read it, to clothing alone. The language stricken out on page 87 applies to arms, materials, accouterments, and military stores of all kinds.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I think perhaps that might be restored, or, rather, that the committee amendment might be rejected. I think these accumulations ought to be permitted; and it provides, as in the text, for the accumulation of arms and other things than clothing. I think it ought to be left in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 88, line 3, after the word "School," to strike out "$7,000,000: Provided, That the sum of $3,000,000 out of this appropriation shall be used solely for the purpose of securing the reserve supply herein provided for," and insert "$4,000,000," so as to read:

Provided, That of the sum herein appropriated $76,000, or so much thereof as may be required, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be made available for the purchase and maintenance of material and equipment necessary for the proper instruction in military aviation of such officers and enlisted men of the National Guard as may be authorized by the War Department to attend the United States Aviation School, $4,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 89, line 10, after the word "equipment," to strike out "$800,000" and insert "$1,200,000," so as to make the clause read:

Supplying and exchanging Infantry equipment, National Guard: For the purpose of manufacturing, procuring, exchanging, and issuing model of 1910 equipment to the Infantry and other dismounted organizations of the National Guard of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia: Provided, That whenever in the opinion of the Secretary of War a sufficient number of Infantry equipment, model of 1910, shall have been procured and shall be available for the purpose the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to issue on the requisition of the governors of the several States and Territories or the commanding general of the District of Columbia National Guard, such numbers thereof as are required for equipping the National Guard in said States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, without charging the cost or value thereof or any expenses connected therewith, against any allotments to said States, Territories, or the District of Columbia, provided that the equipment thus issued shall be receipted for and shall remain the property of the United States and be annually accounted for in the manner prescribed by the act of June 3, 1916, and that each State, Territory, and the District of Columbia shall, upon receipt of new equipment, turn in to the Ordnance Department of the United States Army, without receiving any money credit therefor and without expense for transportation of Infantry equipment now in its possession, the property of the United States, and replaced by articles of the model of 1910 equipment, $1,200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Rifle ranges for civilian instruction," on page 89, after line 11, to strike out:

To establish and maintain indoor and outdoor rifle ranges for the use of all able-bodied males capable of bearing arms, under reasonable regulations to be prescribed by the National Board for Promotion of Rifle Practice and approved by the Secretary of War; for the employment of labor in connection with the establishment of outdoor and indoor rifle ranges, including labor in operating targets; for the employment of instructors; for clerical services; for badges and other insignia; for the transportation of employees, instructors, and civilians to engage in practice; for the purchase of materials, supplies, and services, and for expenses incidental to instruction of citizens of the United States in marksmanship, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and to remain available until expended, $20,000.

For arms, ammunition, targets, and other accessories for target practice for issue in connection with the encouragement of rifle practice in pursuance of the provisions of section 113 of the act approved June 3, 1916, $300,000: Provided, That out of said sum of $300,000 there shall be used for the payment of transportation of teams authorized by the Secretary of War to participate in the national matches not to exceed $60,000: Provided further, That this amount shall be proportioned among the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, according to the distance from the seat of government to the place where the national matches are to be held: And provided further, That the governors of the States, Territories, or the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia may designate which team or teams shall attend from their respective States, Territories, or District of Columbia.

And to insert in lieu the following:

To establish and maintain indoor and outdoor rifle ranges for the use of all able-bodied males between the ages of 16 and 45 capable of bearing arms, under reasonable regulations to be prescribed by the National Board for Promotion of Rifle Practice and approved by the Secretary of War; for the employment of labor in connection with the establishment of outdoor and indoor rifle ranges, including labor in operating targets; for the employment of civilian instructors; for clerical services; for trophies, badges, and other insignia; for the transportation of employees, civilian instructors, and civilians to engage in practice; for the purchase of materials, supplies, and services; and for expenses incidental to instruction of citizens of the United States in marksmanship, to be expended under rules and regulations prescribed by the National Board for Promotion of Rifle Practice and approved by the Secretary of War, and to remain available until expended, $320,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War, in his discretion, and under such regulations as he may prescribe, may authorize the detail of enlisted men of the Army as temporary instructors in rifle practice to organized rifle clubs requesting such instruction.

Mr. KIRBY. I do not know whether all that should be included. It seems to me it is a separate amendment, and it strikes me it would be well enough to leave it out of the bill. We do not care about rifle practice now when we are going to put everybody in the Army. It seems to me the day is past for this sort of drill and this sort of training. I ask the chairman if this amendment was put in before we declared war or afterwards?

Mr. FLETCHER. I can answer for the chairman. This provision, of course, is very similar to the provision of the House in the original bill. It was carried in the bill before there was any declaration, of course, but at the same time it is an important provision in the bill now. We must have this rifle practice continued just the same. We are not going to abandon preparation in the manner of teaching our people how to shoot because war is on. There is all the more need of such practice now, because war is on. I think the provision is not only an appropriate one but all the more required under present conditions than under peace conditions. It is a very important provision.

Mr. KIRBY. In the view of men who are in the regular line?

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely.

Mr. KIRBY. It seems to me that the paragraph beginning on line 14, page 91, ought to be left out.

Mr. FLETCHER. That, of course, is a very important provision now. It is more important now than it was before war was declared. I hope the Senator will not insist upon his objection to it. It is a very important provision in the bill.

Mr. KIRBY. Very well.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 91, after line 14, to insert:

To provide for the transportation and traveling expenses of teams from the National Guard, school teams (composed of students of universities, colleges, and schools), and civilian teams (composed of members of rifle clubs organized under the rules prescribed by the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice) participating in the national matches at State Camp, Fla., as follows: For National Guard teams, $75,000; for school teams, $75,000; for civilian teams, $75,000: Provided, That each of these amounts shall be allotted to the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia according to the distance from their seats of government to State Camp, Fla.: And provided further, That the governors of the States or Territories and the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia may designate which teams shall attend from their respective States, Territories, or District of Columbia; and the moneys hereby appropriated shall be expended by payment of the several allotments to the respective governors and the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, upon satisfactory evidence of participation in the national matches of the teams so designated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Civilian military training," on page 93, line 4, after the date "1916," to strike out "$2,250,000" and insert "$3,281,000," so as to make the clause read:

For the expense of maintaining, upon military reservations or elsewhere, camps for the military instruction and training of such citizens physically capable of bearing arms as may be selected under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, and for furnishing said citizens, at the expense of the United States, uniforms, subsistence, transportation by the most usual and direct route within said limits as to territory as may be prescribed; for such expenditures as may be deemed necessary for water, fuel, light, temporary structures, not including quarters for officers nor barracks for men, screening, and damages resulting from field exercises, and other expenses incidental to maintaining said camps and the theoretical winter instruction in connection therewith, including textbooks and stationery; for furnishing such equipments, tentage, field equipage, and transportation belonging to the United States as may be deemed necessary as authorized by section 54 of the act of Congress approved June 3, 1916, $3,281,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 93, after line 5, to insert:

Provided, That so much of section 54 of the act of June 3, 1916, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," as relates to the transportation of citizens who, conformably to such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, attend training camps be, and the same is hereby amended so as to provide that said citizens shall be paid as traveling allowances 3½ cents per mile for the distance by the shortest usually traveled route from the places from which they are authorized to proceed to the camp and for the return travel thereto: Provided further, That the payment of travel pay for the return journey may be made in advance of the actual performance of travel.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Reserve Corps," on page 96, after line 23, to insert:

Provided, That the Secretary of War is authorized to designate the First Corps Cadets of the National Guard of Massachusetts as a Junior or Senior Division of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps: Provided further, That the First Corps Cadets shall be subject to such rules and regulations as may be prescribed under the provisions of the national-defense act of June 3, 1916, or amendments thereto, relating to the Reserve Officers' Training Corps: Provided further, That the drill and instruction, including indoor target practice, required of the First Corps Cadets as a National Guard organization is hereby waived: And provided further, That the privileges and benefits extended by existing law to National Guard organizations, including those organizations provided for in section 63 of the national-defense act of June 3, 1916, be continued in full force and effect.

Mr. WADSWORTH. My attention is attracted to the amendment which has just been read. It fixes the status of the Corps of Cadets of the Massachusetts Militia, which I imagine is a most excellent change. I wish to suggest to the chairman of the committee—as it would be quite impossible to give the matter the serious consideration at this time—the advisability when the bill reaches the conference, if it may be done under our rules, to look into the matter further. There are several other organizations of the National Guard that are in somewhat the same condition as is this Corps of Cadets in the Massachusetts Guard, and it might very probably be of great benefit to the service in many ways if they would receive this same treatment, being transferred to the Officers' Training Corps instead of being kept in the line of the guard.

Mr. WEEKS. I have an amendment which I wish to offer to this paragraph. I send it to the desk and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 97, line 1, strike out the words "Junior or" and insert the words "unit of" in lieu thereof, so as to read:

Massachusetts as a unit of the Senior Division of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 97, after line 15, to insert:

Provided further, That the words "while so serving" in section 39 of the act of June 3, 1916, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense and for other purposes," shall be construed to include such time as required in traveling to and from the place to which the officer proceeds under proper orders.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 97, after line 22, to insert:

Provided further, That all officers and employees of the United States and of the District of Columbia who shall be members of the Officers' Reserve Corps shall be entitled to leave of absence from their respective duties, without loss of pay, time, or efficiency rating, on all days during which they shall be ordered to duty with troops or at field exercises, or for instruction, for periods not to exceed 15 days in any one calendar year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 98, after line 6, to insert:

Provided further, That members of the Officers' Reserve Corps who are in the employ of the United States Government and who are ordered to duty by proper authority shall, when relieved from duty, be restored to the positions held by them when ordered to duty: Provided further, That the provisions of section 6 of the act of May 10, 1916, entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year 1917," shall not apply to members of the Officers' Reserve Corps who are in the employ of the United States Government and who are ordered to duty by proper authority.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 98, after line 18, to insert:

Provided further, That section 3 of the act approved February 27, 1906, entitled "An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1906, and for prior years and for other purposes," shall not be construed to prohibit the Secretary of War from accepting the gratuitous services of members of the Officers' Reserve Corps of the Army in the furtherance of the enrollment, organization, and training of the Officers' Reserve Corps, the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, or the Enlisted Reserve Corps of the Army or in consultation upon matters relating to the military service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 101, after line 22, to insert:

Provided further, That hereafter any former officer of the Regular or the Volunteer Army, under the age of 64 years and who has resigned or been honorably discharged from the service after a total commissioned service of not less than three years in either or both the Regular or the Volunteer Army, may, upon such examination and within such age limits as may be prescribed by the President, be appointed and commissioned, in the discretion of the President, in any appropriate arm, staff corps, department, or section of the Officers' Reserve Corps, with rank not more than one grade higher than any previously held by the officer in either the Regular or the Volunteer Army, but in no case above that of lieutenant colonel.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 102, after line 10, to strike out:

Provided further, That the following language of section 5 of the act of June 3, 1916, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," to wit: "Not more than one-half of all of the officers detailed in said corps shall at any time be stationed, or assigned to or employed upon any duty, in or near the District of Columbia," be amended so as to authorize the President to suspend the operation of the same in the event of actual or threatened war or other emergency in which the public safety demands it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask that the Senate recede from its action in adopting the last amendment striking out lines 11 to 21, page 102, because it is akin to a section that has gone over, and until action is had on that it would be hardly proper to adopt it.

Mr. SMOOT. And let it be passed over?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Let it be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will, without objection, recede from its action agreeing to the amendment and the amendment will be passed over.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senate adopted the amendment of the committee striking it out. It was done inadvertently, and I ask to reconsider it or recede from it and leave it as it was, to be taken up in connection with another provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That was the action taken.

Mr. SMOOT. That was done.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senate adopted it and I did not want to have it adopted.

Mr. SMOOT. It has been reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has been reconsidered and passed over.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 103, after line 2, to strike out:

Provided further, That the second proviso of section 37 of the act of June 3, 1916, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense and for other purposes," be amended as follows: Provided, That any person who on June 3, 1916, was carried as qualified and registered in the grade of colonel or lieutenant colonel pursuant to the provisions of the act of January 21, 1903, or any person holding a commission as colonel or lieutenant colonel in the National Guard of any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia on June 3, 1916, who has served satisfactorily as such in the service of the United States under the call of May 9, 1916, or that of June 18, 1916, may be commissioned or recommissioned in the Officers' Reserve Corps with rank for which he had been found qualified and registered, or which he held in the National Guard on June 3, 1916, or while in the service of the United States; but when such person shall become thereafter separated from the Officers' Reserve Corps for any reason, the vacancy so caused shall not be filled and such office shall cease and determine: Provided further, That any officer of the Officers' Reserve Corps called for service with his consent in a lower grade than that held by him in said Reserve Corps shall, subject to such physical examination as may be prescribed, be considered eligible for recommission in such lower grade.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 104, after line 5, to strike out:

Provided further, That the following provision contained in the act approved April 23, 1904, "Hereafter all employees of the Ordnance Department whose compensation is annual shall be paid monthly," is hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 105, after line 14, to insert:

Provided further, That hereafter no expenditure exceeding $5,000 shall be made upon any building or military post or grounds about the same without the approval of the Secretary of War, upon detailed estimates submitted to him.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 106, after line 9, to insert:

Provided further, That section 87 of the printing and binding act approved January 12, 1895 (vol. 28, Revised Statutes, p. 622), and section 2 of the act approved June 30, 1906 (vol. 34, Revised Statutes, p. 762), are hereby amended as follows:

"That in time of actual or threatened hostilities the Secretary of War may procure from commercial or other printing establishments, by contract or open-market purchase, such printing and binding as may be required for the use of the Army and also for the National Guard of the several States and Territories and of the District of Columbia or other military forces while in the military service of the United States or about to be called into said service, payment for such printing and binding to be made from the War Department allotment of the appropriation for printing and binding or other available appropriations."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, we have this amendment in the sundry civil appropriation bill. Of course, under present conditions it would be unwise, perhaps, to object to it. I rise simply to call attention to the fact that it has taken Congress nearly 10 years to eliminate from our laws authority for the departments to have the printing and binding of the different departments of our Government executed other than at the Government Printing Office. This is simply going back to the old rule which prevailed and that cost our Government so much money. I recognize, of course, that there would be conditions arising in the case of war where necessity would require immediate action and it would be harmful to our Government not to grant this request at this time.

Of course, this proviso is more liberal than the one in the sundry civil bill, because it says "in time of actual hostilities the Secretary of War," and so forth; but I want the Senate to understand that when the war is over all the provisions which have been put in all the bills or which may be put in bills hereafter authorizing the War Department of our Government to have printing and binding done outside of the Government Printing Office ought to be repealed, because we do not want to pass again through the same experience we have gone through in the last eight years.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am in entire accord with the Senator in the expression of his views, and in order that the viewpoint of the War Department may be had in this connection I ask to have printed with the amendment a letter from the Secretary of War.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 9, 1917.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR: Herewith is inclosed a draft of a bill granting authority to the Secretary of War to procure printing and binding for the military forces of the United States in case of actual or threatened hostilities. The matter is of such great importance and the absence of the authority which it is proposed to grant by the bill may be attended with such grave consequences that I beg leave to urge its enactment at the earliest practicable date.

Under the law as it now stands practically all such printing must be done at the Government Printing Office in this city, and, while that office has always shown a willingness to cooperate to the fullest extent of its capacity, it has been unable to furnish within the short period that could be permitted the enormous quantity of printing required in an emergency such as exists when it becomes necessary to bring the National Guard into the Federal service.

It is not practicable to keep on hand a sufficient supply of the blank forms needed on such occasions because of the changes in them that are required frequently, and any supply printed and stored to meet future emergencies would probably be obsolete when the time came for their use unless renewed at a large expense whenever changes in the forms were made.

The granting of the authority desired would also result in a considerable saving in the cost of transportation, as it would enable me to have the necessary blanks printed in distant parts of the country, adjacent to the places where they would be actually needed. The time necessary for transporting them from this city would also be saved, and in the emergencies which the bill is to meet this would be an important factor.

The authority which the bill proposes would be used only in the event of actual or threatened hostilities.

Very respectfully,
NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

A bill authorizing the Secretary of War to procure printing and binding in time of actual or threatened hostilities by contract or open-market purchase from commercial or other printing establishments.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 87 of the printing and binding act, approved January 12, 1895 (vol. 28, R. S., p. 622), and section 2 of the act approved June 30, 1906 (vol. 34, R. S., p. 762), are hereby amended as follows:

"That in time of actual or threatened hostilities the Secretary of War may procure from commercial or other printing establishments, by contract or open-market purchase, such printing and binding as may be required for the use of the Army, and also for the National Guard of the several States and Territories and of the District of Columbia or other military forces while in the military service of the United States or about to be called into said service, payment for such printing and binding to be made from the War Department allotment of the appropriation for printing and binding or other available appropriations."

Mr. FLETCHER. I should like to say that I favor the amendment only because of the clause contained in the first part of it "in time of actual or threatened hostilities." That is the only thing that justifies it. I want it distinctly understood that the provision is to be limited to those conditions.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Florida if that clause does not so limit it that after the hostilities have ceased the provision will fall.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think so. I think when there are no actual hostilities or threatened hostilities there is no such authority granted by this provision.

Mr. GALLINGER. So it would seem to me, except that the law would stand, and then if there should be hostilities later on it would become operative.

Mr. SMOOT. Or even threatened.

Mr. GALLINGER. Or threatened. It seems to me it would do no harm after hostilities had ceased.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the statute would remain on the books, and whenever that condition arose again it would become operative.

Mr. SMOOT. Perhaps it would be better if we even limit the amendment further than it is, so that it would read "That in time of actual hostilities the Secretary of War," and so forth, striking out the words "or threatened." That will reach the object sought, and then after the close of the war it would possibly do no harm even if the provision were not repealed. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill if he will not accept an amendment striking out the words "or threatened."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think it will be safe to accept that amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I move as an amendment to the amendment to strike out the words "or threatened" in line 17, page 106.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 106 of the proposed amendment, line 17, strike out the words "or threatened," so as to read:

That in time of actual hostilities the Secretary of War may, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 107, after line 2, to insert:

Provided further, That the Navasota Transfer Co., a copartnership composed of J. T. Evans and A. J. Riesto, be, and is hereby, relieved from further performance of its several contracts with the Government for the supply of hay and bedding at various posts and places in the Southern Department during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, in view of the changed conditions resulting from the call into the Federal service of the Organized Militia and the National Guard of the several States, such conditions having resulted in greatly enhancing the price of the supplies and in making the performance of the contract inequitable and a matter of exceptional hardship on the contractor; and said contracts shall be regarded as closed, final settlement being made with the contractor at the contract price for the supplies already delivered under the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There was a request which came to us, in view of the present crisis, that these appropriations ought all to be made immediately available, and I offer the following amendment to come in at the close of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 107, after line 18, insert:

That all appropriations made by this act shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to ask the Senator having the bill in charge if he has further committee amendments to offer at this time? If not, I have no doubt we would revert to the amendments that were passed over, and before doing that I desire to suggest the absence of a quorum, so that those who are interested in those amendments will have a chance to be present.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There is only one amendment, I think, that the committee desires to offer. I have it not with me, but I can offer it later.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the order was that we should dispose of the committee amendments first, and in that case we would now revert to the committee amendments which were passed over. I simply wanted to suggest the absence of a quorum so that those who are interested in the amendments that were passed over could be here. I think that is the quickest way to dispose of the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator withhold that for a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. I will.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I desire to call attention to the committee amendment on page 88 of the bill which was adopted, and which, in view of the fact that the committee amendment on page 87 of the bill was rejected, makes it desirable that it should also be rejected. On page 88 the House print provides for an appropriation of $7,000,000 for supplies, equipment, uniforms, and arms. The Senate rejected the amendment of the committee on page 87, which would have forbidden the accumulation of a reserve supply, but adopted the amendment on page 88, which reduced the appropriation from $7,000,000 to $4,000,000. The appropriation should not have been reduced if we still permit the accumulation of reserve supplies on page 87.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am willing to have the Senate reconsider the action by which that amendment was adopted.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On page 88?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes. I think we ought to accumulate supplies.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate adopted the committee amendment on page 88, striking out lines 3 to 6, inclusive.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There is one other amendment which I desire to offer. I will state to the Senate that I am offering this amendment at the request of the Quartermaster General, who desires to change his system of bookkeeping so as to shorten the work, putting the specific appropriations under specific heads.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 47 strike out lines 3 to 11, inclusive, and insert the following proviso:

Provided, That all the money hereinbefore appropriated under the titles "Subsistence of the Army"; "Regular supplies, Quartermaster Corps"; "Incidental expenses, Quartermaster Corps"; "Transportation of the Army and its supplies"; "Water and sewers at military posts"; "Clothing, camp and garrison equipage"; "Horses for Cavalry, Artillery, and Engineers, etc."; "Barracks and quarters"; "Military post exchanges"; "Roads, walks, wharves, and drainage"; and "Shooting galleries and ranges" shall be disbursed and accounted for by officers and agents of the Quartermaster Corps, and for that purpose shall constitute three funds, as follows: "Supplies, services and transportation"; "Animals for the Army"; and "Construction, repair, and rentals": Provided further, That allotments to the three funds named shall be determined by the Secretary of War, the total amount appropriated not to be exceeded.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator whether it is intended that all these accounts shall hereafter constitute one fund?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; it is not intended to consolidate the funds. On page 47 all of those items from line 5 to line 10 are practically in one sum now.

Mr. SMOOT. That is, under the present law?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Under the present law.

Mr. SMOOT. I could not follow the amendment very closely as it was read. I should like to have the Senator explain what changes the amendment makes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Quartermaster General came here. He had these headings, and he had each item of expense under each heading itemized, the amount to come under each heading, and he would have preferred to have had it all in this bill, but it makes it very long, practically revises the system of bookkeeping and puts it in the statute. We thought after consultation that he could do the same work under this provision. The purpose is really to separate the funds more distinctly under the present provision than he has done under the former.

Mr. SMOOT. It will separate the funds when the funds are kept in a separate account, and there is much less likelihood that the money will be spent recklessly than there is to have one great lump sum and take everything from it as the head of the department may desire.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is the main purpose, I will say to the Senator. We want to get this in a situation different from the House and try to work it out in conference. If we can not, we will have to adopt the House provision.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator from Oregon yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to state to the Senator that when it came up in the House there was something said about the estimated cost of making this change.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not think it was estimated, but Gen. Sharpe said he thought the cost would be very much less.

Mr. McKELLAR. Eventually; but as I understood it, it would cost a great deal of money to put this change into effect, and it would require a great many additional men in order to do it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; on the other hand, he said it would reduce the expense; that he would transfer men to this department from other departments of the Government.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is my recollection that he stated there would be quite a large expense in making the transfer. Of course, if it can be done better and more cheaply, obviously it is the thing to do, but as I understand it, in the hearing before the House committee he stated that the cost to make the change would be very considerable, and it was stricken out of the bill by the House on that account.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not think it will entail additional expense. I think it will cheapen the system.

Mr. SMOOT. If the amendment is adopted, it will go into conference.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. We are going to try and work it out in conference.

Mr. SMOOT. Then the Senator can look up the hearings before the House committee and find out just what was said about the expense and whether it would pay to make the change.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will call attention to the House committee hearing now.

At page 107 Gen. Sharpe was asked:

What do you save by this consolidation?

Gen. Sharpe said:

It is a saving of work, as far as the clerical work at posts and all offices of the Government is concerned. It gives greater knowledge to Congress in regard to appropriations. If you will look at the appropriation bill under the heading "Regular supplies, Quartermaster Corps," you will see a whole page and a half of description, and finally the amount appropriated is named. There is nothing there to show at all the amount for each of the items or groups of supplies.

He had this worked out to a system. I did not think it was proper to put it all into the bill. It is now our purpose to try and work it out in conference. If we can not, the House provision will remain, of course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the chairman of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Utah to withhold his suggestion as to a quorum for a moment, and I ask the Senator from Oregon if he will permit me, more as a matter of personal convenience than anything else, to have taken up for consideration an amendment which I have been in the Senate waiting to bring up for many hours already?

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly willing to withhold the suggestion, and I think the Senator had better ask unanimous consent to present his amendment because of the order which has been made.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Then, I will ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the amendment which I send to the Secretary's desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 95, after line 11, it is proposed to insert:

To enable the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to completely report on certain portions of the improvements, as provided in the "act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes," approved August 29, 1916, they are hereby authorized to enter into negotiations for the purchase of the existing Cape Cod Canal and the existing Chesapeake & Delaware Canal, respectively, with the property, franchises, and appurtenances used or acquired for use in connection therewith or appertaining thereto, respectively; and they are further authorized, if in their judgment the price for each, respectively, is reasonable and satisfactory, to make contracts for the purchase of the same, at the option of the United States, subject to future ratification and appropriation by the Congress as to each, respectively.

In the event of the inability of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to make a satisfactory contract for the voluntary purchase of said Chesapeake & Delaware Canal and its appurtenances, they are hereby authorized and directed, through the Attorney General, to institute and carry to completion proceedings for the condemnation of said canal and its appurtenances, the acceptance of the award in said proceedings to be subject to the future ratification and appropriation by Congress. Such condemnation proceedings shall be instituted and conducted in, and jurisdiction of said proceedings is hereby given to the District Court of the United States for the District of Delaware substantially as provided in "An act to authorize condemnation of land for sites for public buildings, and for other purposes," approved August 1, 1888; and the sum of $5,000 is hereby appropriated to pay the necessary costs thereof and expenses in connection therewith.

The said Secretaries are further authorized and directed to report their proceedings hereunder to the Congress, with such information as is then obtainable concerning the action of the State of New Jersey in providing a right of way for a deep-sea level canal across that State connecting New York Harbor with the Delaware River.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, in connection with the amendment, I think a letter addressed to me by the Secretary of War, which I now send to the desk, should be read as explanatory of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 9, 1917.

Hon. WILLARD SAULSBURY,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR SAULSBURY: I have your letter of April 7, transmitting me a copy of an amendment intended to be proposed by you to House of Representatives bill No. 13, making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes. The purpose of this amendment is to enable the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to report completely on certain portions of the improvements provided in the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and authorizing the said Secretaries to enter into negotiations for the purchase of the existing Cape Cod Canal and the existing Chesapeake & Delaware Canal, respectively. By the terms of this bill the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are authorized, in the event of satisfactory prices being agreed upon, to make contracts for the purchase of the same, at the option of the United States, subject to future ratification and appropriation by Congress in each case. They are further authorized to institute appropriate proceedings in the event of their inability to reach an agreement as to a satisfactory price.

This is substantially the proposition treated by Secretary Garrison in his letter of March 11, 1915. While this Department has reached no definite conclusion as to the desirability of making these purchases, and can not until the question of price is definitely settled, nevertheless the department is in favor of the passage of the amendment submitted which you propose to introduce to the bill in question.

Very truly, yours,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I want to say in connection with this amendment that there is no appropriation called for by it, except, possibly, a contingent one of $5,000. It is merely to enable the Secretaries of War and of the Navy, under the authority of the naval act which was passed last year, to ascertain the facts in connection with the investigation with which they were thereby charged.

With respect to the Cape Cod Canal they can satisfy the terms of the amendment probably merely by an inquiry. With respect to the New Jersey operation they can ascertain the facts from the State of New Jersey with some little trouble. With regard to the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal, with respect to which a provision is inserted for ascertaining the price by condemnation, that is absolutely necessary if the Government ever is to obtain a price at which they can acquire that great improvement.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Delaware a question?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Surely.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, will not the Senator's amendment practically permit the Government to purchase these canals?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Not in the slightest degree.

Mr. KENYON. The amendment authorizes condemnation proceedings.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It authorizes condemnation proceedings, the consummation of which requires future appropriation and approval by Congress. There is not anywhere in this amendment which I have proposed anything which commits the Government to purchase the canals. In fact the matter is very carefully guarded because we may not enter into any contracts except to obtain an option of purchase.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator if this is not substantially the same amendment which was presented to the Committee on Commerce at the last session?

Mr. SAULSBURY. It is substantially the same amendment, except that I have inserted, in view of some possible inquiry such as the Senator from Iowa is addressing, that in making these agreements, or possible agreements, they are to be optional agreements. I will call the Senator's attention to the additional phrase which is inserted in the amendment, which the Senator will find on the second page of the amendment, beginning with line 2, as follows:

To make contracts for the purchase of the same, at the option of the United States, subject to future ratification and appropriation by the Congress as to each, respectively.

Mr. KENYON. Well, just why does the Senator provide for the contract? Is it not possible to ascertain the amount that must be paid for these canals, then submit that to Congress, and then have Congress act? In other words, where you make a contract for the purchase, even though it is at the option of the United States, that is a long step, of course, toward the acquisition of the canals. The act of Congress subsequently will be a pure ratification of that action.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I shall be very glad, Mr. President, to answer the question of the Senator from Iowa; and it is a matter which is very easily explainable.

So far as the Cape Cod Canal is concerned, I have no doubt the amount can be obtained from the company which they will take for the canal. So far as the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal is concerned, it is absolutely an impossibility to obtain in any way information at what price that property can be obtained by the Government, except through condemnation proceedings.

The reason for that is this: The company has more bonds on its property than the property is worth. They are paying 4 per cent on those bonds, but the amount of bonds is probably quite equal to the amount that the Government would be willing to pay for the property. For example, it is a few thousand dollars over two and a half million dollars now. I believe that a year or two ago this property could have been obtained by the Government at a price a trifle over $2,000,000 probably. The company has been doing better since, and the Government may have to pay more to the bondholders and stockholders of that company.

For example, if they sell to the Government they would, in my judgment, not get anything for their stock at all if sold at a fair price. The stockholders are not going to contribute it if they can obtain something for it.

In addition to that there is another difficulty. Even if it were possible to get the stockholders to agree, the stockholding of that company is arranged in such manner that the majority of the stock does not control the action of the company. It is a very peculiar provision that each individual stockholder has one vote. I do not undertake to be exact in my further statement, but if the same stockholder has 10 shares he would have, say, two votes; if he has 50 shares he would possibly have three votes.

Now, added to that confusion, and as showing the impossibility of obtaining a majority of the value voting to sell the company, the bondholders of that company also have the right to vote, my recollection is, in the proportion of one vote for each $50 of bonds. So it is practically an impossibility to obtain a price from the organization of that company.

That is demonstrated further in a report made by the Secretary of War under date of March 11, 1915, pursuant to a resolution, of which I obtained the passage in the Senate, calling upon him to make a report. On page 3 of his report, which is Senate Document No. 14, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, there is a printed letter from the president of the company showing the practical impossibility of giving any price on this property. That letter concludes as follows:

It is respectfully suggested that probably the best and only method for fixing a fair value upon the canal and having the conveyance made to the Government will be by condemnation proceedings or through a commission appointed for that purpose.

Very respectfully,

C. L. NICHOLSON, President.

I trust I have explained to the Senator from Iowa my reasons for offering the amendment, and I ask for its adoption.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I merely want to offer a suggestion or two about this matter. I think this illustrates what is coming along in the bills which we are to be called upon to consider in this emergency. I am not saying now that I am opposed to the purchase of the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal. I have given the matter a good deal of consideration, but do not have my papers here now in relation to it, not knowing the question was to arise. It is a question, however, that I want to see determined on its own merits.

There is considerable difference of opinion as to the merits of this proposition. Some people, who have given it study, think it is an attempt—not on the part of the Senator from Delaware; I do not mean that at all—to unload a bankrupt concern onto the Government. The Government will be involved before it is through with the proposition in an expenditure of at least $20,000,000—and I think even more than that—if the canal is to be of any use whatever for naval purposes.

The Navy Department, as I understand, has not recommended this purchase. Why, then, should this proposition go on this bill? I want to go to the very limit of everything that is necessary for ample preparation in this contest or for national preparedness, but I do not propose to vote for anything that may get into these bills just on that plea. Now, we have urged upon us as an emergency matter the purchase of this canal, which can not be completed in any event for years. In this same bill we had a proposition for a park, with a system of roads, in Tennessee, and some part of $300,000 to be appropriated for that purpose. That fortunately went out. This is not the time to appropriate money for parks.

What I am urging is that we ought not to go any further in expenses for local improvements in time of an emergency like this than is absolutely essential. We are not going to halt on great national questions as to the amount of money to be expended, but these local matters ought to wait, to be taken up and determined each on its own merits.

The Secretary of the Navy, I think, has set a splendid example to Congress in his contracts, according to newspaper reports, which state that the bill for steel was reduced by him $18,000,000 from that in 1917, and that he compelled the saving of more than $2,000,000 on a single order for torpedoes. I pay tribute to the Secretary of the Navy, a man of splendid ability, honesty, and courage, who is holding these expenditures down as best he can. The interests of the people are safe in his hands. Congress ought to do the same thing as to expenditures. Let us pass by things of purely local nature.

I am opposed at this time to taking up the question of the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal. I fear that every other canal in the country that anybody wants to have the Government acquire will be also included under similar pleas. I received a letter yesterday or day before regarding some intercoastal canal in Texas. It was stated as to that canal that we must have it in order to secure a proper measure of national defense.

I say these things not in hostility to this project. My mind is open on the proposition after considerable study; but I think that it ought not to come up at this time in connection with this bill.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, if I may ask the Senator a question, he understands, does he not, that the only thing accomplished by this amendment is to ascertain a price at which this property may be obtained, and that this is the only way it can be done?

Mr. KENYON. Of course, when we make these optional contracts, and when we find out the price, the next thing to follow will be a great campaign for the purchase of the canal.

I make the point of order, Mr. President, that this amendment is legislation, general in its nature, to be attached to an appropriation bill, and that it has not been estimated for or approved by any committee.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, in reply to that suggestion I may say that a committee of which the distinguished Senator from Iowa is a member has twice reported on this particular matter, and therefore a committee has considered it, and a committee of the Senate has reported this amendment favorably to the Senate twice.

Mr. KENYON. Not at this session of Congress.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Not at this session of Congress, of course. I do not think, however, that the amendment is general legislation. It simply authorizes the obtaining of information, carries out a general provision contained in a previous law, and does not change or alter that law in any way. I can not agree that the point of order made by the Senator is well taken.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator whether this amendment carries any appropriation?

Mr. SAULSBURY. There is a contingent appropriation of $5,000 to cover the expenses of the proceedings.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, do I understand the Senator to say that the Appropriation Committee have approved this amendment at this session of Congress?

Mr. SAULSBURY. No, no; that has not been done. This amendment was not considered by the Military Committee.

Mr. SMOOT. It is an amendment offered by the Senator himself.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It was approved at the last Congress by the Commerce Committee.

Mr. SMOOT. I mean at the present session.

Mr. SAULSBURY. No; it has not been approved during the present session; but there is no objection on the part of the committee, as I understand, to the adoption of the amendment, and it is recommended by the War Department, as it has been heretofore.

Mr. SMOOT. I take it for granted that it is not general legislation; but as it has not been reported by a standing committee, then the point of order made by the Senator from Iowa would stand upon that ground.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator from Iowa made no such point of order, as I understand, as to the contingent appropriation.

Mr. GALLINGER. That would only stand as against the appropriation, but would not touch the question of the amendment being general legislation.

Mr. SMOOT. There is an appropriation in it.

Mr. GALLINGER. A very small one.

Mr. KENYON. If there are any other points that can be included, I should like to have them all included in the point of order.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I hardly think the Senator from Iowa wants to be unfair, but this matter has been up in the Senate in the presence of the Senator from Iowa many times.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Delaware permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I yield.

Mr. HUGHES. Do I understand the Senator to state that the amendment which he has offered is intended to carry out the provisions of a law?

Mr. SAULSBURY. It is; and is so stated by the department.

Mr. HUGHES. Can the Senator refer to the law, because that becomes very important in connection with the point of order?

Mr. SAULSBURY. The law intended to be carried out is expressed in the amendment in this way:

To enable the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to completely report on certain portions of the improvements, as provided in the "Act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes," approved August 29, 1916, they are hereby authorized—

And so forth—to do the things provided for in the amendment.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I merely desire to call the attention of the Chair to Rule XVI—and the point of order made by the Senator from Iowa is made under the provisions of that rule, I presume—one of the provisions of which is as follows:

No amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill—

This is a bill of that character—

the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am very grateful to the Senator for calling attention to that rule.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, do I understand that there is an existing law with reference to this identical subject?

Mr. SAULSBURY. There is, under which a report has to be made on these identical subjects by the Secretaries.

Mr. THOMAS. Has the Senator a copy of the law at hand?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I can refer the Senator to it. I have not a copy of it.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator did refer me to it, but I do not recall the enactment, and, of course, I can not remember the provisions of all laws passed by the last Congress. I do not recall any act of legislation, except as the Senator refers to it, regarding this canal provision. Of course, I may be mistaken; but I should like to know just what the specific legislation is to which the Senator refers, because, as stated by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES], it may be controlling in connection with the point of order.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The provision to which I refer, Mr. President, was contained in the naval appropriation bill approved August 29, 1916, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917. It is the act which is now current. In that act there was a general direction for an investigation and report upon certain channels and connecting waterways on both the east and the west coasts.

Mr. THOMAS. Did it mention these specific canals?

Mr. SAULSBURY. The terms of it were broad enough to cover all these matters, and these were particularly included and specifically mentioned in the first place, and afterwards a general provision was put in.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, so that there may be no mistake as to the rule——

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, before the Senator proceeds, may I say one word? I was appealing to the Senator from Iowa, and I will appeal to any other Senator within the range of my voice in regard to this matter. I have been trying for several years to ascertain the amount at which this Government could acquire a great public improvement, and, as I believe, an improvement which will add greatly to this country's means of defense. It has been impossible to obtain anywhere, from any person, at any time, any price which the Government would have to pay, except as proposed in this amendment or in some similar fashion. There is practically no appropriation included here; and I appeal to Senators within the range of my voice, as a matter of fairness, not to continue to insist that I shall get up here and be met in the first instance, when I endeavor to secure an appropriation, by the statement, "We do not know how much it will cost," and then, when I try to find out, as I do by means of this amendment, have it said to me, "We shall not take action that will allow you to find out even how much this will cost the Government." That is the situation. This amendment is simply designed to ascertain a single unascertained fact, to wit, the price that the Government will have to pay for a thing if it wants it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I was simply interested in the statement made by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES], calling attention to the part of the rule which, he thought, exempted this amendment from a point of order. If the Senator from New Jersey had read further, he would have found that quite a different condition exists when the whole of the rule is read. This is the portion of the rule the Senator read:

And no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law—or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session.

But that is not where the rule stops. It continues—

Or, in other words, if the law referred to in this amendment had been passed at this session, and later an appropriation bill came in, then there could not be a point of order made against it; but the rule refers only to "existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution" passed at the session in which the appropriation may be asked for. If an amendment does not comply with those conditions, then a point of order can be made against it. It is only upon the question of the rules and the accuracy of their application that I speak at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is inclined to sustain the point of order. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I desire to move, if the matter is not concluded—and I do not understand it to be—to strike out, on page 92, all from line 11 down to and including line 19, on page 94.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from Arkansas withhold that for a moment? I gave notice that I would suggest the absence of a quorum before taking up the committee amendments which have been passed over.

Mr. KIRBY. This item relates to civilian military training; but I will withhold the amendment if the Senator so desires.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HUGHES. Before the Senator suggests the absence of a quorum, the purpose of the suggestion, as I understand, is to secure a larger attendance when the committee amendments which have been passed over are being considered. Is that correct?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; that is the object I have.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Husting	Nelson	Smith, S. C.
Beckham	James	New	Smoot
Borah	Johnson, Cal.	Norris	Sterling
Brady	Johnson, S. Dak.	Overman	Stone
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Page	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Kellogg	Pittman	Swanson
Culberson	Kendrick	Poindexter	Thomas
Cummins	Kenyon	Pomerene	Thompson
Curtis	King	Reed	Tillman
Dillingham	Kirby	Robinson	Townsend

Gallinger	McCumber	Shields	Watson
Gerry	McKeller	Simmons	Weeks
Hale	McLean	Smith, Ariz.	Wolcott
Harding	Martin	Smith, Ga.
Hughes	Myers	Smith, Mich.

Mr. HUSTING. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] is detained from the Senate on departmental business.

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE] is detained from the Chamber on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. MARTIN. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] is detained from the Senate by a bereavement in his family.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. GOFF] is detained on account of serious illness.

Mr. REED. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] is detained from the Senate by illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Seventy-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I should like to offer the following amendment to the pending measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendments have not as yet been disposed of. The amendment is not, therefore, at this particular time, in order.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I understand that the chairman of the committee does not object.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, at the time I spoke to the Senator I did not remember that we had passed over a number of committee amendments. The call just now was for the purpose of getting Senators together to act upon those amendments which were passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first amendment passed over will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. The first amendment passed over is on page 16, line 17, passed over at the request of the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, after such consideration of this amendment as I have been able to give I can not at this time vote for it. We will have the general military bill before us in a few days, which will come from the House. If this amendment is necessary, we will have an opportunity to consider it at that time. The bill which will come from the House is a bill covering general legislation with reference to the Army. This is an appropriation bill, not a bill covering general legislation.

As I just stated, the bill which is now being considered by the House is one generally covering the organization of the Army. Following the appropriation bill here, there will be a bill which consists of general legislation. I desire to make the point of order that this amendment can not be attached over objection to an appropriation bill.

No amendment which proposes general legislation——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. From what rule is the Senator reading, please?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I read from page 18 of the rule, paragraph 3, Rule XVI:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

This is a general appropriation bill for the Army. In 1916 we passed a bill entitled "A bill for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes." That is a bill which involves general provisions fixing the organization of the Army, prescribing the officers and the system of organization, and dealing as a proposition of general legislation with our military affairs. That bill created the offices of brigadier general——

Mr. WARREN. Oh, Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator is partially correct, but mainly incorrect, in regard to the defense act. There is nothing in that relating to the office of brigadier general or major general, except that it provides by inference for additional brigadier generals and additional major generals.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Precisely. That bill provided for brigadier generals and major generals.

Mr. WARREN. It provided for the number simply.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Exactly; that is what it did. There was, prior to that time, a general statute applicable to the organization which provided for major generals and brigadier generals, and in this general bill by which we reorganized the Army we again provided for brigadier generals and major generals; and it left the organization of the Army with a certain number of brigadier generals and a certain number of major generals. The organization of the Army is as much general legislation as the organization of the judiciary.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, perhaps the Senator overlooks this fact: This amendment is to the amount of money appropriated for the payment of officers, and it carries the authority to the President to temporarily delegate or bestow upon any major general additional temporary rank and pay. It does not undertake to uproot the statutes; it simply adds to them in the distribution of this money.

Mr. President, if the Senator will excuse me——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WARREN. If he will withhold the point for a few minutes, I hope the Senator will not make the point of order. I do not think the point could be sustained, but it seems to me that it would be fairer to let it go to a vote. The Senator, I conclude, wants this amendment to fail. Probably he would be gratified in that. It seems to me that we should do justice, or, if we can not do justice, we ought at least to be frank. We have had appeals here to patriotism. We have had distinguished Senators who avowed——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator wishes to make extended remarks, I would rather he would make them after I have taken my seat.

Mr. WARREN. I am not in the habit of making extended remarks, Mr. President, but I will permit the Senator to go on with his remarks.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, it abolishes the office of brigadier general. It uproots our entire system of officers above the office of colonel. Let us see what it says:

All general officers shall hereafter be of the grade of major general with the existing relative rank, the senior one-third of whom shall have the pay and allowances of that grade and the junior two-thirds the pay and allowances now authorized by law for brigadier generals.

It does not simply provide for a distribution of the money here appropriated; it abolishes the office of brigadier general.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. I want to call the Senator's attention to the further fact that it creates temporarily four generals and three lieutenant generals that are to be continuously kept in office for four years, and during that time it increases their salary.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. For four years it makes offices for seven men that are appointed out of the Staff, and while they are on the Staff they have a higher rank and get higher pay, additional pay, otherwise; and evidently this is a scheme to help out some of those men.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I presume the Senator wants to be fair. In the first place, it does not appoint for four years nor for four days. It appoints at the pleasure of the President. In the next place, it does not appoint them out of the Staff. It states expressly that it is for other purposes. It does not appoint seven men, but it appoints six. There can be four generals and two lieutenant generals, or four lieutenant generals and two generals, or three of each.

I simply say this because I know the Senator wants to be fair. I will not detain the Senator from Georgia longer. I may say now, however, about doing away with the brigadier generals, that their pay remains the same. They are major generals of the junior rank and major generals of the senior rank, just the same as they have in the countries of the Old World, and as we have correspondingly in the Navy. Does the Senator, in this time of stress, when we want the best service and when we want to encourage our Army, wish to put our Army where there is not a single country in the world whose officers, if put alongside of ours, will not outrank them, leaving ours standing at the foot, especially at this time when our armies are soon likely to be fighting side by side with some of the armies of the Old World? Does he want to say that as between the Army and the Navy, the Army must stand at the foot there, too, instead of alongside? Is there any object in that, and especially so when the total cost of it can not exceed $18,000?

It seems to me that the least we can do is to give the rank that is so much valued by officers and give it to them so that they can meet on an equality with the armies of the world throughout. The other countries have passed on and progressed, and we have remained stationary. We have waited at the wayside, at the switch, while they have been incorporating valued amendments in their laws. Now, must we humiliate our Army? I am willing to do as much for privates as for officers, but I see no object at this time in undertaking to humiliate, as we certainly do, our Army by saying that they are neither equal to our own Navy nor equal to any of the armies of the world.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, no one is further than myself from any purpose of humiliating our Army and nothing that I am now doing can humiliate them. I stated before that a general bill with reference to the Army is now before the House. It constitutes general legislation for the organization of the Army. It will be before us in a few days, and that is the time when we should consider this subject. Then we will know what kind of Army we are to have. Then we will know what kind of generals we will need.

We now have no general above the rank of major general. We have 10 major generals, I think, and about 30 brigadier generals. That is provided for by general law. The act which we passed in 1916—not an appropriation bill, but a general law for the reorganization of the Army—named the officers. It fixed the units. It provided for major generals and brigadier generals. This proposed amendment begins with abolishing the office of brigadier general and provides for no general less than a major general. It then provides for the classification of the major generals, one-third of whom are to rank first and two-thirds of whom are to rank second. Then, as the Senator from Minnesota states, it proceeds further and creates the office of lieutenant general. It substitutes, in certain branches of the Government here in Washington, a lieutenant general for duties that are now by general law directed to be performed by a brigadier general.

The bill which we passed in 1916 for the general reorganization of the Army names certain heads of bureaus in the department here to be presided over by brigadier generals. This bill makes them lieutenant generals or major generals.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator calls attention to a bill that is now before the other House, which will probably come here, and which will very likely deal with this question. I will ask the Senator if he does not agree with the Senator from Wyoming and some of the rest of us in the proposition that if we are to create a great Army to represent our country, very likely on the battle fields of Europe, we ought to have in that Army officers of as high rank as those in the British, French, or Russian Armies?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do; and when that bill comes here, and we understand what the Army is to be, then I am in favor at that time of fixing such grades of higher generals as the character of the bill requires. What I am objecting to now is legislating upon this subject in an appropriation bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I thank the Senator from Georgia, Mr. President. I know how fair he is.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I may change my mind by that time and vote to abolish the office of brigadier general, although I have a feeling of attachment for the office of brigadier general. I have been raised with great respect for brigadier generals, and I will reluctantly reach the conclusion that the office ought to be abolished. Many of the heroes of our country on both sides in the War between the States won their spurs and their everlasting fame while still brigadier generals, and I hate to see the office abolished.

Mr. GALLINGER. The only solicitude I had was, knowing the Senator's influence and the Senator's fairness as well, that he should commit himself, as he has, in favor of giving our officers, if they are sent to participate in the terrible war in Europe, as high rank as those of the other armies with whom they will cooperate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If we provide for an army of a million men, I am in favor of increasing the rank of the higher officers; and if we are preparing an army perhaps to go abroad, I wish the United States Army to have officers with just as high rank as those whom they will meet.

Mr. NELSON, Mr. THOMAS, and Mr. WARREN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield, and to whom?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield first to the Senator from Minnesota, who rose first.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to say that this idea of having nothing but major generals, in order to put us on a par with the officers of other countries, is unwarranted. They have brigadier generals in all armies—in the French Army, in the English Army, and in the Russian Army—and it is not necessary for us to wipe them out of our service to put us on a par with the service in other countries.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota is correct in a small way and incorrect in a larger way. They do not have brigadier generals in the French Army and English Army to the extent that we have, and it is a mere matter of brevet or of some peculiar service; but as to the regular line, the fighting men, they have major generals of senior and junior grade.

Mr. President, I do not wish to extend the argument with the Senator if he wishes to make the point of order and expects to allow the matter to come up in another bill. I am perfectly ready to have it come in that way; but the Senator was proceeding to argue against this idea of a change beforehand, and I should rather leave those arguments, of course, to that time, if he is willing to do so. Now, I enjoy history and the old title of brigadier general, or "jigadier brindle," as we used humorously to call it in the old Army days. I have the same association, the same love for the title, that the Senator from Minnesota and the Senator from Georgia have; but it is one of those things that has passed as to the other armies, and when the department comes here—you know we have all sworn to support our President and his department in these wars——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator may be bound by such an oath. I have not taken one.

Mr. WARREN. It seems to me that when they come and ask for this we ought to consider it, and consider it fairly—if not on this bill, in another—because the very foundation is the organization of the Army, and the Secretary of War, with the assent of the President, has given it study and comes here and asks for this change. These officers are not coming and requesting us to promote them. They are debarred from that. But the Secretary comes here and states that he believes, as I do, that it would add to the efficiency of the Army. So I hope it may come up in due time and receive the attention that it ought to receive.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield now to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Senator referred just now to the fact that many of the great heroes of the wars of this country acquired their great distinction in subordinate commands. Does not the Senator think that it would be wise, in our scheme of reorganization, instead of creating so many positions of generals and lieutenant generals, to reenact the old law creating one general and one lieutenant general as offices to which these men can aspire and which they can occupy through merit hardly won in the service of their country?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I think there is a great deal in the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado.

What I desired was simply to call attention to the features of this proposed amendment, and to show how clearly it comes within the prohibition of our rule which excludes general legislation from an appropriation bill, and, in connection with making the point of order upon it here, to call attention to the fact that we will have an opportunity in a few days to consider this subject at a better time, when we will know of what the Army will consist, when we have a general bill before us for the reorganization of the Army.

Now, Mr. President, I make the point of order on the amendment, on page 16, starting with the word "Provided," on line 17, and going down to line 23, on the next page, on the ground that it is general legislation upon a general appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, are there other committee amendments?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There are. The second committee amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The next committee amendment which was passed over will be found on page 22 of the bill. The paragraph reads as follows, beginning on line 11:

For commutation of quarters and of heat and light for field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, $70,000.

Then follows the committee amendment, where the committee proposes to insert:

Provided, That the allowances authorized by act of August 29, 1916, for 200 field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, shall be effective from date of approval of said act for the 200 clerks appointed who were eligible on August 29, 1916.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as I understand this amendment, it provides for 200 field clerks, Quartermaster Corps; and if those field clerks are advanced, say, one year after the approval of the act referred to in the amendment, then their increased salary is to begin, not at the time of their appointment, but from the date of the approval of the act. If I am wrong, I should like to have the Senator in charge of the bill correct me.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I think when the act was passed, giving field clerks that advancement, it was intended that it should be paid from the date of the approval of the act. Instead of that the officers of the department held that they could not be paid from the date of the approval of the act, but that their advanced pay would start only from the date of the actual appointment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think the officers were perfectly right, and I think that is the proper thing to do.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Possibly they were; but I do not think that was the intention of the Congress, or at least it was not the intention of the committee at the time that the original amendment was proposed. However, it is a question of whether the Congress wants to make the increased pay start from the date of the approval of the act or from the date of the actual appointment and commission.

Mr. SMOOT. Can the Senator tell the Senate what cost it will involve—how much the expense will be?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have not had any estimate made on it. I really do not know.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not believe that Congress wants to do a thing like this. I do not believe that we ought to go to work and give a field clerk a promotion and then say, after he is promoted, that he shall draw back pay of a year or two at a certain rate more than he was drawing at the time of his promotion.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly not.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what this amendment means; and I sincerely hope the Senate will not agree to the committee amendment. It ought to be voted down.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is on the following page—page 23—where, after the numerals at the end of line 2, the committee proposes to insert certain matter set out in the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The proviso has been read. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. REED. What is the amendment?

Mr. OWEN. It relates to the General Staff.

Mr. REED. I wish the chairman of the committee would tell us what that change really effects—how much of a change it makes.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I should like to have the chairman of the committee explain the method of administration of affairs of the General Staff now. I understand he has a letter in regard to it.

Mr. REED. I proffered the request.

Mr. OWEN. I did not understand.

Mr. REED. It can be withdrawn.

Mr. OWEN. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. REED. There is no necessity for that. I just wanted the RECORD to show that my request is withdrawn temporarily.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Do I understand that the Senator addressed a request to me?

Mr. OWEN. I asked for explanation of the method of keeping a record of the transactions of the General Staff—what their system was.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The suggestion was made here yesterday by the Senator from Oklahoma that a part of the General Staff, or a member of the General Staff, might take certain action or make certain recommendations, and that it was treated as the action of the General Staff.

Mr. OWEN. I think the Senator did not quite understand the suggestion that I did make. I made inquiry of him with regard to the keeping of records by the General Staff so as to make available a knowledge as to who was responsible for the action of the General Staff or the action called the action of the General Staff. I thought that ought to be made a matter of record.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I rather thought the implication from the question of the Senator was that they acted without having any record or without acting as a body but as an individual member of the General Staff, and, inasmuch as no record was kept, you could not tell by whom the action was had. I took it up with the Secretary of War, because I had assumed that whatever went forth as the action of the General Staff was in fact its action and that there was a record kept in the matter. In answer to my request the Secretary of War writes me the following letter, which I request the Secretary to read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 10, 1917.

Hon. G. E. CHAMBERLAIN,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: With reference to your telephonic inquiry relative to remarks made by Senator OWEN on the floor of the Senate yesterday, I beg to inform you that instructions to the Chief, War College Division, General Staff, where important matters relative to policy and legislation are considered, are that the memorandum, or the duplicate copies of the memorandum, have attached to them a sheet showing the views of the officers of the General Staff on duty at the War College.

Of course, the Secretary of War may have views different from the views expressed in the report, and occasionally changes in some particulars of the report of the General Staff may be made by him before action is taken thereon.

Very sincerely,
NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is the answer to the Senator's request for information.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the point that I wish to make is with regard to the administration of military affairs by the General Staff. I make no point as to the value, of course, of their recommendations, but when their recommendations are made they should be made upon the responsibility of individuals, and it ought to be possible at any time to locate the responsibility of advice given by members of the General Staff to the Secretary of War and to the Congress of the United States.

I wish to ask that an amendment be added to this section to this effect:

That the action of the General Staff shall be made a matter of record and constitute a public record available at any time upon the request of either branch of Congress.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Ordinarily I would not object to requiring anybody acting officially to keep a record of their proceedings, and I have no objection to the amendment offered by the Senator particularly, because I assume it is what has always been done, except to this feature of it. I do not think it ought to be accessible to the public, because sometimes very delicate questions come before the General Staff. Questions of very great delicacy come before them now, and I can conceive of some cases where it might not be safe to keep any sort of record at all. I am willing, however, that this amendment shall be adopted, if the Senator will limit it so that it will not be available to the public. If it is published it might as well be published to the world, and that might be a dangerous proceeding.

Mr. OWEN. It is to be made available only to either House of Congress.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is not the way I read it.

Mr. OWEN. That is the way I dictated it.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator said that in his amendment, but even if it were available to both branches, if it comes to the House or Senate upon a request of the House or Senate, it is always printed unless it is referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and then it would be open to the public in that way. I think it ought to be guarded, as the Senator from Oregon suggests.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is the only suggestion I make about it. If it is guarded sufficiently so as not to publish to the world what the War Department is doing I have no objection in the world to the amendment.

Mr. OWEN. No; I do not wish to make it a public record in the sense that it will be available to the world. I want to make it so that the General Staff can not take action without personal responsibility. That is what I want. I do not want the General Staff to pass proposals down or advising the Congress of the United States and make it impossible for us to know who are the individuals advising us under the mysterious term "General Staff."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am in accord with the Senator's views on that proposition, but I want the amendment limited so that delicate propositions which come before the War Department may not be made public.

Mr. OWEN. I will agree to that. I am only asking that this amendment be added:

The action of the General Staff shall be made a matter of record available in cases of need.

It can be drawn with greater care when the matter goes to conference. I do not wish to stipulate the exact words at this time, because it is difficult to meet all the niceties that are necessary.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection to an amendment along that line.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I have objection to the amendment. I can not imagine a single reason why any such record should be kept. The consideration which the General Staff gives to general questions is a matter which should be kept in confidence. Why the personal opinion of any man on the staff should be exploited, even if the conclusion of the staff happens to be wrong, or he is wrong and the staff happens to be right, is something that I can not comprehend at all. The conclusion the staff would come to would be a general verdict similar to a conclusion which would be reached by a jury. It might not quite accord with the opinion of any one of the men on the staff, but it would practically cover the general judgment of the staff.

If there is any reason why this should be done, I would be willing to withdraw my objection, but I have not heard a single reason given.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the reason which I assigned the Senator perhaps did not hear, but when you have the Congress of the United States and the Secretary of War advised by the General Staff, and even the Secretary does not know what individual upon the staff is giving that advice, you have a certain irresponsibility attending the advice which is exactly like any other star-chamber proceeding, where you can not fix individual liability for a bad piece of advice. In military affairs there is a tendency to be somewhat willful with regard to the attitude taken by men in public affairs. It is that kind of thing in Europe which has led to such mischief there. It was the advice of the military forces of Prussia that brought about this war and forced the war upon Europe. Nobody knows to-day who were the individuals who forced the sword into Wilhelm's hand. I want to know——

Mr. WEEKS. I do not think you can compare our General Staff operations with the militarism which obtains in Prussia. As I have stated, the judgment which is reached by the General Staff is made up after discussion, and I object to the reflection on the officers of the General Staff which the Senator makes that they are willful in their relations to the public; that they would willfully or otherwise, if they knew it, give the Secretary of War or the President advice which they did not think was based on good military proceeding.

I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator from Massachusetts is not justified in imputing to the Senator from Oklahoma any reflection upon the present members of the War College, with whom he has no acquaintance whatever.

Mr. WEEKS. I did not mean to say the present members of the War College, but on the general make-up of the War College and a General Staff that they were inclined to be willful in the advice that they gave. I do not care whether it means those at present in the War College or on the General Staff or those there at some other time.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I am rather in sympathy with the suggestion of the Senator from Oklahoma provided it is safeguarded. I think myself these men ought not to be permitted to sit there as autocrats and determine a thing, and nobody, even an officer who might be vitally interested, have an opportunity to ascertain the motives of the men. I suggest that the amendment take this form, and this is my own individual proposition, not the action of the committee. However, I will say that it reads as follows:

That the action of the General Staff shall be made a matter of record available at any time upon the request of either branch of Congress, when, in the opinion of the President, a compliance with such a request will not be detrimental to the public interest.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. "If it is not incompatible with the public interest."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes; "if not incompatible with the public interest."

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the chairman of the committee if it is not a fact that every order issued by the General Staff and every command of the Army is a matter of record? I do not see how any order of the General Staff could possibly be executed if it were not a matter of record.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I had always assumed, until this question was raised yesterday by the Senator from Oklahoma, that it was a matter of record.

Mr. VARDAMAN. As a matter of fact, it is a matter of record. It is a matter of record or it could never take form, which, of course, is the necessary prerequisite to the execution of it.

Mr. OWEN. The record which is intended to be found here is a record showing how these gentlemen vote upon the question.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It would be rather difficult to prescribe a general rule for that. The orders issued by the General Staff are usually, I imagine, but the consensus of opinion formed after considering the question at issue. I can not understand how any good can possibly result from the adoption of the amendment in its present form. I would support a rule or a statute requiring that, when the General Staff gave advice to Congress or a bill came before the Congress the product of the General Staff, it be branded with the authorship so that the public might know where it came from and the motives or influences behind it.

It is my deliberate judgment that this country is threatened with militarism which will be as offensive as that which cursed the German Empire and finally disturbed the peace of the world, and unless the American people are very careful and hold themselves in due bounds it will require a quarter of a century after this war is over to bring us back to the old and better ways. The purpose of the amendment I most heartily approve, but in its present form I am afraid it will not accomplish its purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma withdraw his amendment?

Mr. OWEN. Yes; upon the substitution of that framed by the chairman of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is upon the amendment offered by the chairman of the committee to the amendment.

On a division, the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the committee amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as I recall the act of June 3, 1916, and this proposed amendment is an amendment to that act, it provides that the General Staff shall consist of 50, divided in the same classes as this proposed amendment divides it. If the amendment is adopted, the General Staff would consist of 91 officers instead of 50 officers. The increase begins with colonels, lieutenant colonels, majors, and captains. The largest part of the increase, however, is with the majors and captains. I suppose that under present conditions it is necessary that the General Staff should be increased in number. I understand that the general staff of France is over 200; that in England it is even more than that. Of course, we in the past have had a smaller general staff than any other second-rate military power. I can not see any objection at all to the increase of officers in the General Staff, particularly at this time.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Under the law as it is now there are 55 members of the General Staff and the proposed amendment increases the number to 91.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought the number was 50.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is 55. When all the increments are added to the Army, I think myself the number should be increased.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I hesitate to even make an inquiry with reference to this section, because I have been a member of the committee so short a time I have not had an opportunity to familiarize myself with this subject matter of the bill.

I wish to ask the chairman of the committee if this is not the first time it is proposed to give the Chief of Staff precedence over all other officers of the Army?

Mr. WARREN. By the original law it is provided that, while serving as Chief of Staff, although the officer may be a brigadier, he must be a general officer chosen by the President, and while so serving he shall be in command over all the troops and departments of the Army.

Mr. REED. Where does the Senator find that in the bill or in the amendment?

Mr. WARREN. It is in the old law, back some years ago, I should say 15 or 20 years perhaps, but I recall it very well.

Mr. REED. I notice the language of the proposed amendment on page 23 is as follows:

Provided, That the first paragraph of section 5 of the national-defense act approved June 3, 1916, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. The General Staff Corps.—The General Staff Corps shall consist of one Chief of Staff, who shall be a general officer of the line and who shall take rank and precedence over all other officers of the Army."

Now, referring to the section which is amended, to wit, section 5 of the act of June 3, 1916, I find the language to be as follows:

The General Staff Corps shall consist of 1 Chief of Staff, detailed in time of peace from major generals of the line; 2 assistants to the Chief of Staff, who shall be general officers of the line, 1 of whom, not above the grade of brigadier general, shall be the president of the Army War College—

And so forth. I do not find in that any language, although it may be there—my examination has been very hasty——

Mr. WARREN. The Senator will notice it does not repeal the former statute. The former statute provides specifically. In the amendment proposed here they have undertaken to incorporate and reenact in a degree the old original law.

Mr. REED. Without an examination of the other section of the law, of course I can not speak advisedly. I am talking admittedly as one who is not posted. Therefore it may be said I ought to be silent. Nevertheless I have great curiosity about this particular section.

The provision of the bill further is that after an officer of the General Staff has served four years, then he shall be ineligible until he has served, I believe it is two years, in the line. So it seems if this section is adopted, no matter who may be the highest officer in the Army, he would at once be displaced by the man appointed Chief of Staff, and even if the highest and best officer in the Army were appointed Chief of Staff he would at the end of this period of time—four years—be relegated to a subordinate position. You could not keep at the head of your Army for more than four years at a time a man who might be the military genius of the Army.

I may be in error about all this, but I want to know about it. It strikes me that there it makes a radical change in the law, and some one on the committee older in service than myself ought to be able to throw some light on the subject.

Mr. FLETCHER. Let me suggest to the Senator that I think he is correct in the general statement, but I gather that there is an exception in the case of actual or threatened hostilities. I suppose in such a contingency he would not have to serve two years in the line. It seems that that is an exception from the rule.

Mr. REED. Very well, there would be an exception then in time of war or threatened war. Nevertheless it might be highly important to retain at the head of the Army a particular man.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I assume the last remark made by the Senator from Missouri he meant to apply to times of peace?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. To counterbalance that argument, let me suggest that it is equally important to give some general officer, possibly in time of peace, the experience of being Chief of Staff instead of selecting one particular general officer to be Chief of Staff. The theory that he is the most efficient officer in the Army keeps him there permanently. It is better for the service and its future that there should be rotation in that office within reasonable limits.

Mr. REED. What the Senator states has merit in it, of course. Why is it necessary that the man who is Chief of Staff shall outrank and shall take precedence over every other officer in the Army? Why is it not possible to have a Chief of Staff, as I think we have had heretofore, and still have an officer who may be the ranking officer of the Army? There is so much of this that is technical no man can understand unless he has given a thorough study to the subject; it makes me hesitate.

I think that this is a change in the law. I think that the Chief of Staff in the past has not necessarily outranked every other officer in the Army.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator remembers that in former times there was a commanding general of the Army and that commanding general commanded all the troops of the Army in whatever line they were. There was some friction oftentimes between the President of the United States, who is Commander in Chief of the Army and who has a tenure of office of four years, and the major general, who is appointed for life and will draw salary, active or retired, unless he resigns or is court-martialed. So, in 1903, when this idea of a staff, as in other countries, was adopted it was provided that the President as Commander in Chief of the Army, which he is under the Constitution, should select a general officer. It was purposely put so that he could select a general officer of whatever rank he might choose—general, lieutenant general, major general, or brigadier general. It is stated that he should have command of all the troops, and so forth.

Now, he is next to the President. The orders go through him to the Army. At this moment, I do not remember the officer who was the first Chief of Staff; but I recall, and the Senator doubtless does, that Gen. Bell was made Chief of Staff when he was a brigadier general. Of course it caused some friction, because The Adjutant General was then a major general, but nevertheless matters proceeded in that way, and the orders of the Chief of Staff went out to major generals and all the others alike, and it has been sustained that way ever since, although of late years the Chief of Staff has been a major general, and in the defense act we provided that he should be a major general, so that at present he must be a major general, and that major general must have under him the command of all the troops, dating back of course to the first organization and the first legislation concerning it.

Mr. REED. But the provision that is now made is that he shall be a major general.

Mr. WARREN. That is already the statute.

Mr. REED. But this changes it, the Senator will notice. I may be in error, I say again, but I think I am not. Let me read, beginning at line——

Mr. WARREN. Of course in time of war it does not matter, but before the Senator reads from the law to-day as it is——

Mr. REED. But I am speaking about the change.

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. REED. Section 5 is to be amended to read as follows. Therefore section 5 as amended will be the controlling law. What is in the old section which we propose to wipe out and change is immaterial. Here is section 5 as it is proposed:

The General Staff Corps shall consist of one Chief of Staff, who shall be a general officer of the line.

It does not say he shall be a major general.

Mr. WARREN. I was speaking of the latter enactment of the national-defense act.

Mr. REED. Yes; but this changes that.

Mr. WARREN. It puts it back where it was before, according to the law of 1903.

Mr. REED. How low in point of rank can an officer be to be appointed Chief of Staff under this proposed act?

Mr. WARREN. He must be a general officer, which means a brigadier or higher.

Mr. REED. Exactly; but a brigadier general now can be taken by the President under this act, if it is passed, and he can be put in as Chief of Staff, and thereupon outrank every other officer of the Army.

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. REED. Then, if it be discovered that he is a military genius of the world, at the end of four years' time he must go out of that position; he must be succeeded by a man of inferior ability; and he can not again fill the position for two years, except there be actual or threatened war.

Mr. WARREN. That is true, except that in time of war, of course, the President can reappoint him. Let us give the Senator one of the reasons for that. This reason was that there had been complaint from time to time—and we hear it once in a while on this floor, but I do not credit it—that there is a little coterie in the headquarters that exercises favoritism in the appointments to these favorite places. With the great power which the Chief of Staff has it was thought best to curb it that much.

Then, again, the Chief of Staff is supposed to be next to and the definite choice of the President. The President's term is four years; and so when a new President is inaugurated he either expects the resignation of the officer who is Chief of Staff when his time expires and to appoint another or he asks that officer to step aside and appoints one of his own choice.

Mr. REED. Now, the Senator states that this is intended to prevent favoritism; yet before he concludes his statement he says that it makes it possible for the President, when he comes into office, to change the Chief of Staff, and it also makes it possible for him to reach down the line and to pick up a brigadier general and put him over the heads of those who have served much longer.

Mr. WARREN. It does.

Mr. REED. That makes for favoritism; that places it in the power of the President "to play favorites."

Mr. WARREN. It does.

Mr. REED. I am curious to know——

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. Just one moment. I am curious to know how anything in this bill will stop the favoritism which the Senator from Wyoming states exists in the Army.

Mr. WARREN. I am only alluding to one of the minor things which it was thought best to consider; but, aside from what I have said, the idea was to repose confidence in the President, whoever he may be. He is the Commander in Chief of the Army under the Constitution. We can not change that. The idea was not to cripple him by placing a man next to him, as has been the case, or at least it was so reported, where they were at variance and at loggerheads from the first. It was designed to give the President a general officer of his own choice; and if he found a brigadier who had lived up to the splendid "brigadier" indorsement that we have had here from the Senator from Minnesota and the Senator from Georgia, he could take a brigadier.

There is, however, another thing more important than all that. The man who is appointed to be Chief of Staff should, before he becomes so, have been a man of field service, of war as well as of the swivel chair. It was thought that the knowledge which comes to such an officer in the four years during which he is Chief of Staff would be important to the Army in the field where he would go at the end of the time.

Mr. REED. Of course, if the President would always pick the brigadier or some other officer of superior talent and ability and experience, the whole question would be answered; always we would get the best.

Mr. WARREN. We shall have to trust the President in any event.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. REED. I shall yield in one moment. Is there, however, anything in the experience of the past to warrant us in believing that always the best is to be picked? That has not been my observation, but, on the contrary, it has been that mere favorites have been put in office under more than one administration.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. REED. The Senator from Massachusetts had first asked me to yield.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Very well.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that the very duties performed by the Chief of the General Staff should make him the ranking officer of the Army. I am quite in accord with the Senator from Missouri in his conclusion about the possibility of favoritism; but this appointment is temporary. It has to do personally and directly with the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. It is not different from the practice in the Navy Department. The Chief of the Bureau of Navigation under the law is the ranking officer in the Navy Department. He serves, under the law, when the Secretary of the Navy and the Assistant Secretary of the Navy are absent, as the Secretary of the Navy.

It has become the practice in recent years to appoint an officer of rather minor rank to that place. I do not think it is right. It was intended that the officer filling that place should be one who had long experience in the Navy, and that he should have demonstrated in his experience that he had superior capacity in many directions. As a matter of fact, the present Chief of the Bureau of Navigation is a commander in lineal rank, and yet he is a rear admiral temporarily and is the senior officer for the time being in the Navy Department. There is a particular reason why that should be so, because he has the detailing of all officers in the Navy, as, in a general way, the Chief of the General Staff has in the War Department.

Moreover there was at one time a great deal of friction in the War Department between the Chief of the General Staff and The Adjutant General of the Army. It had to be determined by Congress which one should have the superior rank. It was determined that it was desirable, taking everything into consideration, that the Chief of the General Staff should take precedence over all other officers.

If I had it to do, Mr. President, I should certainly not appoint an officer as Chief of the General Staff or Chief of the Bureau of Navigation who had not demonstrated by his service that he was fit to occupy the place at the head of the Army or of the Navy, as the case might be.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, just a word, if the Senator from Missouri will permit me. The Chief of Staff has always had precedence of the other officers of the Army and, possibly, without any express statute. If the Senator will examine the act of 1903, he will see that it provided that—

> The Chief of Staff, under the direction of the President or of the Secretary of War, under the direction of the President, shall have supervision of all troops of the line and of The Adjutant General's, Inspector General's, Judge Advocate's, Quartermaster's, Subsistence, Medical, Pay and Ordnance Departments, the Corps of Engineers, and the Signal Corps, and shall perform such other military duties not otherwise assigned by law as may be assigned to him by the President.

Under that provision of the act of 1903 he had precedence possibly over a major general commanding troops of the line. While I do not see any reason for inserting by way of amendment the particular language to which the Senator calls attention, yet it leaves that officer in practically the same position which he has occupied ever since the office of Chief of Staff has been created.

Mr. REED. I do not think that the language which the Senator from Oregon has just read would be held to be applicable after the passage of the act of June 3, 1916, because that purports to be a complete act within itself. It proceeds to define the entire composition of the Army. However that may be, I want to ask the Senator one question, Who prepared this amendment?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The amendment came here from the War Department, I will say to the Senator from Missouri, and was inserted at the request of the department. The Secretary of War recommended it, and I presume he had some particular reason for doing so. It does increase the General Staff. That is the main reason for it, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. REED. I have no objection to the increasing of the General Staff.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I ask the chairman of the committee whether this recommendation came from the War Department before or since the arrival of the present emergency?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The recommendation came before war was declared, because this bill is exactly as it was reported to the Senate at the last session of Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is, on page 26, after line 16, under the head of "Retired officers," where the committee proposes to insert the following:

> Provided further, That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized to appoint Brig. Gen. Chambers McKibbin, of the United States Army, retired, to the position and rank of major general on the retired list.

Mr. REED and Mr. KNOX addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. I understood that it was agreed, as to the amendment on page 26, beginning in line 23 and going down to line 6 on page 27—if the Senator from Pennsylvania will pardon me, merely to clear the matter up—that the name of the beneficiary was to be inserted, instead of the general language of the amendment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I shall be glad to have that done, I will say to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Then I ask that that amendment be made and that the descriptive language be stricken out.

Mr. FLETCHER. Suppose we make the amendment read in this way:

> Provided further, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to advance to the grade of major general, United States Army, retired, Brig. Gen. J. W. Scully, of the United States Army, retired.

Mr. POMERENE. And to strike out the remainder of the amendment.

Mr. REED. That would be satisfactory to me.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Very well.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I stated on yesterday that I would oppose this amendment unless there was a special reason assigned showing that there was some necessity for the increased salary. It has been represented to me since that time that Gen. Scully is an invalid; that he requires the attendance of a man practically all of the time; that members of his family are dependent or afflicted; and that there is a real necessity for an increase of pay; also that he is a man of great age; that probably he will live only a short time; and that he has won by his past service, I will not say a right to promotion, but a strong claim to the consideration of the country. Therefore, Mr. President, I will withdraw my opposition to the amendment.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, it was the courtesy of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] in withholding his point of order yesterday that gave me the opportunity of looking into the question of the merits of the amendment promoting Gen. McKibbin from the rank of brigadier general to that of major general. I have discovered some rather interesting data upon that subject which I think it is right for me to present to the Senate in the hope that there will be a vote upon this amendment upon its merits.

Gen. McKibbin, I find, belonged to one of those remarkable families found on both sides of the deplorable conflict between the States that distinguished themselves far beyond that which was given to many families to do. It was a family that showed their faith by their zeal, and their zeal was manifested in the character and the extent of their service. Gen. McKibbin was a member of a family of 13 children, 5 of whom were adults at the time of the breaking out of the war, and 5 of whom entered the service, where they remained until its conclusion. Two of them lie buried in Arlington—David McKibbin, who was a gallant Cavalry officer, and his brother, Joseph C. McKibbin, who for distinguished service was brevetted as a brigadier general.

I am told that there never was a time from Bull Run to Appomattox when the women of the McKibbin family were not nursing one of those men who were wounded in the service. They were all wounded, and severely wounded, and Gen. Chambers McKibbin, the proposed beneficiary of this amendment, is now in a condition of semiparalysis. He is confined to sitting in his chair, and his articulation is almost destroyed, all of which is the result of these wounds.

Mr. WARREN. What is his age?

Mr. KNOX. His age is 77 years, as I was told by his daughter this morning. They have no means except the general's pay. He has a wife and daughter to support, and I am informed that no member of his family has, either directly or indirectly, solicited this assistance from Congress, but it has been the result of the friendship of his fellow officers, who tell me that what it will do for him is this: It will enable him to have a special attendant, which he sadly needs in his affliction.

These, Mr. President, are the facts which I have gathered, and I present them to the Senate because I am satisfied that they are true.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, I am very glad indeed that the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] has spoken a word in favor of the amendment granting increased rank to Gen. Chambers McKibbin. He was a deserving officer in every way and should receive the reward. I desire especially at this time to call attention to the amendment promoting Gen. J. W. Scully, a very distinguished officer, to the grade of major general on the retired list. I hope the Senate will make a matter of record the tribute that we desire to pay to him at this time. I have before me a synopsis of the military history of Gen. Scully. I will not take the time of the Senate to read it, but I ask that it be inserted in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SYNOPSIS OF THE MILITARY HISTORY OF BRIG. GEN. J. W. SCULLY, UNITED STATES ARMY, RETIRED.

Gen. Scully entered the United States Army when a boy of 18, and served as an enlisted soldier from September, 1856, to September, 1861, in Light Battery K, First United States Artillery, and was gunner of one of the pieces that fired the salute at the inauguration of President Buchanan. He served on the Rio Grande (Tex.) frontier, fighting Comanche Indians and Mexican bandits.

In 1859 Sergt. Scully was detailed, with 20 soldiers of his battery, to accompany Capt. Burleson, of the Texas Rangers (father of the present Postmaster General), in pursuit of a band of Indians who ran off 150 head of horses from the Nueces River. This command started from Fort Clark, Tex., following the trail in the direction of the Devils River for seven days, when their water supply became exhausted. The Indians had driven their horses through the water holes, thereby rendering them unfit for use; so a retreat was ordered, and after two days' march the men were unable to proceed farther and laid down to perish. Sergt. Scully took the two strongest men of his detachment—Privates Barrett and Eby—gathered up all the canteens, and started for the Devils River. They rode all night, reaching a branch of that stream at daybreak. They filled the canteens, and after resting an hour started back and reached the command at noon, just in time to save the lives of 60 men. This should be found in the records of Battery K, First Artillery.

Sergt. Scully was honorably discharged from the United States Army on account of expiration of term of enlistment, at Key West, Fla., September 20, 1861, and immediately accompanied Capt. Alan C. Gillem, acting quartermaster, as clerk, and reported to Gen. George H. Thomas at Somerset, Ky., and, on account of his military experience, was used by that general as aid-de-camp in the campaign that terminated with the battle of Mill Spring, Ky.; was honorably mentioned by Gen. Thomas and afterwards given the brevet of major in the Army for his conduct in that battle. Mr. Scully also served in the same capacity for Gen. D. C. Buell in the Battle of Shiloh and received the brevet of lieutenant colonel, United States Army, for same. He also received the brevet of colonel, United States Army, for gallant and meritorious services in the Battle of Nashville.

On the 14th of July, 1862, Mr. Scully was appointed a first lieutenant in the First Middle Tennessee Infantry Volunteers (afterwards changed to Tenth). He was promoted to lieutenant colonel of same regiment August 21, 1863, and to colonel June 6, 1864, and was honorably mustered out with his regiment on May 25, 1865.

In October, 1863, Gen. Scully, then lieutenant colonel of the First Middle Tennessee Infantry, commanded his own regiment and parts of three Cavalry regiments (virtually a brigade) and defeated the Confederate Gen. W. S. Hawkins at Centerville, Hickman County, Tenn. (See series 1, p. 92, Vol. XXXI, Pt. II, Rebellion Records.)

Gen. Scully was appointed captain in the Quartermaster's Department on the 25th of September, 1865, and served at Natches and Vicksburg, Miss., on "reconstruction" duty and adjusting claims of citizens for cotton and other property taken or destroyed by the Army.

In 1868–1871 he rebuilt Ringgold Barracks, Tex.

In 1872 Gen. Scully, as quartemaster, selected the terminus of the Northern Pacific Railroad, with a view to the supplying of the military posts on the Upper Missouri, thereby establishing the site of the city of Bismarck, N. Dak. He also fitted out part of the "Custer expedition."

In 1880–1882 Gen. Scully built the post of Fort Thomas, on the Gila River, near the San Carlos Indian Agency, Arizona Territory. While on this duty, the Chiricahua Indians, under their chiefs Loco, Ju, and Geronimo left the reservation, killed the chief of police, Sterling, and raided several ranches, killing women and children. Col. Scully armed the ranchers and the civilians at and in the vicinity of the post, and held off the hostiles for several days, until succor arrived from other posts. For this he was highly praised by the press and by the people of the Territory of Arizona.

On account of Col. Scully's immunity from yellow fever he made two tours of duty at New Orleans, La.; and for the War with Spain he there fitted out Gen. Shafter's expedition. He chartered all the ships, and made them fit for the accommodation of troops. For this he was thanked and highly complimented by the Quartermaster General of the Army.

On the 1st day of November, 1900, Gen. Scully was retired from active service, and had up to that date, served altogether 42 years, 11 months, and 16 days. This does not include the Mill Spring or Shiloh Campaigns, which were recognized and for which he received brevets.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, in addition to the synopsis of the military career of Gen. Scully, I desire to say that he is now, as I understand, 80 years of age, 61 years of which have been spent in the service of the United States Army. He carries scars on his body received in battle during the Civil War and for over 30 years has not been able to use his right hand on account of rheumatism due to exposure during actual service on the frontier. At present he requires the constant services of an attendant on account of physical weakness.

Gen. Scully has dependent upon him an invalid wife, two daughters, and four grandchildren, the oldest of whom is 12 and the youngest 6. He is not a man of any means, and after all these years of faithful service is entirely dependent upon his salary for the support of himself and those dependent upon him.

It seems to me that after serving 61 years in the Army he is entitled to this special recognition. In the early days, before the Civil War, in 1859, he was engaged in fighting the Indians. There has never been a time when his country has called that he has not answered that call, and now in his declining years it is only right and proper that we should pay him this tribute. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to amendment on page 26, beginning in line 17 and ending in line 21.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is, on page 26, after line 21, to insert:

Provided further, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to advance to the grade of major general, United States Army, retired, any brigadier general on the retired list who served in the United States Army not less than five years prior to October 1, 1861; who commanded not less than a regiment in the Civil War; who served on the active list of the Army after the Civil War and during the War with Spain not less than 35 years; and who attained the grade of not less than colonel in the United States Army before retirement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment to that amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the amendment proposed by the committee it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided further, That the President be, and he hereby is, authorized to appoint Brig. Gen. J. W. Scully, United States Army, retired, to the position and rank of major general on the retired list.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the next committee amendment passed over.

The SECRETARY. On page 27, after line 6, the committee proposed to insert the following:

Provided further, That hereafter any retired officer of the Army who has been detailed to active duty, and who has, since his retirement, served an active detail shall be entitled to increases of longevity pay, to be computed as provided by existing statute for the computation of longevity pay, for the time of his service before retirement and on active detail since his retirement.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next committee amendment passed over was, on page 29, after line 16, to insert:

Provided, That the amount appropriated for mileage to commissioned officers, contract surgeons, and expert accountant, Inspector General's Department, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, shall be available for the payment of the mileage of Army field clerks, and field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, when authorized by law.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, in this connection, I promised to get for the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] a statement from the War Department, and I desire to have inserted in the RECORD, in connection with that amendment, that portion of Secretary Baker's letter which refers to mileage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

MILEAGE.

1. During the fiscal year 1916 no officer of the Army received as mileage an amount equal to his pay.

2. Following is a statement showing the officers who received the greatest amount for mileage as compared with their pay:

Officer.	Service.	Pay.	Mileage.
Maj. Gen. Leonard Wood	Department commander	$8,000	$1,291.09
Col. J. L. Chamberlain	Department inspector	5,000	1,425.66
Col. T. Q. Donaldson	do	5,000	1,370.17
Col. G. K. Hunter	do	5,000	1,294.78
Col. O. B. Mitcham	Ordnance Department	5,000	645.09
Maj. J. F. Brady	Department inspector	4,000	1,093.17
Maj. A. M. Davis	Quartermaster Corps	4,000	494.22
Maj. C. E. Hawkins	do	3,360	2,833.35
Capt. B. F. Browne	do	3,120	994.66
Capt. J. M. Burroughs	do	3,120	653.10
Capt. H. Dorey	Aid-de-camp	3,360	184.50
Capt. G. V. Heidt	Recruiting officer	2,880	1,102.72
Capt. H. L. Jackson	do	3,360	895.79
Capt. J. N. Munro	Quartermaster Corps	3,360	792.53
Lieut. G. V. Heidt	Recruiting officer	2,600	670.17
Lieut. C. T. Smart	do	3,120	1,354.36
Lieut. R. J. West	do	2,600	1,531.04

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next committee amendment passed over was, on page 102, after line 10, to strike out:

Provided further, That the following language of section 5 of the act of June 3, 1916, entitled, "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," to wit: "Not more than one-half of all of the officers detailed in said corps shall at any time be stationed, or assigned to or employed upon any duty, in or near the District of Columbia," be amended so as to authorize the President to suspend the operation of the same in the event of actual or threatened war or other emergency in which the public safety demands it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the former portion of that provision went out on a point of order, I think this amendment of the committee, striking out that portion of the bill, ought to be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That completes the amendments of the committee.

Mr. REED and Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk and call the attention of the chairman of the committee to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 16, line 17, after the sum "$2,153,373.91," it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That the first part of the second paragraph of section 24 of the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, down to the first proviso in said paragraph, be, and the same is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Vacancies in the grade of second lieutenant created or caused by the increases due to this act, in any fiscal year shall be filled by appointment in the following order: (1) Of cadets graduated from the United States Military Academy during the preceding fiscal year for whom vacancies did not become available during the fiscal year in which they graduated; (2) under the provisions of existing law of enlisted men, including officers of Philippine Scouts, whose fitness for promotion shall have been determined by competitive examination; and of members, including officers, of the Organized Militia, the National Guard, or Naval Militia, between the ages of 21 and 30 years who have had at least 90 days actual Federal military service under any call of the President during the calendar year 1916, and whose fitness for promotion shall have been determined by examination; (3) of members of the Officers' Reserve Corps between the ages of 21 and 27 years, of distinguished colleges as are now or may hereafter be entitled to preference by general orders of the War Department; and (6) of candidates from civil life between the ages of 21 and 27 years; and the President is authorized to make the necessary rules and regulations to carry these provisions into effect."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the only purpose of that amendment is to raise the age limit from 27 years to 30 years of age of young men who served on the Mexican border for 90 days. That is the only difference.

Mr. WARREN. Does it change the arrangement otherwise?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It does not change the arrangement. That is the only purpose of the amendment, and I have no objection to it.

Mr. SMOOT. It allows commissions in the Army to be given to men who served on the Mexican border up to the age of 30 years, instead of 27 years, as now provided.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes; after examination, of course.

Mr. SMOOT. How long will that last? Is it a temporary provision, or will that be regulated hereafter by law?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It applies only to those who served 90 days on the Mexican border; that is all; but it will apply to any of them.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know but that the same provision ought to apply for at least a month or two generally, because I know there are now a great many officers whose services the Government of the United States ought to have who have passed the age of 27, or who are between the ages of 27 and 30 years.

Mr. REED. Let that come up in the next bill.

Mr. SMOOT. That will be perfectly satisfactory.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. I offer the amendment which I will ask the Secretary to read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. In line 6, page 87, it is proposed to insert, after the word "fund," the following words:

Provided, That the National Guard of any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia shall include such officers and enlisted men of the staff corps and departments corresponding to those of the Regular Army as may be authorized by the Secretary of War.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is to meet a decision of the Judge Advocate General, rendered a day or two ago, in which he held that section 60 of the national-defense act did not include such staff corps.

Section 60, providing for the organization of the National Guard units, reads as follows:

SEC. 60. Organization of National Guard units: Except as otherwise specifically provided herein, the organization of the National Guard, including the composition of all units thereof, shall be the same as that which is or may hereafter be prescribed for the Regular Army, subject in time of peace to such general exceptions as may be authorized by the Secretary of War. And the President may prescribe the particular unit or units, as to branch or arm of service, to be maintained in each State, Territory, or the District of Columbia in order to secure a force which, when combined, shall form complete higher tactical units.

Under that authority the War Department sent out the following order on December 11, 1916:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
MILITIA BUREAU,
Washington, December 11, 1916.

From: The Chief, Militia Bureau.
To: The adjutants general of all States, the Territory of Hawaii, and the District of Columbia Militia.
Subject: State administrative staffs.

1. Under section 60 of the act of Congress approved June 3, 1916, the Secretary of War prescribes, for State administrative purposes in time of peace, the officers and enlisted men set forth in tables herewith; and the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia are authorized to maintain such staffs for administration and supply, conforming in respect to administrative functions with corresponding corps and departments in the Regular Army.

2. The officers and enlisted men of the administrative staff of a State are in addition to the officers and enlisted men of the staffs of higher tactical units to be hereafter authorized and are designed for the following purposes:

(a) To provide officers and enlisted men for administrative, sanitary, supply, and property purposes for the National Guard not in Federal service before and after the tactical organizations have been completed, except when higher tactical units comprising staffs for administration and supply are mobilized.

(b) To provide administrative, sanitary, and supply personnel for mobilization and recruiting purposes for the National Guard in Federal service.

(c) To provide administrative, sanitary, and supply personnel for camps of instruction held under section 94 of the act of Congress approved June 3, 1916, except when such camps are of a complete higher tactical unit comprising a staff for administration and supply.

(d) For training National Guard officers in time of peace in duties of administration and supply and sanitation.

3. The designations of the senior officers of the several corps and departments shall correspond to those of the senior staff officers of a territorial department of the Regular Army, as follows:

Adjutant, inspector, judge advocate, quartermaster, surgeon. Officers junior in rank, serving in the same corps or department, may be designated as assistants. Engineer and signal officers for State administrative staffs are not authorized except in States where tactical organizations of not less than one battalion of signal or engineer troops are maintained as part of the National Guard, and the engineer and signal officer shall be detailed to the State administrative staff from line organizations of the Engineer and Signal Corps.

4. Officers or enlisted men of the staff, not included in tables herewith and not recognized by the War Department as pertaining to the staff of tactical organizations, are not considered to be members of the National Guard within the meaning of the law.

5. Officers on the staff of the governor, not detailed from National Guard staffs or organizations, are not considered as part of the National Guard under the act of Congress approved June 3, 1916.

6. The foregoing provisions become effective at once, and are promulgated for the information of all concerned. Federal funds will not be expended for pay and transportation or Federal property used for any officer not assigned to a National Guard organization or authorized in this circular.

By direction of the Secretary of War:

WM. A. MANN,
Brigadier General, General Staff.

Under those orders these staff corps were organized in the various States, and they have charge of the property, for instance, of the Government that is sent to each State, and they receipt for it. If they are abolished—as they are abolished by the holding of the Judge Advocate General—the result is that you have got to detail officers of the line to take charge of this business, and it will wholly disrupt the business of the National Guard, especially in the management of its property and from all standpoints.

I call attention to the opinion of the Judge Advocate General that has just been issued:

For the reasons stated in this paper it seems clear that the administrative staff officers authorized by the circular letter which is the subject of this memorandum, in so far as their relations to the General Government are concerned, are in the same status as adjutants general of the various States, etc.; that is, that they are designed for the administrative functions of the State, and do not constitute a part of the National Guard as authorized by the national-defense act.

The purpose of this amendment, Mr. President, is to change the law so as to conform to that opinion of the Judge Advocate General. I have spoken to the chairman of the committee, and I do not believe that he has any opposition to it, as I understood him; and I ask for a vote on it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 84, after line 21, it is proposed to insert the following words:

For the acquisition, by purchase or by condemnation of tracts of land known as Great Piece Meadows and other contiguous tracts, containing in all 4,000 acres, more or less, and situated in Essex and Morris Counties, in the State of New Jersey, and within 30 miles of New York City Hall, to provide suitable target-range facilities for instruction in small-arms practice of any branch of the military or naval service of the United States Government, the National Guard, and the able-bodied males capable of bearing arms, and for the construction thereon of target butts, buildings, water-supply and drainage system, and other facilities, for targets and other necessary equipment and the installation of same, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, to be immediately available, and to remain available until expended, $200,000.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is to purchase a certain tract of land in the northern part of New Jersey about 20 miles from New York City. It is peculiarly available for rifle practice and a rifle range. It is desired by numerous of the civilian rifle clubs who have been compelled to practice their marksmanship with the meager facilities that they have had in the various localities.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. There is a provision in the sundry civil bill to purchase some land in New Jersey, I think. Is that the land the Senator is talking about?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not think so. I do not know. This was an amendment to this bill at the last session. It was not acted upon at that time.

This section of land is, as I said before, particularly available for this purpose, because it is a large tract of land and the only tract within this distance from New York, where target practice at determined distances can be held, and also skirmish drills. At the present time there are two regiments of police in New York City that are drilling, and they have no facilities for target practice. The militia of New Jersey, the militia of the lower part of New York State, the civilians who are drilling on the tops of the buildings in New York City, have no opportunities for rifle practice.

Mr. President, in the Spanish-American War, when we sent thousands of soldiers to Cuba and Porto Rico with the Krag-Jörgensen carbine, many of them hardly knew how to handle that rifle, because they had not had the opportunity of being trained in marksmanship. At Camp Alger there were 20,000 troops, I think, and many of those organizations were sent to Porto Rico and Cuba without rifle practice.

This section of land is in the center of a population of over 8,000,000 people, and they desire some facilities of this character in order that they may have the opportunity to train in marksmanship. It is very important as a measure of preparedness at this time that all of these men should have such facilities. There are 6,000 men, I think, in these rifle clubs in New Jersey, and a greater number among those in the lower part of New York without proper facilities for learning how to shoot the modern arm.

Therefore, Mr President, I have introduced this amendment, and I hope that it will receive the favorable consideration of the Senate.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish to direct a question to the chairman of the committee, if he is in the Senate Chamber; or, if not, perhaps the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] can answer the question. I assume that if we are going to have target practice and to have these exercises in every State and many places in the different States provision will have to be made for it.

I have been reading over the bill which was introduced in the House for the organization of the Army of the United States, and I observe that there is a provision in that bill authorizing the Government to take possession of any such lands in the United States as may be necessary for such purposes and to pay as rental therefor what may be fair, reasonable, and just. Now, it seems to me, if we are going to buy every tract where we drill soldiers and where we have target practice that before we get through we will have an enormous expense loaded upon the Government which can just as well be dispensed with, because at the close of the war we probably shall not have any use for those tracts unless they are very close to the forts where we shall keep our Regular Army. It seems to me that before we start in on the proposition of purchasing these tracts we ought to consider a scheme that will provide either for purchasing them outright or for their condemnation and use so long as the Government may need to use them, for a specific period, saving very much to the country and acting, as I understand, in accordance with the bill that has already been introduced and is now under consideration in the House.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, if the Senator will investigate, I think he will find that it is extremely desirable from every standpoint—that of the Government as well as that of the individual—that target practice should be provided for, because my recollection is, while I have not the figures before me, that it is clearly demonstrated that those States that have been providing suitable ranges at convenient places have developed a much greater number of marksmen in proportion to the total number of National Guards than other States; so much greater that there can not be any question about the desirability of providing suitable ranges.

This particular range is located in a section where it would naturally serve eight or ten millions of people, including many men always in the national service—those stationed at Governors Island, in New York, for example, and many others. There may be some question about buying rifle ranges at this time in most parts of the country; but it does not seem to me that there can be any question about the desirability of buying one which is going to serve now and for all time such a very large population.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New Jersey a question as to the amount asked for? I did not happen to catch it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Two hundred thousand dollars. There are 4,000 acres of land. It is 3 miles, I think, in one direction and 2 miles in another, without any intersecting roads. It has as a background a high mountain. It also has land which is available for skirmish drill and mobilization of troops on the outside. This land was inspected by Col. Miller, the director of civilian marksmanship——

Mr. WARREN. I was not asking the question to either oppose or indorse it, but we changed the House language here and increased the $20,000 to $320,000 for this purpose. I assume, however, that this particular ground was probably larger and the amount larger than could reasonably be expected to be included in this appropriation.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not think it is included in that appropriation. May I say, further, that Col. Miller has inspected this tract of land for the War Department and has approved it. He says:

I recommend that the United States acquire title to the land described in paragraph 5 of this report for the purpose of a target range, and that the necessary construction be made thereon.

Maj. Gen. Leonard Wood has also approved it, and Mayor Mitchel, of New York. I have a letter here in which he indorses and approves it.

Mr. President, the advisability of procuring this land at this time to meet this emergency, the training in marksmanship of these men who will become available if you have any system of training, seems very apparent. Not only that but the soldiers at Governors Island as well as the men at the Brooklyn Navy Yard now have no facilities for practicing marksmanship, and in that section of the country from which you will draw probably a greater number of men than from any other section it seems advisable that there should be some means whereby these men can take small-arms practice.

The record of marksmanship in New York State by the militia in 1915 was 23 per cent. They had very meager facilities for target practice. In New Jersey it was 30 per cent. They had more. They had Sea Girt, and they had another small range in northern New Jersey. But in Massachusetts, where they have a rifle range of this character for every militia organization, the percentage was 79 per cent of qualification, showing that where you have these rifle ranges for target practice at determined distances, there you will have the highest efficiency in marksmanship.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I can not help but regard the proposal made by the Senator from New Jersey as a fortunate one—fortunate particularly because it involves, if it is adopted by the Congress, the purchase of a very considerable tract of land so close to the metropolis of the country. It is exceedingly difficult, as any Senator will understand, to find a tract of land suitable for rifle practice close to a great city at anything like a price within the possibilities of the Treasury. The Senator from New Jersey has already described its relative situation, and the benefits which it can bring to the military forces of the United States.

May I say that some few years ago the only rifle range in the vicinity of New York City was at Creedmoor, on Long Island. That part of the country has become so built up and crowded with communities, and the tract of land was so small in the first instance, that it was abandoned for rifle practice some years ago by the authorities of the State of New York.

The only rifle range which is now available for New York troops is at Peekskill, a long distance up the Hudson River, where there is a rifle range and mobilization center which is supported by the State of New York, and I understand, of course, will continue to be supported by the State, but which is utterly insufficient to take care of the number of men who should have this training.

In addition to Peekskill, the only other official rifle range with facilities suitable for the training of any number of men is at Buffalo—Buffalo being at the far end of the State, toward the west. Western troops, or troops in western New York, use that rifle range. The troops in New York City and Brooklyn and in the Hudson River Valley have no suitable range for their use at the present time. It is safe to say that of the 25,000 men now composing the enlisted strength of the National Guard of New York, fully 20,000 could use this range if it should be established over in the State of New Jersey, across the Hudson River from the city of New York, in addition to the 7,000 or 8,000, as I understand, enlisted men in the National Guard of New Jersey.

I hope very much that the Senate will adopt the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey, because I verily believe that it will add very considerably to the efficiency of a number of Federal soldiers in the true sense of the term equal in number almost to an army corps.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, we are starting in with a very bad precedent in the consideration of this bill—the precedent of compelling the United States, in an appropriation bill, to purchase certain tracts of land without knowing anything about their value, without knowing whether they have been passed upon by the Government as to whether or not it needs those particular tracts, and without any knowledge whatever of the conditions, other than that there are tracts here that are very convenient for target practice.

If the Senators will look over H. R. 92, the bill which will be before the Senate in a short time, while I can not readily turn to it, they will find a provision in that proposed law for the condemnation by the Government for its use of any such tract of land, either for a given length of time or permanently. If we need that as a permanent reserve, the Government will have the power to take it. I think it would have the power to take it without any additional legislation, but it certainly will have the power before we get through with this war legislation. We ought to allow the Government to determine, after an investigation, where it wants these tracts of land for training purposes, and to determine how long it may wish to provide for a rental, and a reasonable rental, during the time that it may need these tracts of land.

I am opposed to our compelling the Government, without any investigation, and because some one has a piece of land he wants to turn over to the Government, and because it can be used, to take it at whatever price is put in here as an amendment, without any further investigation about it.

Mr. President, we will have an opportunity to secure that land before we get through if we need it, and the Government can pay for it if it needs it, and the Government can rent it if it needs it; and I would rather see it come in in a proper bill, with proper authority, rather than to be put upon a bill of this kind, an appropriation bill, without any consideration.

Therefore, Mr. President, I make the point of order that the matter has not been considered—that is, that there has been no report as to the cost—and that it is general legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Has this been estimated for by the department? [A pause.] The point of order is sustained.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I move to strike out all of page 92 after line 10, all of page 93, and down to and including line 19 on page 94.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all under the heading "Civilian military training," to be found on pages 92, 93, and 94, down to line 20.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, this part of the bill provides for an appropriation of $3,281,000, and $250,000 additional on top of that, a total of a little over $3,500,000, for civilian military training.

In the last civilian military training, held last year, 14,000 men took part. Not a single man of them, as I understand, went to the Mexican border. If any of them did go it was a negligible quantity. There is no obligation in the law for any man who takes this military training, and upon whom part of this three and a half million dollars is expended, to become a soldier and to join the Army and to defend the country.

Having declared war, it seems to me that if we have any money to be expended it ought to be expended upon a soldier, in training him. I move, therefore, to strike out this whole provision. It evidently was inserted before war was declared; it can not result in good to the Government and will result in the expenditure of three and a half million dollars in money. Only $1,000,000 is provided for maneuvers and practice by the National Guard in this same bill, and yet all the National Guard joined the colors when war was imminent on the Mexican border. It seems to me this ought to be done.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the motion of the Senator from Arkansas is to strike out the provision made for these training camps, known as the Plattsburg and other camps, that are held in different parts of the country. I differ from the Senator with reference to the power of the Secretary of War or of the President in regard to the young men who join these training-camp associations. I believe that under the national-defense act of June 3, 1916, section 54, the Secretary of War may impose terms of enlistment upon these young men, and if they do not comply with them they can not participate. The provision of that section is:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to maintain, upon military reservations or elsewhere, camps for the military instruction and training of such citizens as may be selected for such instruction and training upon their application, and on such terms of enlistment and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

Mr. KIRBY. Yes; but, Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. Is it not a fact that they are only required to enlist for 30 days and for that training; and did not the investigation show that it was not regarded as obliging them, and there is no provision placing an obligation upon one of these men who are trained there, to join the Army? In other words, such a man is not a part of the Army when he is being trained.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is the present regulation, but it is simply a regulation. I think, under the section that I have just read, that they could impose a longer term of service on him.

Mr. KIRBY. Then would it not be better, when we have already declared war, to have this money expended in training a soldier who has enlisted in place of training some man who might enlist after we have spent three and a half million dollars in training him and others of the same sort through the summer?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am inclined to think that these training camps have done great good, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. KIRBY. I call for a division, Mr. President. I will ask for a roll call on this proposition.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If the Senator insists upon that, Mr. President, we will not finish this bill this evening.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays are requested. Is the request seconded?

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was rejected, on a division.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I desire to submit an amendment to come in on page 84. I send it to the desk and ask that it may be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 84, after line 21, it is proposed to insert the following:

For range shelters, office and storage buildings, mess halls, water supply, sanitary and drainage system, and other facilities to increase and improve the rifle range and its facilities at State Camp, Fla., $40,000, which sum shall be immediately available.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I will state that that is the estimate of Col. Miller, who has just returned from the camp. The Government owns 700 acres there. All of this money could be spent upon the Government's own property. It owns the 700 acres of ground, and there is a need of some extension of the water mains and sewers and some other improvements there to the amount mentioned in this report by Col. Miller.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand that an estimate was made for this by the Treasury Department and sent to the Committee on Military Affairs for its consideration?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; that is an estimate made by Col. Miller, director of civilian marksmanship, who was recently on the ground. They need it because they expect to utilize the targets there for the Army, as well as possibly for other purposes; but, at any rate, they will need it for the Army.

Mr. SMOOT. What I want to get at is this: Has a regular estimate been made for it, and has the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate rejected the recommendation or the estimate?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; the committee has not had the opportunity to reject it. The matter has not been presented to the committee, for the reason that the report has just been made by Col. Miller; in fact, since this bill was reported to the Senate. The report of Col. Miller, who has been there and made this personal investigation, has just been completed. He says these improvements are necessary because of the immediate use to which the camp will be put, and that every dollar of it will be spent on the Federal Government's own property.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator having the bill in charge if this matter has been called to his attention by the War Department?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; it has not, I will say to the Senator—only by the Senator from Florida himself.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will say to the Senator from Utah that there has not been time enough for the department to have sifted this through.

Mr. SMOOT. There is an Army bill that will be here before us in a very little while, and before the Military Affairs Committee, of which the Senator from Florida is an honored member. I think we ought to have a little more information about the matter, Mr. President; and I make the point of order that it has not been estimated for.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. FLETCHER. What is the point of order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That it has not been estimated for, according to the rule.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, if there are no other amendments pending I should like to call up the amendment which I offered yesterday and desired to have pending, and ask that the Secretary read it. I refer to the amendment relating to the pay of enlisted men.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 19, line 3, it is proposed to strike out "$29,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$58,000,000."

Provided, That hereafter the pay of enlisted men in the Regular Army shall be $30 per month, and that the pay of noncommissioned officers shall be increased in the same proportions.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I desire to modify that amendment before it is submitted by adding the following language, which I will read, so that the Secretary can get it:

Provided, That in no case shall any noncommissioned officer receive more than $100 per month as a result of this act.

I do that for the reason that on examination of the national-defense act I find that some noncommissioned officers are receiving as much as $75 a month, and to increase their pay in the same proportion, as is suggested by the amendment for the enlisted men, would result in giving a noncommissioned officer $150 a month. I am not anxious to bring about that result.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. In view of the fact that the general Army bill will be brought in a little later, an appropriation bill as well, and in view of the fact that this is not estimated for——

Mr. HUGHES. Just a moment. The Senator is about to make a point of order, I presume?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. I wish he would not make a point of order. I assure him if this amendment is not germane to this particular part of the bill that other parts of the bill have already been passed upon to which it is germane. I think it is a matter of sufficient moment and sufficient importance for us to have a vote upon it. I ask the Senator not to make a point of order, but if he does insist upon making it I shall resort to every parliamentary device I am familiar with to see that we get an opportunity to vote on this question. It is the proper place; it is the proper time; and whether the Senator is going to make a point of order or not I propose to make a statement of the reasons that have moved me in offering the amendment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection to the Senator making any sort of statement he desires, but I do not think the Senator ought to object to a valid point of order being made against it. If it were not for the fact that two bills will be here within two or three weeks at the most on which it will be proper to consider this subject I would not make a point of order, but I feel impelled to do it under the circumstances.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President. I do not know whether the Chair has ruled on the point of order I made, but he can do so to-morrow, and I move, Mr. President, with the consent of the Senator from New Jersey——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before the Senator submits a motion to adjourn, will he permit the Chair to lay before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Certainly.

EXPENSES INCIDENT TO SESSION.

H. R. 122. An act making appropriations for certain expenses incident to the first session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

Mr. MARTIN. This is a bill that provides for the mileage of Senators and Members of the House of Representatives and for certain other expenses of the House of Representatives. It will not take three minutes to pass it, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, namely:

LEGISLATIVE.

The appropriations for mileage of Senators, Members of the House of Representatives, and Delegates from the Territories, and expenses of Resident Commissioners, made in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1918, are made immediately available and authorized to be paid to Senators, Members of the House of Representatives, Delegates from the Territories, and Resident Commissioners, for attendance on the first session of the Sixty-fifth Congress.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

For stationery for Members and Delegates and Resident Commissioners, at $125 each, for the first session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, $55,000.

For the following employees during the first session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, but not longer than until and including June 30, 1917, namely:

For 46 pages, including 2 riding pages, 4 telephone pages, 1 press-gallery page, and 10 pages for duty at the entrances to the Hall of the House, at $2.50 per day each; 9 messengers in the post office at the rate of $100 per month each; in all, $13,020, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Now, with the consent of the Senator from New Jersey, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 11, 1917, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 10, 1917.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, our Father in Heaven, for the great wave of patriotism sweeping our land from center to circumference, which promises victory to our arms in defense of our sacred rights. But we most fervently pray that some event shall intervene to cause the terrible war, with its wide desolation, to cease; that brotherly love may reach the ascendancy, and a rational basis be found upon which all international questions may be amicably adjusted without the force of arms; that Thy kingdom may indeed come, and Thy will be done in earth as it is done in Heaven; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers a privileged motion, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 42.

Resolved, That the following-named Representatives be elected members of the Committee on Ways and Means:

JOSEPH W. FORDNEY, of Michigan; AUGUSTUS P. GARDNER, of Massachusetts; J. HAMPTON MOORE, of Pennsylvania; WILLIAM R. GREEN, of Iowa; CHARLES H. SLOAN, of Nebraska; EBENEZER J. HILL, of Connecticut; NICHOLAS LONGWORTH, of Ohio; GEORGE W. FAIRCHILD, of New York; JOHN A. STERLING, of Illinois; WHITMELL P. MARTIN, of Louisiana.

The SPEAKER. Are there any other nominations? If not, the Chair will put the question.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Carr, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 383. An act to punish the destruction or injuring of war material and war transportation facilities by fire, explosives, or other violent means, and to forbid hostile use of property during time of war, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 12) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, had agreed to the conference asked for by the House, and had appointed Mr. MARTIN, Mr. SHAFROTH, and Mr. WARREN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 28. Joint resolution authorizing the temporary employment of additional policemen for the Capitol Building and Grounds and the Senate and House Office Buildings.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 383. An act to punish the destruction or injuring of war material and war transportation facilities by fire, explosives, or other violent means, and to forbid hostile use of property during time of war, and for the purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EXPENSES OF FIRST SESSION OF SIXTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

On motion of Mr. FITZGERALD, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 122) making appropriations for certain expenses incident to the first session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, and for other purposes, with Mr. CRISP in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of a bill which the clerk will report.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, namely:

LEGISLATIVE.

The appropriations for mileage of Senators, Members of the House of Representatives, and Delegates from the Territories, and expenses of Resident Commissioners, made in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1918, are made immediately available and authorized to be paid to Senators, Members of the House of Representatives, Delegates from the Territories, and Resident Commissioners, for attendance on the first session of the Sixty-fifth Congress.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

For stationery for Members and Delegates and Resident Commissioners, at $125 each, for the first session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, $55,000.

For the following employees during the first session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, but not longer than until and including June 30, 1917, namely:

For 46 pages, including 2 riding pages, 4 telephone pages, 1 press-gallery page, and 10 pages for duty at the entrances to the Hall of the House, at $2.50 per day each; 9 messengers in the post office, at the rate of $100 per month each; 3 telephone operators, at the rate of $75 per month each; in all, $13,687.50, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides that the mileage appropriated, to be available at the next session of Congress, shall be available immediately for the Members on account of the extra session. It also appropriates money necessary for the stationery allowance of Members of the House, and provides for House pages and for messengers in the post office. Those employees are necessary for the transaction of the business of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman yield a minute to me?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FOSTER. I notice that this resolution provides for the telephone operators until the close of this session. Just before the close of the last Congress these telephone operators were placed upon the roll until November 30, 1917, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House. It seems to me the passage of this bill will make conflicting legislation in reference to this matter.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If there is any duplication, I shall offer an amendment to strike out the provision in the bill.

Mr. FOSTER. If this should pass, would they, then, after the end of this session, be paid out of the contingent fund until November 30?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is the gentleman promising that we will adjourn before November 30?

Mr. FOSTER. I am not promising anything, but I hope Congress will not be in session until November 30.

Mr. FITZGERALD. An amendment will be offered to take them out of this resolution.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield to me five minutes?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana 10 minutes.

Mr. COX. I do not care for 10 minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the telegram which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the telegram.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hon. W. E. Cox,
United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

We are having wonderful meetings all over the State for the purpose of conserving and increasing food supplies. Very important farmers should receive fertilizer and seeds of various kinds. They have been embarrassed by long delays in shipments. Would help immensely if Interstate Commerce Commission could be prevailed upon to enter immediate order requiring railroads to card all cars containing fertilizer or seeds—mark them "Rush," and give strict preference to all such shipments. Similar messages to NEW, WOOD, and WATSON.

JAMES P. GOODRICH.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, first of all I want to compliment Indiana's present great governor for the wonderful fight he is making to increase the food supply of the State of Indiana. [Applause.] Through the press of the State I saw what he was doing several days ago and immediately wrote him a letter commending his action and making some suggestions to him. In response to my letter I received the telegram just read. In my opinion, the time will never come when we will be short of men on the firing line. We will get all the men needed, either by voluntary enlistment, conscription, or universal training. The time will never come when the men on the firing line will be short of munitions of war, because we have the ability and facilities in this country for making munitions of war sufficient not only to supply our armies but, if necessary, to supply all the armies of the allies. But munitions of war will not win this victory for us. Two million additional soldiers on the firing line will not assure us a complete victory. Something more must be had and done to assure victory for us in this world-wide war. Napoleon once made a statement, a little rough, but may I be pardoned if I use it again? He said, "Soldiers win victory on their bellies." They have got to be fed. They must be fed and clothed. Where is the food coming from with which to feed them? We are confronted to-day with a serious shortage of food supplies, the most serious shortage of food supplies that ever confronted our country, even including the darkest and gloomiest days of the Civil War. It is estimated that winter wheat will only produce 430,000,000 bushels this year when the estimate at this time ought to and should show at least 650,000,000 of bushels. It is too early to make a forecast of spring wheat, but as far as that estimate has been made this wheat crop is going to be far short of even what it was last year, much less what it was during the year of 1915. The all-wise and far-penetrating query is, Where is this food coming from? Who is to grow and produce it? It is not only a shortage in our own country but a world-wide shortage.

Nations representing a population of more than 500,000,000 people are now involved in this world-wide war. Millions upon millions of acres of land are untilled, unproductive, and must remain so until the war is finally settled. We are the only Nation on earth that can feed the armies of the allies, and the civilian population of England, France, Italy, Servia, and Roumania, and while we are doing this we are compelled to feed our own contemplated army of at least 2,000,000 people and our own civilian population of 100,000,000 people here at home.

Already the frost has materially injured many of the crops in the extreme South. In large sections of the South the potato crop is only estimated to be 50 per cent of what it ought to be, due to the February and March freezes. This is equally true of many other vegetable crops of the South, such as cabbage, tomatoes, and so forth. We have had three crop failures in succession in this country, barring our "bumper" wheat crop of 1915. Outside of that, for the last three successive years we had had crop failures in this country. Seed is scarce and extremely high. Where is it coming from? I would suggest that the Committee of National Defense begin at once to utilize the national resources in order to mobilize the farmers of the Nation, to stimulate them to greater production.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman five more minutes.

Mr. COX. In my country, southern Indiana, which is a splendid farming country, I speak at first hand when I say that the wheat crop in that section of the country will not be 50 per cent of a normal crop. Last year potatoes were practically a total failure, and all through my section of the country we were presented with the startling and amazing spectacle of farmers buying their winter supply of potatoes last fall. This was not the fault of the farmer. He did his duty. He planted the usual crop, put the usual amount of labor upon it, but the drought—failure of rains—prevented him from producing anything like a normal crop. The corn crop of southern Indiana was not over half a crop, and throughout the Nation it was nearly a billion bushels short, due to too much rain early in the spring, preventing the farmers from tilling it, and a drought at the opportune time when corn most needed rain.

Mr. Chairman, instead of devoting millions—yes, billions—of money to buy munitions of war, it looks to me as if it would be the part of wisdom and patriotism to divert a part of this money now being put into the hands of the President, $100,000,000, as a contingent fund; that he use a part of it for the purpose of buying and purchasing seed for the farmers, and to deliver it to them, especially where the farmer does not have seed or money with which to buy it.

This may be criticized as being socialistic, paternalistic, or any other kind of an "ism." I care not what it be called. I care not how others look at it; it is the part of wisdom, and will yield back in the way of increased production of food supplies at least a hundredfold on every dollar we may put into the enterprise.

The Agricultural appropriation bill every year carries about $300,000 to buy vegetable and flower seed for distribution through Members of Congress. That it does some good goes without saying, but here is an opportunity to use a part of the contingent fund in the purchase and distribution of seeds to the farmers that would do an incalculable amount of good, both to the Nation and to the world. The seed time in the extreme South is now practically over. It is now beginning in the North, from southern Indiana to the Great Lakes. In my judgment, if at least $5,000,000 of this fund was devoted to the purchase of seeds, we would treble or quadruple the food supplies of this country in the coming season. But it will take work and effort and money in order to accomplish much good. Are we going to sit idly by, are our executives going to sit idly by, and let the munitions of war gorge the railways, let our railway trains be filled with munitions of war, when these trains are needed so badly, as Gov. Goodrich says in his telegram, to get the seed back to the farmers so they may plant larger crops?

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. RANDALL. What does the gentleman think of the advisability of continuing the use of 600,000,000 bushels of grain in manufacturing alcoholic liquors?

Mr. COX. If I had my way about it, I would close every brewery and distillery in the United States this moment. [Applause.] I would stop the manufacture of all malt and alcoholic liquor in the United States and turn the grain supply into food, because if we do not do it we are going to be confronted in a short time with devastation and starvation stalking broadcast throughout our land.

To-day the farmer is suffering, as no other business interest in the country is suffering, from lack of labor supply. He has been suffering from a lack of labor for many years. The high-priced wages paid to laborers in the city in the last three years has called hundreds of thousands of young men from the farms and put them in the cities, until to-day there is actually not enough labor in the country to man and work the farms. If we are to resort to conscription or compulsory universal military training at once and thereby take from 500,000 to 1,000,000 young men from the country, God help this Nation! To do that means a depletion of country labor worse than it is now; to do that means not to increase but to positively decrease the food supply.

Mr. Chairman, the American farmer can win this war quicker than the American soldier can win it. The American farmer must win it. He and he alone holds the key to the situation. He and he alone can raise the food supplies not only for our Army and our civilian population, but for the armies of the allies and their civilian populations. But if 500,000 young men must be taken from the farms, put into training and drilling, we will throw a burden upon the farmers which will make it impossible for them to do their tasks. They are doing their utmost now. They are straining every nerve. They are working night and day with their families earnestly endeavoring to meet the supreme emergencies thrown upon their shoulders.

To the average person it does not look plausible or reasonable that a condition of starvation will overtake us unless something heroic and drastic is done by lending every aid and every agency which it is possible for Congress to lend, but unless we do it it will come as sure as night follows the day.

If the Interstate Commerce Commission has the power, it should at once direct the railroads to release their cars now loaded with munitions of war in order that these may haul to the farmers of Indiana and all over the Nation seed supplies, of which they are very much in need. I would further suggest that not less than five million of the one hundred million dollars which is to be turned over to the President be used as a part of a fund for the purpose of distributing seed to the farmers. They need it. They will utilize it. They will make it yield manifold interest in return to the American people by increasing their production. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to address myself to the bill before the House, but very briefly to another matter. The outburst of patriotism following the action of this Government has been manifest in the flood of resolutions supporting the Government. I have received one resolution which seems so much out of the ordinary as to merit special attention, and I therefore send it to the desk with the request that it be read in my time. These resolutions were adopted by the Grand Army of the Republic Post of Logan, Iowa, composed of soldiers of the Civil War.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas a state of war is now recognized to exist between our beloved country and the German Empire; and

Whereas we believe that the President of the United States has shown the utmost limit of patience in trying to avoid war, and that all our peace overtures have been treated with contempt, our citizens without regard to age, sex, or condition have been ruthlessly murdered, our property destroyed; and

Whereas the German nation has advertised to the world that the same ruthless, barbarous practices will be continued without regard to consequences or the cessation of the friendly relations that have always existed between their country and ours: Therefore be it

Resolved by Fuller Post, No. 38, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Iowa, That in our judgment the time for action has come and that we, as comrades of the said Grand Army of the Republic post, send greeting to all our comrades and to the President of the United States, that we are in hearty support of the administration in whatever measures that may be deemed best to be taken by the President and Congress of the United States to protect the rights of our citizens and prevent further insult to our flag; and be it further

Resolved, That if our country should need what little service we are still able to render we hereby pledge ourselves to a man to make any sacrifice which may be necessary to sustain our country and keep unstained our glorious banner.

SIDNEY PITT, Sr.,
A. S. JEWELL,
C. N. CADWELL,
Committee on Resolutions.

The above preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted by the said post in regular session at Logan, Iowa, this 3d day of April, 1917.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I now desire to read a part of a letter which accompanied these resolutions, omitting that part which is personal to myself:

PERSIA, IOWA, April 7, 1917.

Hon. W. R. GREEN, Representative.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Inclosed please find copy of resolution unanimously adopted by Fuller Post, No. 38, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Iowa, on the 3d instant. * * * It is thought that maybe the Confederate veterans will give expression to like sentiments and thus help to arouse the spirit of patriotism which happily we see manifested in great degree.

You would have been pleased to see the enthusiasm manifested by the old decrepit veterans when this preamble and resolution were read to them in the post. Every eye grew bright with the spirit of all the patriots living and dead since our fathers began to build for freedom, and there was an arising to their feet by all but one, and he had to be brought in in an invalid chair, and each in turn expressed his willingness to go whenever our country calls, though he might have to be drawn in an ambulance and occupy the trenches or give his life for the cause of freedom for a world. And I assure you they meant it. * * *

With sentiments of great respect,
Yours, truly, SIDNEY PITT, Sr.

Mr. Chairman, I have a faint recollection as a child of seeing the soldiers in the war of 1861 drilling on the village square.

I remember still more clearly the time in those dark days when every mail brought a large list of the killed and wounded at the front. When the men who have passed through the trials and dangers of the Civil War, who have offered their lives once to their country, come again to renew their offer, who can fail in his duty? [Applause.]

A MEMBER. Read.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, a Member says "read." In a moment, as far as I am concerned, we will read. I fancy there is no opposition to this bill, and at the present time, so far as this bill is concerned, I have nothing to say except that I think there is no one in the committee, nor will there be when we go into the House, who will object to the enactment of the proposed legislation. There may be legislation to come later where we will all want to talk; I do not know.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

LEGISLATIVE.

The appropriations for mileage of Senators, Members of the House of Representatives, and Delegates from the Territories, and expenses of Resident Commissioners, made in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1918, are made immediately available and authorized to be paid to Senators, Members of the House of Representatives, Delegates from the Territories, and Resident Commissioners, for attendance on the first session of the Sixty-fifth Congress.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, just for the purpose of saying a few words in connection with what the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] has mentioned as to another section of the country, the South. My honest judgment about this situation is that the real serious proposition confronting the Nation to-day is not men for our armies or money to conduct the war, but the most serious and paramount problem confronting the American people this minute is the production of a sufficient amount of foodstuffs to make it possible for our own people who are pursuing industrial activities, running the business of this country, to be fed at a reasonable cost and to supply our own armies, and not to lose sight of the fact that the normal supply of food that has been going to the European trenches must continue to flow at all hazards. Now, the attractive and alluring prices that have been paid in the great industrial centers for the last two years to the ordinary laborer have, I know, taken from the South hundreds of thousands of farm laborers. The farm-labor situation in the South and West is the great question confronting those sections to-day. I do not know what some of you gentlemen are going to do about the legislation that will shortly be presented to this House, upon which we shall be expected to vote our consciences and at least reflect to some degree the patriotic sentiment of the constituencies we represent; but, so far as I am concerned, and I speak only for myself, I am not ready at this hour—though I may be a little later; I do not know what reasons may be presented—to vote to resort to conscription. I might be convinced by the eloquence and logic of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. He may present some good reason to me why in the very first stages of our war with the German nation we should resort to the conscription of the young men of this country without giving them an opportunity to show that they are just as patriotic as their forefathers were. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOWARD. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. I see by the papers that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT], the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, is being persuaded now as to what his mind will be in the future; for, if the papers tell the truth, he has promised to introduce the bill by request.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, in that particular matter I expect, at least, to control my own vote. But in the event that we do resort to conscription by a majority vote of this House and of the body at the other end of the Capitol, and we do enact a universal military-training law, I believe that it will be the part of wisdom for this Congress to exempt all young men of the eligible ages who are actually engaged in the production of foodstuffs for a period of at least 12 months or during the present planting and harvesting season. [Applause.]

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be granted five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Alabama be extended for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia fears that conscription might take some of the workers engaged in necessary pursuits, such as agriculture. Does he not realize that the great vice of the voluntary system is that it takes the man who is willing to do something, and usually the man who is engaged in a useful pursuit, and sends him to the front by his own voluntary act and leaves the discard at home?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes; and I will reply to the gentleman——

Mr. BORLAND. Just one moment—and does he not realize that selective conscription can correct the very evil of which the gentleman is speaking, by putting the men in the trenches who ought to defend their country, and leaving those who are useful at home, where the Nation most needs their services?

Mr. HOWARD. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I can take an army of 10,000 men who are patriotic enough to bare their breasts to the enemy voluntarily and without force or reward and whip a hundred thousand whom you would have to kick into the trenches. All of the patriotism in this Nation is not dead yet by a long shot. Take, for instance, the Spanish-American War. At that time I had three tent mates. That is, there were four of us in a tent. One of those was a lawyer, one of them was a farmer, another was a blacksmith, and the other fellow was a scalawag. All of them volunteered.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Who was the scalawag?

Mr. HOWARD. Oh, I was not the scalawag. [Laughter.] The gentleman from Pennsylvania seems to think that I was.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Oh, no.

Mr. HOWARD. Getting back to the seriousness of the question. I was talking to a very prominent gentleman yesterday for some length of time upon this very question, and he said the task of getting the labor back into the country that has left it for these alluring prices that are being paid to labor, in order to produce enough food for the normal supply of the Nation and to do our part in sending the foodstuffs to our allies in the trenches in Europe, which we have got to do, is a most serious proposition. It is a proposition to which I hope gentlemen between now and next Thursday, when we will be called upon to act upon some of these questions, will devote at least a part of their busy life.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman would exempt the young men who are actually engaged in the production of foodstuffs, what would he do with those other young men who are engaged in the production of clothing and other necessary war material?

Mr. HOWARD. The whole scheme of mobilization hinges upon this very proposition: If these people who are engaged in producing clothing do not get something to put into their stomachs, they would not be able to produce the clothes for very long.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But without clothing and agricultural implements those engaged in the production of food would be in a bad way.

Mr. HOWARD. The whole fabric of our Nation in this war rests upon having food, and plenty of it, with which to supply our people and our armies in the field, or the whole Nation will forget war and enter into a mad scramble for food. The gentleman can make any sort of an argument he wishes, but——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But the gentleman does not get the purport of my question.

Mr. HOWARD. I know the gentleman's question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to know if the gentleman differentiates between the city boy and the farm boy for this war service.

Mr. HOWARD. No. I would not if it was not absolutely necessary to differentiate, and that is what I am trying to impress on the gentleman now, that it is absolutely essential that we do differentiate in this case, because I know of my own knowledge the straits the people have been put to who are engaged in agricultural pursuits in the South to get enough labor to put their seed in the ground and till the soil.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But the gentleman certainly would not stand for legislation so specialized as to take only the boy from the city——

Mr. HOWARD. But I will——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania (continuing). And exempt the boy in the country?

Mr. HOWARD. Sure I will do that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then the gentleman is reversing all traditional conditions; he would shock the patriotic people on the farm.

Mr. HOWARD. The reason I stand for any differentiation, or any partiality, is not because I impute to the boys of the country any lack of patriotism or that they are slackers, but for the purpose of serving this Nation as a Nation, these can perform no greater duty than aiding in the production of food.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman surely does not mean that if there was a majority of Members in this House coming from the farm that they would vote the men of the cities into the trenches and exempt their own constituents?

Mr. HOWARD. No; I do not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That would be unthinkable.

Mr. HOWARD. If you leave it to these country boys and permit them to enlist, irrespective of the shortage of labor in the country and the existing shortage in foodstuffs, I say to the gentleman that, according to the population of this country outside the great civic centers, you will get three boys physically fit in the country where you will get one boy physically fit in the city, and you will deplete the farms first and leave the Nation in the most precarious condition it has faced for 50 years. I sincerely trust that the Nation will be fully awakened to this situation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I hope that would be——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I shall not at this time have anything to say regarding conscription or as to the handling of any Army program other than to make a practical suggestion that I think the Members of this House can personally help with. I have recently visited the Southwest, the great wheat belt of the country, and I have since corroborated the information I gained there by consulting the departments that make it a business to collect data on crop conditions. The droughts in the Southwest have been so prolonged and so unusual during the winter months that they have cut short to a marked degree the wheat crop of the country. I want to suggest to the Members of Congress here—and I think it will not be a suggestion prompted by egotism—that they each suggest to the various little county and town newspapers that they in turn editorially urge upon their readers the advisability of planting June corn, which is a corn that can be planted late in the season and mature quickly, and will withstand the drought. In addition to that, to plant kaffir corn and milo maize and other drought-resisting crops that will mature in the event of a drought and can be used for food products. I attended a meeting of a county fair in my district at Chickasha, Okla., about three or four years ago, and I found this kaffir corn and maize and drought-resisting crops can be made into good flour, in turn into bread, biscuits, cake, pancakes, and cookies, and you would be surprised to see what good flour the kaffir corn and other drought-resisting crops make. Idle tracts of land throughout the country ought to be planted to such food products. Potatoes, beans, sweet corn, turnips, and all sorts of food products ought to be planted. In this way each one could contribute a little to help feed the world during this conflict. We can all appear here on the floor of Congress and in response to estimates appropriate the public money like drunken sailors. It seems to me we can, in addition to that, do something practical and inexpensive by urging our several constituents—really quoting my friend from Texas Mr. DIES, "Hitch old Beck to the plow," and plow up unusued areas and plant something that really would be of service and be food, not only for our own country, but for the belligerent countries.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. If I may be granted two minutes additional. I only rise to express this thought. I do not pretend to know all things about this subject; I do not even expect to take time enough to exploit what I do know, so I do not care to go into any new fields on the subject.

Mr. COX. I do not know very much about it either, but does the gentleman think that plan of getting newspapers to advertise and carry articles calling on the farmers to do these things will do very much good?

Mr. FERRIS. I think so. It can do no harm. The papers are very patriotic, and they will do their part and more, too.

Mr. COX. I beg leave to differ with the gentleman. Let me ask him a further question. Does not the gentleman think that the tangible real thing to do would be for Congress, where the people have not got money to buy seed with, to appropriate the money and turn it over to the Agricultural Department, or some other agency, to buy that seed and turn it over to the farmers?

Mr. FERRIS. I have only a minute and do not care to further take up the time of the House; but I think that probably would be very well, but Congress will, in all probability, never do that. For myself I do not feel free to indulge them in something that they in all probability can not realize upon. The good prices we are receiving for products, plus some common-sense suggestions and helpful instruction, will, I think, be something we can really do.

Mr. COX. It does it now to the extent of $295,000 a year.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; for garden seeds, but they are already distributed. That is over now. No more on hand for this year.

Mr. DIXON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. If I can have a couple of minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has two minutes remaining.

Mr. DIXON. I want to suggest to the gentleman, in the State of Indiana last Saturday, and in every county seat of that State, the farmers got together and considered the very question the gentleman now suggests.

Mr. FERRIS. I congratulate both the gentleman and his State, because other sections have not been as patriotic and alert to the situation as Indiana, and the reason I took up the time of the House at this moment was to make this suggestion and try to excite a little enthusiasm on their part in other sections.

Now, farmers ought to know more and really do know more about farming than do the newspapers or Members of Congress, but encouragement from the Members of Congress to get newspapers to run articles urging that farmers plant things that will grow and that will resist drought will do some good. It will really be beneficial to the farmers and will contribute materially to the food supply of the world.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield? Is it the custom of the farmers in the gentleman's part of the country, where they have plenty of land, to let the land lie idle? Do they not grow what they can on the farm?

Mr. FERRIS. It is true in my State and true in the gentleman's State. There is enough of land lying idle and growing up in Jimson weed and ragweed to-day to grow enough of products to feed the world.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The farmers have to pay taxes, and it is to their interest to grow all that they can. The gentleman raises June corn. Up in Michigan we put corn in in May.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I was up in the gentleman's State not very long ago and met many delightful people, friends of the gentleman, but I saw a great deal of idle land there. It is true everywhere. People are wasteful in land, as in everything else. My State is no exception to the rule.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The gentleman was there in the wintertime.

Mr. FERRIS. The wintertime did not obstruct my vision as to what was going on. And it would do the gentleman good if he himself would plant something in his own State, the same as the rest of us.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For 46 pages, including 2 riding pages, 4 telephone pages, 1 press gallery page, and 10 pages for duty at the entrances to the Hall of the House, at $2.50 per day each; 9 messengers in the post office at the rate of $100 per month each; 3 telephone operators at the rate of $75 per month each; in all, $13,687.50, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], the chairman of the committee, is recognized. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] later.

The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. FITZGERALD: Page 2, lines 14 and 15, strike out on line 14 all after the word "each," and on line 15 to and including the word "each," and on line 15 the figures "$13,687.50" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$13,020."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the House adopted House resolution 490, which provides for three telephone operators from March 31 to November 30, 1917, out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, that was an authorization, of course. Under the law it is doubtful whether the payment is legal, though I presume the Committee on Accounts will pay it, as it has heretofore. But it has been customary where such a resolution was passed to pay out of the contingent fund to include it in the appropriation bill. Why should it not be included here?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is true where the resolution provides that the payment is to be out of the contingent fund until otherwise provided by law. That latter portion is not in this House resolution, and to continue these three operators in this bill would be to provide for six telephone operators.

Mr. MANN. I am not so sure about that. What was the form of the resolution? Does it provide for three additional telephone operators or provide for an increase in compensation of $100 per month instead of $75?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It provides that the three telephone operators now authorized to be employed from December 1, 1916, to March 31, 1917, will continue to be employed during the period between March 31, with the amendment, to November 30, 1917, and paid out of the contingent fund of the House at the rate of $75 a month. That is the form in which the resolution is. If this provision be carried in the bill before us, it will provide in effect for six telephone operators.

Mr. MANN. I should not think so.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think it would, because the customary form of resolution providing for payment out of the contingent fund provides that the payment shall be out of the contingent fund until otherwise provided by law, and as soon as the law provides for the payment all authority to pay out of the contingent fund ceases. That would not be the case under House resolution 490 of last Congress.

Mr. MANN. Of course, the purpose of the resolution passed by the House in the last Congress practically was to make these three telephone operators annual employees instead of session employees. Now, wherever that has been done in the past they have been carried in the appropriation act on the theory that payment out of the contingent fund was practically an authorization. There was no provision made by law that they would be paid out of the contingent fund, but if there is a provision made in the appropriation act, then they are paid out of that instead of out of the contingent fund, and it would be very easy to cover that in this bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. These operators are provided for until the 1st of December this year in the legislative bill.

Mr. MANN. The operators are now provided for as session employees under the appropriation act, as they have been in the past. The purpose of the House in passing that resolution was to put them on the permanent annual pay roll. While I was not very enthusiastically in favor of the resolution——

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman changed his mind on it.

Mr. MANN. I did not change my mind, although I did not finally make objection. It would not have done any good if I had, probably. I did not feel authorized to raise the point of no quorum at that stage in the proceedings. But the House having indicated its purpose, why do we not follow that purpose now instead of later?

Mr. FITZGERALD. This bill provides for these employees from now until the 30th of June. That is the customary way. It is for employees who are not provided for in any other way. These operators are provided for out of the contingent fund, and it was thought better to let them stay there.

Mr. MANN. I notice these employees are provided for until the 30th of June. Permit me to ask whether the pages and other employees named in this paragraph are the same who have been in the service of the House up to the 31st of March?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I do not know.

Mr. MANN. How do they happen to come into the bill, if the gentleman does not know? I do not mean the same individuals.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is the same number, the same force—the identical force.

Mr. MANN. We passed some provision by resolution, I think, for messengers in the post office for the vacation. Is this in addition to those, or is it for the payment of the same messengers?

Mr. FITZGERALD. We provided for half of them in the House post office. This is for the balance of them. There are 18 messengers in the post office of the House. We provided by resolution, according to my recollection, for nine of them during the recess. This carries the other nine.

Mr. MANN. We had a resolution before the House—I do not remember whether it passed—increasing the number of messengers in the post office during the vacation.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That failed, according to my recollection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The general deficiency bill carries nine during the recess, and this provides for the other nine.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And the general deficiency bill failed, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. MANN. Yes; the general deficiency bill failed, but it will soon be a law.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not know what is in it now.

Mr. MANN. The same things are in it now as were in it before. The general deficiency bill takes care of some of the messengers in the House. I notice this bill provides the amounts necessary to carry the service up to the 30th day of June. Now, supposing Congress is in session after the 30th of June——

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is the custom. We provide only for the balance of the present fiscal year, and if the session extends over we can take care of them in the next fiscal year by separate resolution.

Mr. MANN. Then that would require further action.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I hoped that the gentleman would say that there is no apparent need of providing for the employees beyond the 30th of June, because Congress would have completed its legislative business and dissolved and gone home—or enlisted in the Army—as I supposed quite a number intend to do who have been so actively urging war. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. I hope the combination of enlistment and going home will result in Congress being dissolved by the 30th of June. I should like the gentleman to take either course he pleases. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, may I ask if the gentleman has heard of any enlistments by Members of Congress yet?

Mr. MANN. There has been no opportunity afforded yet.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I have not heard of any as yet; but——

Mr. BURNETT. I was wondering.

Mr. MANN. We have provided no opportunity for enlistments. May I ask the gentleman from New York, or any other gentleman on the majority side of the House—and I say "majority" with a question mark after it [laughter], though you claim to be the majority and have been so far—is it the expectation of the so-called majority to engage in general legislation at this session of Congress, or to confine the legislation to matters relating to or growing out of the war?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, "sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Oh, no. We like to know the evil in advance of its coming.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I do not see any of the so-called bosses——

Mr. CANNON. Highbinders, white-button mandarins [laughter]——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Any of the so-called bosses giving any intimation as to that. Although the gentleman from Illinois may be able to speak with authority for the other side, that is not the case on this side.

Mr. MANN. Personally, if I were able to speak for everybody on this side of the House—and I am not—I would be glad, if I had the opportunity, to say that when Congress got through with the emergency legislation it would adjourn. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, it all depends upon what the happiness, prosperity, and security of the American people will require. Whatever legislation is needed, either for the public defense or the happiness of the people, will be enacted here, whether it be under the guise of general legislation or any other kind of legislation. The gentleman and the country may feel assured that that will be the policy rigorously followed. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. I am inclined to think that instead of the question of Congress remaining in session being dependent at all upon the happiness and the good of the people it will depend upon what orders gentlemen get on the other side of the House from the White House. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a word. I have listened with interest to the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] and also to the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] and of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] on matters not germane to this bill. I want to say that I am heartily in accord with the idea of a large crop. I trust the Lord will send the rain, and that if there is an absence of rain we will substitute throughout the country the crops that do not need so much rain. But I believe the cotton season and the rice season and the wheat season—fall wheat—has about passed in the cotton and rice and spring wheat country. I am not quite sure, but I think the seeding is being done now.

If we would appropriate later or divert appropriations for the purchase of seeds and all that kind of thing I do not see that the money could be utilized for this year's crop. I would not refer to it except that I indorse all that was said by the gentleman from Oklahoma in behalf of publicity. I think the newspapers will give publicity to the farmers throughout the country who realize the necessity for the extraordinary production of all farm products during the coming season. Now, if $2 wheat and corn at $1.05 and $1.10 and 15-cent hogs and cattle, and ditto sheep, mutton, poultry, cotton, and rice, and so forth, and the high price of potatoes, the high price of everything, does not stimulate the farmer throughout the country, I do not know what will stimulate him. [Laughter.]

I indorse all that was said about the governor of Indiana. I live 6 miles from the Indiana line. I could not vote for him. If I had been 6 miles farther east I should have done so. I think all our governors, North and South, are doing their duty as best they can. I think the whole citizenship is doing its duty. The only reason why I took the floor for a minute was that I did not want the idea to get into the country that we are undertaking to relieve, even if it were not too late, the want of seed by Government appropriation. It is a vain thing. It can not be done for this season. I think that those who have not the seed can command the wherewith to get the seed from their neighbors, from their local capitalists, and fellow farmers, bankers, and so forth. I do not want anybody to fail in the practical getting of the necessary seed on account of the idea that they can fall back upon the Treasury and have the impossible accomplished from the Treasury at the beginning of the crop season, which is behind us in most of the country and will be behind us before the Government could act.

Mr. LEE of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a resolution passed by the Rockmart Camp of the Modern Woodmen of America.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the resolution to which he refers. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution is as follows:

A resolution offered by Mr. I. F. Mundy and unanimously passed by the Rockmart Camp of the Modern Woodmen of America:

"Whereas the Congress of the United States, of which the Hon. GORDON LEE is a Member, has passed a resolution declaring that a state of war exists between the United States of America and the Imperial Government of Germany; and

"Whereas the Hon. GORDON LEE, Congressman from the seventh district of Georgia, and the Hon. HOKE SMITH and the Hon. THOMAS W. HARDWICK, United States Senators from Georgia, together with the other Congressmen supported and voted for said resolution; and

"Whereas it is the sense of this body that our Representatives have acted wisely and patriotically in supporting the views and policies of our President in defending our national honor: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Rockmart Camp of the Modern Woodmen of America, That we do hereby pledge our undivided support to our National Government in the defense of our honor and integrity at home and upon the high seas, and that we commend our Congressmen and Senators for their hearty support in the impending crisis."

The foregoing resolution was unanimously adopted by said camp this the 5th day of April, 1917.

C. T. BURNETT, Venerable Consul.
J. C. SIMPSON, Secretary.

Mr. BRAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a resolution passed by the faculty of the oldest established State university in America, the University of Georgia.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution is as follows:

Resolved—

First. The Universitiy of Georgia, the first established of the State universities of America, throughout its history has consistently stood for the Christian virtues of peace on earth and good will toward men.

For a century and a quarter it has consistently, so far as its teachings and its influence might avail, upheld the sanctity of law and mutual respect and fair dealing among men.

Founded by patriots just emerged from the historic conflict by which our great Republic was established, it has as consistently endeavored to promote that love of freedom, truth, and justice which is the invaluable heritage of the American people.

Whilst eagerly desiring the blessings of peace within the borders of the Commonwealth and in the world at large, it has not scrupled to place larger emphasis on honor, truth, and righteousness.

At this present time of stress, when the liberties of the people seem threatened, when the honor of the Nation is at stake, when righteous dealing among the nations seems imperiled, the university, through its faculties, hereby offers to the State and to the Nation its loyal, patriotic, and unstinted services for whatsoever it may be able or be called upon to do.

Second. That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the governor of the State, the President of the United States, and to each Senator and Representative from Georgia in the Congress of the United States.

Third. That a copy be sent to each member of the board of trustees.

These resolutions were offered for adoption by the senior member of the faculties, the president of the Georgia Peace Society.

W. D. HOOPER, Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CRISP, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 122) making appropriations for certain expenses incident to the first session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendment to the final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. FITZGERALD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

UNIVERSAL MILITARY SERVICE.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of the special orders, I may have the privilege of addressing the House for one hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks that to-morrow, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, he be permitted to address the House for not to exceed one hour. Of course, this is not to be in the way of appropriation bills or anything of that sort. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Reserving the right to object, on what subject?

Mr. BORLAND. On the subject of universal service.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I object.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 28) authorizing the temporary employment of additional policemen for the Capitol Building and Grounds and the Senate and House Office Buildings.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 9 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 11, 1917, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, April 11, 1917.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, at this time of trial we feel the need as never before of Divine guidance and blessing. We look to Thee for Thy blessing upon us as we face the responsibilities of this day. After we have done all that human wisdom and prudence can do to preserve our peace and our liberty there yet remains the need of the touch of God to make vital and efficient the agencies that are at our command. We pray that there may be the consciousness of the Divine presence with us to-day and always. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

RAILROADS IN ALASKA (S. DOC. NO. 8).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate for the authorization of expenditures not exceeding $1,800 from appropriations made for the construction and operation of railroads of Alaska, etc., which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

TONNAGE TAX UPON TRANSPORTATION COMPANIES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication, which will be read and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The communication was read and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

THE STATE SAVINGS & TRUST CO.,
Indianapolis, April 9, 1917.

Hon. THOMAS R. MARSHALL,
Vice President United States, Washington, D. C.

My DEAR GOVERNOR: I have been reading with considerable interest the various methods suggested for raising by taxation the money needed to carry out our plans for preparation and defense, and unless it has already been considered would like to suggest the following:

Taxation is least offensive that is paid indirectly; in other words, a tax levied upon any article which is added to its cost is not objectionable because the buyer is unconscious of this when he purchases and pays the tax. Therefore any form of taxation that is of this indirect character would meet, it seems to me, few objections.

The tax that I am suggesting is a tonnage tax upon transportation companies; the only data that I have is up to 1913. At that time the gross tonnage hauled by the railroad was 1,144,840,303 tons; a tax of only 20 cents a ton would raise about $230,000,000. The railroads have so increased their tonnage this last year that I believe you could safely say that it would equal 1,400,000,000; added to this the lake and ocean transportation, for which I have no data, at 20 cents would raise about $350,000,000. But it would be more or less unfair to make a flat tonnage tax, because there is quite a difference in rates according to the classification list, and the tax should be based upon this rate classification.

Grain, the products of the mines, and timber represents the lowest class or about 80 per cent of all tonnage shipments, these being sixth class or special, and should therefore receive a low tax. Merchandise, manufactured goods, and live stock with the rest of the unclassified list represents the other 20 per cent, and could very safely bear higher tax.

It would seem to me that this could be worked out in detail so at least four or five hundred million of revenue could be raised and the burden so distributed among the people of the United States that no one would feel it painfully.

Further than this, this tax would be upon the activities of the country and these activities mean profits. Every shipment means a profit to some one, or the many interested in the channels through which they go, and therefore they are better able to pay this tax, although I presume the consumer will eventually have the bill to pay.

With kind regards, I am,
Yours, truly, E. H. WOLCOTT.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by E. T. Taylor, jr., one of its clerks, returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 28) authorizing the temporary employment of additional policemen for the Capitol Building and Grounds and Senate and House Office Buildings.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 122) making appropriations for certain expenses incident to the first session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, and for other purposes, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LODGE. I present a resolution of the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, 1917.

Resolutions in favor of a uniform eight-hour labor law.

Resolved, That the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts in General Court assembled favor the adoption of such an amendment to the Constitution of the United States as will enable Congress to enact a uniform eight-hour law, and urge Congress to propose such an amendment and submit the same to the several states for ratification.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent by the Secretary of the Commonwealth to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this Commonwealth.

In senate, adopted March 30, 1917.
In house of representatives, adopted, in concurrence, April 4, 1917.
A true copy. Attest:

ALBERT P. LANGTRY,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

Mr. LODGE. I present a certain resolution adopted by the town of Northfield, Mass., pledging support to the Government in the prosecution of the war with Germany, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NORTHFIELD, MASS., April 10, 1917.

Senator HENRY CABOT LODGE,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

The citizens of the town of Northfield, Mass., assembled in a patriotic meeting in their town hall on this the 7th day of April beg to express to you our loyalty as citizens in the following resolution:

"Whereas the President and Congress have declared that a state of war exists between the United States and the German Empire, and have thus summoned the citizens of the world's greatest democracy to take their stand by the side of the defenders of free institutions against the hostile forces of autocracy and are asking from every American community, large and small, its contribution to the national cause in men, money, and resources: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the citizens of Northfield, Mass., mindful and proud of the military and patriotic services of their fellow citizens in days gone by and eager to serve their country in the hour of need in such ways as an agricultural community may do, hereby pledge the land, labor, and the resources in men and money of this town to the President of the United States in his effort to uphold the honor and maintain the security of our country.

BENJAMIN F. FIELD,
FRANK L. DULEY,
A. F. D. ROSCOE,
H. PHILBRICK,
Committee on Resolutions.

Mr. LODGE. I present resolutions adopted by the wool dealers in Boston, Mass., pledging their support to the Government, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Boston, the largest wool market in the world, had a special meeting to-day, and its members, with ardent patriotism, turned out en masse, and without waiting for any appeal from the United States Government unanimously passed the following resolutions:

"Whereas the extraordinary emergency now confronting this country requires each and every one of us to do his part, not only in loyally and patriotically supporting the President and the National Government, but also to render such assistance as is possible in other ways; and

"Whereas the clothing of an enlarged Army and Navy will require large quantities of wool, we recognize the necessity of placing all available stocks of wool at the disposal of the Government for its needs: Therefore be it

"Resolved—

"First. That the members of the wool trade of Boston will neither buy nor sell any wool now in this country or in transit thereto until further notice from the committee appointed by this meeting;

"Second. That each will furnish a true inventory of all wool, wool tops, and noils owned or controlled on April 3 to said committee;

"Third. That the entire stock of wool, wool tops, and noils shall be offered to the United States Government at values current on April 2; and

"Fourth. That a committee of five, consisting of Jacob F. Brown, William E. Jones, Albert W. Elliott, William R. Cordingley, and John Wilcock, be chosen to handle all matters in connection with these resolutions and to cooperate with the proper authorities appointed to deal with the raw-wool supply."

F. NATHANIEL PERKINS,
Secretary.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have resolutions adopted by the Commercial Club and Chamber of Commerce, Tacoma, Wash., urging a gift by the Government of $1,000,000,000 to the Government of France. The meeting at which the resolutions were adopted, I am informed, was attended by 600 members of the club. I ask that the resolutions be printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the people of the Republic of France, one of the great civilized nations of the world, are now engaged in the throes of a mighty conflict involving her very existence as a nation and the perpetuation of her republican form of government; and

Whereas we, the members of the Tacoma Commercial Club and Chamber of Commerce of the city of Tacoma, State of Washington, believe that the minds and hearts of our fellow countrymen swell with gratitude when we remember the Revolutionary struggle of our forefathers and the voluntary aid and encouragement rendered and extended to us in our day of need by the people of France: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That as an expression of our gratitude and appreciation and the warm friendship now existing between the two nations, we do hereby recommend that our Government, with as little delay as possible, proceed to provide by an issue of bonds or otherwise the sum of $1,000,000,000, this money to be presented to the Government of France as a gift from the people of the United States of America for the cause of liberty, "that a government of, by, and for the people may not perish"; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to our Representatives in Congress, together with a request that immediate necessary action be taken to accomplish the purposes herein suggested.

Submitted by "The Tacome Home Guard."

APRIL 3, 1917.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask to have the telegram I send to the desk read by the Secretary, as it is from a man very active in military affairs in our State.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read the telegram, as follows:

TOPEKA, KANS., April 10, 1917.

Hon. CHARLES CURTIS,
Washington, D. C.:

Why is Kansas prevented from organizing guard units provided by defense act? Thousands actually clamoring to enlist; our quota efficiently officered can be enlisted in few days; our young men anxious to join guard for the war, but object to the Regulars; they want in Kansas organizations.

ALEX A. SHARP.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask to have printed in the RECORD a number of petitions and telegrams, but I do not care to have all the names printed.

There being no objection, the petitions and telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TOPEKA, KANS., April 10, 1917.

Senator CHARLES CURTIS,
Washington, D. C.:

Resolutions adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of Topeka, Kans., April 10:

"Whereas the Government of the United States has declared that a state of war exists, a war not of our own choosing, but rendered necessary by the arrogant, illegal, and inhuman course of the Imperial German Government; and

"Whereas it is imperative that this country prepare to defend itself and to protect its citizens on both land and sea, as well as to promote the principle of universal democracy: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the members of the Chamber of Commerce of Topeka hereby unhesitatingly and unequivocally indorse and commend the action taken by the President and Congress of the United States against the Imperial German Government, and that we pledge ourselves to uphold and maintain this action to whatever extent is demanded of us. And be it further

"Resolved, That we urge upon Congress the necessity of immediate legislation necessary to carry the war in which we are now engaged to a successful conclusion, and also the passage of whatever laws may seem necessary to provide for universal military training not with a view of becoming in any sense a military nation, but that we may be placed in a position to defend ourselves at all times against the aggressions of any and all enemies. And be it further

"Resolved, That we earnestly pledge ourselves to the support of the President in his recommendation for raising the armed forces necessary for this war by the application of the principle of general liability for service under the plan as proposed by the General Staff, and we believe that any attempt to rely upon the volunteer system in this great emergency would be productive of injustice and inefficiency and might result in grave peril to this Nation. And be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the Topeka Chamber of Commerce be, and hereby is, instructed to transmit a copy of these resolutions to the President of the United States and to each Member of the upper and lower Houses of Congress from the State of Missouri."

J. WILL. KELLY,
Secretary Topeka Chamber of Commerce.

TOPEKA, KANS., April 9, 1917.

CHARLES CURTIS,
Washington, D. C.:

We condemn the universal conscription of the American men as unpatriotic, un-American, an undemocratic act, as is leading to the same military spirit that the dynasties of the central powers of Europe have fastened upon their helpless subjects. The United States of America should rise above such dominion and trust to the manhood that has always been displayed by loyalty to flag, love of country, and perfection of humanity.

GOOD GOVERNMENT CLUB OF TOPEKA.

LAWRENCE, Kans., April 7, 1917.

Hon. CHARLES CURTIS,
Senate, Washington, D. C.:

At the organization of the Lawrence (Kans.) Rotary Club on one of our country's most momentous days, Friday, April 6, the rotarians in attendance from the first and second congressional districts of Kansas subscribed to the following oath of allegiance, and directed that a copy be sent to the President, the Senators, and the Congressmen from the first and second districts of Kansas:

"I, mindful of the solemn duty which confronts my country, hereby renew my undivided allegiance to the Government of the United States and reconsecrate myself to its great principles of justice and equality; and I do hereby solemnly swear that I will support the Constitutions of the United States and the State of Kansas and obey all lawful commands of those in charge of the affairs of my Government; and in furtherance of this obligation I hereby pledge my whole-hearted support to the President of the United States in his efforts to preserve to posterity the blessings of civilization."

STAFFORD, KANS., April 8, 1917.

Senator CURTIS,
Washington, D. C.:

Resolutions adopted by the citizens of Stafford and vicinity, State of Kansas, April 6, 1917:

"Whereas by the request of Governor Arthur Capper of the State of Kansas we have met to observe "loyalty day," and in this manner to express our loyalty to the President of the United States in such action as he shall take in the present national emergency: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the citizens of Stafford and vicinity hereby renew their allegiance to the Government of the United States of America and the flag of our country; and be it further

"Resolved, That we hereby pledge our support to the President and Congress in such action as they may deem essential for the protection of our country and the maintenance of its honor and integrity."

R. J. MCMULLEN,
E. A. BRILES,
NATE E. REECE,
Committee.

Be it resolved by the citizens of the city of Russell, Kans., and vicinity that we deem it the duty of every American citizen and every person claiming to be an American and believing in patriotism and love of the country and devotion to the flag, to loyally stand back of the President of these United States, the Hon. Woodrow Wilson, and, believing in these cardinal views, Russell demands that Congress now in session assembled back up the President in this most trying hour in the Nation's history, meeting the demands with the same high patriotism that has heretofore marked its highest statesmanship, and that a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

J. C. RUPPENTHAL, Chairman.

RUSSELL, KANS., April 3, 1917.

To the honorable Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States, Washington, D. C.:

We, the undersigned, all veterans of the great Civil War, most respectfully request you to frame and pass as soon as possible, a new pension law, for the reason that the pensions we are receiving under the present law are insufficient to sustain a pensioner, owing to the great increase in the cost of living.

T. S. JOHNSON
(And others).

Mr. FERNALD. I present resolutions adopted at a meeting of the Androscoggin Branch of the Maine Committee of Public Safety, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LEWISTON, ME., April 9, 1917.

Hon. BERT M. FERNALD,
Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I am inclosing with this a copy of resolutions adopted at a meeting of the Androscoggin Branch of the Maine Committee on Public Safety, held at Auburn, April 7, 1917.

The President has troubles of his own and has no time to even read these resolutions, but I think it will be well for you to know how we stand here in the county.

Very truly, yours,

WALTER H. SAWYER,
Secretary Androscoggin Branch,
Committee on Public Safety.

Whereas the Congress of the United States, in the exercise of the constitutional authority vested in them, have resolved by joint resolution of the Senate and House of Representatives "that a state of war exists between the United States and the Imperial German Government"; and

Whereas Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, has proclaimed that a state of war exists between the United States of America and the Imperial German Government: Now therefore

The members of the Androscoggin Branch of the Committee of Public Safety of the State of Maine, at a meeting held in Auburn in said county, on the 7th day of April, 1917, unanimously pledge to President Wilson loyal, undivided, and willing support in the prosecuting of the war to a successful termination, to the end that expediously a just, secure, and lasting peace may with honor be established, and that larger liberty and greater human happiness may be thereby insured to all the people of the earth.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask to have certain resolutions printed in the RECORD expressing loyalty to the President.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTION FROM CITIZENS OF TEMPLE, TEX.

The following message, with attached signatures, was telegraphed by W. Goodrich Jones to Senator MORRIS SHEPPARD, Senator CHARLES A. CULBERSON, and Congressman TOM CONNALLY yesterday afternoon. "Of course, it would have been just as easy to have secured a thousand signatures," said Mr. Jones, "but I just went out to get 25 representative men to put their names to the message as voicing the sentiment of the entire community." The telegram was as follows:

"We, the undersigned, do hereby respectfully call upon our Representatives in Congress from Texas to stand by the President in whatever final course he may deem it best to recommend to Congress as to what our attitude shall be toward Germany, and we candidly believe that in so expressing our own views we are voicing the unanimous sentiment of the people of this section of the State.

"John B. Daniel, Dr. J. M. Murphy, Dr. J. M. Woodson, Judge Sam D. Snodgrass, W. Goodrich Jones, H. C. Glenn, W. S. Rowland, G. E. McCelvey, A. C. Buchanan, W. E. Hall, George Houghton, Denison & Laramey, George W. White, E. K. Williams, C. Roddy, A. L. Flint, P. L. Downs, Reuben O. Culp, Maynard Robinson, E. W. L. Hartmann, A. J. Jarrell, J. J. Booker, J. C. Mitchell, Dr. J. K. Campbell, W. A. Brady, William Ginnuth, Dr. A. C. Scott, Rev. B. A. Hodges, W. O. Cox, K. S. Hull, F. A. Thompson, Bennett F. Smith, F. F. Downs."

BENEVOLENT AND PROTECTIVE ORDER OF ELKS, AUSTIN LODGE, NO. 201.

Whereas this Nation is facing one of the gravest crises in its history, as the culmination of a long series of studied insults to our flag and invasions and violations of American rights, including the ruthless destruction of property and the wanton sacrifice of human lives, and as a result now faces war with a foreign power; and

Whereas our great President, Woodrow Wilson, in behalf of this people, has endured and suffered with admirable fortitude these wrongs and outrages, and has with calm and unwavering patience sought with every means at his command to secure to us the blessings of peace with honor and to avert the calamity of war; and

Whereas the President, realizing that this situation has now become intolerable, has called Congress to assemble this day in special session to meet the emergency; and

Whereas we believe it is the duty of every loyal citizen, regardless of nationality, and of every patriotic organization in the land, to proclaim their allegiance to the common flag, their devotion to our institutions, and pride in our national traditions: Therefore be it

Resolved by Austin Lodge, No. 201, of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks of the United States of America, That we do hereby unreservedly indorse and approve the course of our President in the past, in his efforts for the protection of American rights and the upholding of our national honor and dignity, in his firm and courageous stand for military preparedness and the mobilizing of the Nation's resources for defense, and we accord to him our sympathy and support in his position at this hour, that the Nation can no longer, in self-respect and in the maintenance of its dignity and prestige before the world, submit to a continuance of the crimes and excesses perpetrated upon its citizens and its honor; and be it further

Resolved, That we pledge the President and the Government, in peace and in war, our support and unswerving loyalty as citizens and as members of a fraternal order, whose supreme and proudest attribute is fidelity; and we stand ready to give him and the country all practical assistance in our power, to the end that it shall always be the proudest boast of free men that, "I am an American citizen."

Resolved further, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the President, to our United States Senators, Hon. CHARLES A. CULBERSON and Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD, and Hon. J. P. BUCHANAN, our Representative from this district; and that the substance of these resolutions be wired to each at once.

Respectfully submitted.

JNO. W. BRADY,
F. E. RIGHTOR,
M. H. GOLDSMITH,
Committee.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I present a telegram which I think will have special interest for the Senate at this time and later. I particularly ask the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs and other members of that committee to it. It is from the governor of the State of Wisconsin, Emanuel L. Philipp.

The VICE PRESIDENT. For reading or for printing in the RECORD?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary read the telegram, as follows:

MADISON, WIS., April 10, 1917.

Hon. ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

I recommend that you oppose plan of conscription suggested by the General Staff and reported by the press as being urged upon Congress at this time. The State of Wisconsin stands ready to furnish its full quota of the National Guard as provided by the military-defense act of June 3, 1916, promptly, or any additional force required to meet the present requirements. We can recruit volunteers much faster than we are receiving equipment and supplies. The spirit of our troops will be much better if we adhere to the volunteer system, and we shall avoid sore spots at home if we defer conscription until it can be shown to be a military necessity. As I see it, public sentiment is not ready for compulsory military srevice, and I trust that nothing will be done by Congress that will make the war unnecessarily unpopular with the people.

EMANUEL L. PHILIPP, Governor.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present a few telegrams from organizations in my State, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ASHLAND, OREG., March 31, 1917.

Hon. GEORGE CHAMBERLAIN,
Washington, D. C.:

Ashland Lodge, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, No. 944, by resolution to-night desires you express to President that we favor most vigorous steps by this Government for maintaining honor and dignity of United States and rights of its citizens, both at home and abroad. We deem it the duty of every American citizen to uphold the President and Congress in placing the country in a state of preparedness at this serious time. Our members are ready at any time to perform every possible service this country may require. Resolution goes forward by mail.

J. EDW. THORNTON, Secretary.

ASTORIA, OREG., April 2, 1917.

OREGON DELEGATION,
Care Senator George E. Chamberlain, Washington, D. C.:

The following resolutions unanimously adopted by Astoria Lodge, No. 180, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks:

"Whereas the love of our country and fidelity to its institutions and its flag are the principal teachings of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. The altar of every lodge of Elks is always draped with the flag of our Nation, and upon it every member of our order at the time of his admission pledges fidelity to its principles and to the order, and every member of the order when received into membership is presented with a minature flag of our Nation and is taught its symbolism, its history, and its beauties: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we, the members of Astoria Lodge, No. 180, of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks in special session convened do hereby individually and collectively consecrate ourselves and renew our pledges of fidelity to our Nation, its institutions, and its flag. We do hereby tender to Hon. Woodrow Wilson, President of our great Nation, our united support in his efforts to maintain the dignity and integrity of our beloved country. We send to him our feeling of unbounded confidence in his patriotism and statesmanship. We commend him for his patriotic efforts in his endeavor to place our country in a state of preparedness by placing our Army and Navy in a sufficient state of efficiency to the end that to be known as an American citizen is the proudest fame to which any civilized man may aspire, while we trust that our peaceful and prosperous country may not in this great crisis through which it is passing be plunged into the horrors of international war. We do pledge ourselves that if that great misfortune should come upon us that we will use our every endeavor to uphold the hands of our honored President, both by our personal service in whatever capacity we may be called upon to serve, as well with our worldly possessions; that the honor and dignity of every American citizen may be maintained on every sea and on every civilized land; that Old Glory, bright and unsoiled, forever wave o'er the land of the free and the home of the brave."

J. C. CLINTON, Secretary.

ALBANY, OREG., April 2, 1917.

Senator GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN,
Washington, D. C.:

Be it resolved by Albany Lodge, No. 359, of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of Albany, Oreg., That the members of this lodge pledge their most loyal support to the President of the United States in his policy of administering the affairs of this country during these critical times: Be it further

Resolved, That we pledge our most hearty cooperation in support of the Government on land and sea, to the end that the traditions of our free institutions, the honor of our Nation, and the welfare of mankind may be defended and maintained.

ALBANY (OREG.) LODGE, NO. 359, B. P. O. ELKS.

OREGON CITY, OREG., April 2, 1917.

Senator GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN,
Washington, D. C.:

Following resolution was unanimously passed by Oregon City Lodge, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks:

"Resolved, That we stand squarely behind the President and the Congress of the United States in all their acts to prepare this country for any eventuality, and that we are ready and willing to make any sacrifices to defend our country and to keep its flag from dishonor."

GEO. E. SWAFFORF, Secretary.

PORTLAND, OREG., April 1, 1917.

Hon. GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

To express their confidence in the policies of President Wilson the Elks at a mass meeting last night incorporated a set of resolutions which will be forwarded to the Members of the Oregon delegation in Congress. The resolutions follow:

"Resolved, That Lodge No. 142 of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, which is wholly American in character, patriotic and benevolent, which has adopted the American flag as an emblem of the order, favor the most vigorous measures for maintaining the honor of the United States Government and the rights of its citizens, both at home and abroad;

"Resolved, That we deem it the duty of every American citizen to uphold the President and Congress of the United States in this crisis, and we denounce as unworthy of citizenship those who endeavor in any way to frustrate the efforts of this Government to place this country in a state of preparedness for the eventualities resulting from the present great war now raging in Europe;

"Resolved, That the members will be ready at any time to perform any service which this country may require of them;

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to our brother, Senator GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN, and the other members of the Oregon delegation in Congress, asking them to present it to the President with the assurance of our loyal support in any measures which this Government may take to defend its citizens on land or sea."

HARRY G. ALLEN,
Exalted Ruler, B. P. O. E. 142.

MARSHFIELD, OREG., April 1, 1917.

Senator GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN,
Care The Garland, Washington, D. C.:

This lodge has unanimously adopted a resolution in favor of preparedness and pledging its unqualified support to the President of the United States and reaffirming our obligations as Elks.

THOS. B. JAMES,
Exalted Ruler Marshfield Lodge, 1160, B. P. O. Elks.

MEDFORD, OREG., April 2, 1917.

Hon. GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN,
Washington, D. C.:

Two thousand citizens at mass meeting held here last night unanimously and enthusiastically indorsed President's stand against Germany and instructed us to wire you urging you to support legislation placing the entire resources of the country at his disposal to defend the Nation's honor and lives of citizens on the high seas.

E. E. KELLY,
P. J. NEFF.

ANACONDA, MONT., March 31, 1917.

Senator GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN,
Washington, D. C.:

The Spanish War veterans of this city who volunteered their services in the War with Spain believe that the voluntary system is wrong and un-American and that universal military service is the proper solution of military preparedness in this country.

CAMP NO. 6, U. S. V. A.,
FRED FISHER, Adjutant.

PORTLAND, OREG., April 3, 1917.

Hon. GEORGE CHAMBERLAIN,
Washington, D. C.:

Whereas the United States of America is on the threshold of a national crisis; and

Whereas the President and Congress are called upon to take such action as will safeguard and maintain the honor and dignity of this Nation: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Ancient Order of Hibernians of this city of Portland in meeting assembled pledges its undivided loyalty and support to the President in defense of our flag and the freedom of American institutions.

E. J. MURNAME, Secretary.
P. J. HANLEY, President.

Mr. THOMPSON presented petitions of Division No. 52, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and of Port Arthur Lodge, No. 149, International Association of Machinists, both of Pittsburg, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of food products, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Russell, Kans., declaring faith and allegiance and pledging support to the President and Congress of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Kansas, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of the Los Angeles (Cal.) Branch of the National Security League, praying for universal military training, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FRANCE. I present resolutions adopted by the Municipal Congress of the Eastern Shore of Maryland, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SALISBURY, MD., April 8, 1917.

Senator JOSEPH I. FRANCE,
Washington, D. C.:

Resolutions passed by the Municipal Congress of the Eastern Shore in session at Salisbury, Md., this 5th day of April, 1917:

"Resolved, That the Municipal Congress of the Eastern Shore of Maryland indorses the patriotic action of President Wilson and the Congress of the United States in so nobly upholding the dignity and honor of the country and our national self-respect in this hour of crisis in our international relations."

NAVIGABLE WATERS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have here a copy of an opinion by the Supreme Court of the United States with reference to navigable streams. I think it is a very important opinion in connection with the water-power legislation that Congress will have under consideration in the near future. I ask that the opinion may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The opinion is as follows:

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

[Nos. 84 and 718.—October term, 1916.]

IN ERROR TO THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF KENTUCKY.

United States, plaintiff in error, v. W. R. Cress. United States, plaintiff in error, v. Achilles Kelly, Green B. Kelly, jr., Lillian Kelly Crawford, et al.

[Mar. 12, 1917.]

Mr. Justice Pitney delivered the opinion of the court.

These cases were argued together, involve similar questions, and may be disposed of in a single opinion. They were actions brought in the district court by the respective defendants in error against the United States under the twentieth paragraph of section 24, Judicial Code (act of Mar. 3, 1911, c. 231, 36 Stat., 1087, 1093) to recover compensation for the taking of lands and water rights by means of backwater resulting from the construction and maintenance of the Government of certain locks and dams upon the Cumberland and Kentucky Rivers, respectively, in the State of Kentucky, in aid of the navigation upon those rivers.

In No. 84 the findings of the district court are, in substance, that at the time of the erection of Lock and Dam No. 21 in the Cumberland River the plaintiff was the owner of 189 acres of land on Whiteoak Creek, a tributary of the Cumberland, not far distant from the river; that by reason of the erection of the lock and dam 6.6 acres of this land are subject to frequent overflows of water from the river, so as to depreciate it one-half of its value, and a ford across Whiteoak Creek and a part of a passway are destroyed; that the 6.6 acres were worth $990, and the damage thereto was $495; that the damage to the land by the destruction of the ford was $500; and that plaintiff was entitled to recover the sum of $995. It may be supposed that Whiteoak Creek was not a navigable stream, but there is no finding on the subject.

In No. 718 the findings are to the effect that at the time of the erection by the Government of Lock and Dam No. 12 in the Kentucky River the plaintiffs, together with another person who was joined as a defendant, were the owners and in possession of a tract of land situate on Millers Creek, a branch of the Kentucky, containing 5½ acres, upon which there were a mill and a mill seat; that by reason of the erection of the lock and dam the mill no longer can be driven by water power; that the water above the lock and dam, when it is at pool stage, is about 1 foot below the crest of the mill dam, and this prevents the drop in the current that is necessary to run the mill; that no part of the land or mill is overflowed or covered by pool stage of water, nor is the mill physically damaged thereby; that Millers Creek is not a navigable stream; that the damage sustained by the owners of the mill, representing depreciation of the value of the mill property by cutting off the water power, amount to $1,500.

Judgments were entered in favor of the respective landowners for the sums mentioned in the findings, together with interest and the costs of the suits, and the United States appealed to this court.

(1) A fundamental contention made in behalf of the Government, and one that applies to both cases, is that the control by Congress, and the Secretary of War acting for it, over the navigation of the Cumberland and Kentucky Rivers, must also include control of their tributaries, and that in order to improve navigation at the places mentioned in the findings it was necessary to erect dams and back up the water, and the right to do this must include also the right to raise the water in the tributary streams.

In passing upon this contention we may assume, without however deciding, that the rights of defendants in error are no greater than if they had been riparian owners upon the rivers instead of upon the tributary creeks.

The States have authority to establish for themselves such rules of property as they may deem expedient with respect to the streams of water within their borders, both navigable and nonnavigable, and the ownership of the lands forming their beds and banks (Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S., 324, 338; Packer v. Bird, 137 U. S., 661, 671; Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. S., 371, 382; Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S., 1, 40, 58; Water Power Co. v. Water Commissioners, 168 U. S., 349, 358), subject, however, in the case of navigable streams, to the paramount authority of Congress to control the navigation so far as may be necessary for the regulation of commerce among the States and with foreign nations (Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S., 1, 40; Gibson v. United States, 166 U. S., 269, 272; Scott v. Lattig, 227 U. S., 229, 243); the exercise of this authority being subject, in its turn, to the inhibition of the fifth amendment against the taking of private property for public use without just compensation (Monongahela Navigation Co. v. United States, 148 U. S., 312, 336; United States v. Lynah, 188 U. S., 445, 465, 471).

The State of Kentucky, like most of the States of the Union, determines the navigability of her streams, so far as the public right is concerned, not by the common-law test of the ebb and flow of the tide—manifestly inapplicable in a State so wholly remote from the sea—but by the test of navigability in fact (Thurman v. Morrison, 53 Ky. (14 B. Mon.), 367 (2d ed. p. 296); Morrison v. Thurman, 56 Ky. (17 B. Mon.), 249; Goodin's Ex'rs v. Kentucky Lumber Co., 90 Ky., 625; Murray v. Preston, 106 Ky., 561, 564; Banks v. Frazier, 111 Ky., 909, 912; Ireland v. Bowman & Cockrell, 130 Ky., 153, 161), while sustaining private ownership of the beds of her streams, both navigable and nonnavigable, according to the common-law rule (Berry v. Snyder, 66 Ky. (3 Bush), 266, 273, 277; Miller v. Hepburn, 71 Ky. (8 Bush), 326, 331; Williamsburg Boom Co. v. Smith, 84 Ky., 372, 374; Wilson v. Watson, 141 Ky., 324, 327; Robinson v. Wells, 142 Ky., 800, 804), with incidental rights to the flow of the stream in its natural state (Anderson v. Cincinnati Southern Railway, 86 Ky., 44, 48).

The general rule that private ownership of property in the beds and waters of navigable streams is subject to the exercise of the public right of navigation, and the governmental control and regulation necessary to give effect to that right, is so fully established, and is so amply illustrated by recent decisions of this court, that a mere reference to the cases will suffice. (Scranton v. Wheeler, 179 U. S., 141, 163; Philadelphia Co. v. Stimson, 223 U. S., 605, 634; United States v. Chandler-Dunbar Co., 229 U. S., 53, 62; Lewis Blue Point Oyster Co. v. Briggs, 229 U. S., 82, 85, 88; Greenleaf Lumber Co. v. Garrison, 237 U. S., 251, 268; Willink v. United States, 240 U. S., 572, 580.)

But this rule, like every other, has its limits, and in the present cases, which require us to ascertain the dividing line between public and private right, it is important to inquire what are "navigable streams" within the meaning of the rule.

In Kentucky, and in other States that have rejected the common-law test of tidal flow and adopted the test of navigability in fact, while recognizing private ownership of the beds of navigable streams, numerous cases have arisen where it has been necessary to draw the line between public and private right in waters alleged to be navigable; and by an unbroken current of authorities it has become well established that the test of navigability in fact is to be applied to the stream in its natural condition, not as artificially raised by dams or similar structures; that the public right is to be measured by the capacity of the stream for valuable public use in its natural condition; that riparian owners have a right to the enjoyment of the natural flow without burden or hindrance imposed by artificial means, and no public easement beyond the natural one can arise without grant or dedication save by condemnation with appropriate compensation for the private right. Cases exemplifying these propositions are cited in a marginal note. (Wadsworth v. Smith, 11 Me., 278, 281; Brown v. Chadbourne, 31 Me., 9, 21; Treat v. Lord, 42 Me., 552, 561–562; Pearson v. Rolfe, 76 Me., 380, 385; Moore v. Sanborne, 2 Mich., 519, 523–524; Thunder Bay Booming Co. v. Speechly, 31 Mich., 336, 343, 345; Witheral v. Booming Co., 68 Mich., 48, 58–59; Improvement Co. v. Lumber Co., 69 Mich., 207, 212, 213; Koopman v. Blodgett, 70 Mich., 610, 616; Goodin's Ex'rs v. Kentucky Lumber Co., 90 Ky., 625, 627; Murray v. Preston, 106 Ky., 561, 565; Banks v. Frazier, 111 Ky., 909, 912; Morgan v. King, 35 N. (75 Hun.), 562, 566; Weise v. Smith, 3 Oreg., 445, 449; Goodwill v. Police Jury, 38 La. Ann., 752, 755; Smith & Hambrick v. Fonda, 64 Miss., 551, 554; East Hoquiam Boom Co. v. Neeson, 20 Wash., 142, 146; Stuart v. Clark's Lessee, 32 Tenn. (2 Swan), 9, 16; Irwin v. Brown, 3 Tenn. Cas., 309; Webster v. Harris, 111 Tenn., 668, 677; Little Rock, Mississippi River & Texas Ry. Co. v. Brooks, 39 Ark., 403, 409.) We have found no case to the contrary. An apparent but not a real exception is the New York case of Canal Appraisers v. People ex rel. Tibbitts (1836, 17 Wend., 571), where the decision was rested (pp. 609, 612, 624) upon the ground that the bed of the Mohawk River was the property of the State; the authority of the case having been limited accordingly by later decisions of the court of last resort of that State. (Comm'rs of Canal Fund v. Kempshall, 26 Wend., 404, 416; Child v. Starr, 4 Hill, 369, 372; Fort Plain Bridge Co. v. Smith, 30 N. Y., 44, 63; Smith v. City of Rochester, 92 N. Y., 463, 482; Fulton L. H. & P. Co. v. State, 200 N. Y., 400, 413.)

Many State courts, including the Court of Appeals of Kentucky, have held, also, that the legislature can not, by simple declaration that a stream shall be a public highway, if in fact it be not navigable in its natural state, appropriate to public use the private rights therein without compensation. (Morgan v. King, 18 Barb., 277, 284; 35 N. Y., 454, 459, 461; Chenango Bridge Co. v. Paige, 83 N. Y., 178, 185; Murray v. Preston, 106 Ky., 561, 563; Stuart v. Clark's Lessee, 32 Tenn. (2 Swan), 9, 17; Walker & Fulton v. Board of Public Works, 16 Ohio, 540, 544; Olive v. The State, 86 Ala., 88, 92; People v. Elk River M. & L. Co., 107 Cal., 221, 224. And see Thunder Bay Booming Co. v. Speechly, 31 Mich., 336, 345; Koopman v. Blodgett, 70 Mich., 610, 616.)

This court has followed the same line of distinction. That the test of navigability in fact should be applied to streams in their natural condition was in effect held in the Daniel Ball (10 Wall., 557), a case which turned upon the question whether Grand River, in the State of Michigan, was one of the "navigable waters of the United States" within the meaning of acts of Congress that regulated vessels carrying merchandise and passengers upon such waters. Mr. Justice Field, speaking for the court, after showing that the tidal test was not applicable in this country, said (p. 563): "A different test must, therefore, be applied to determine the navigability of our rivers, and that is found in their navigable capacity. Those rivers must be regarded as public navigable rivers in law which are navigable in fact. And they are navigable in fact when they are used, or are susceptible of being used, in their ordinary condition as highways for commerce, over which trade and travel are or may be conducted in the customary modes of trade and travel on water." The point was set forth more clearly in The Montello (20 Wall., 430), where the question was whether Fox River, in the State of Wisconsin, was a navigable water of the United States within the meaning of the acts of Congress. There were rapids and falls in the river, but the obstructions caused by them had been removed by artificial means so as to furnish uninterrupted water communication for steam vessels of considerable capacity. It was argued (p. 440) that although the river might now be considered a highway for commerce conducted in the ordinary modes, it was not so in its natural state, and therefore was not a navigable water of the United States within the purview of the Daniel Ball decision. The court, accepting navigability in the natural state of the river as the proper test, proceeded to show that, even before the improvements resulting in an unbroken navigation were undertaken, a large and successful interstate commerce had been carried on through this river by means of Durham boats, which were vessels from 70 to 100 feet in length, with 12 feet beam, and drawing when loaded from 2 to 2½ feet of water. The court, by Mr. Justice Davis, declared (p. 441) that it would be a narrow rule to hold that in this country unless a river was capable of being navigated by steam or sail vessels it could not be treated as a public highway. "The capability of use by the public for purposes of transportation and commerce affords the true criterion of the navigability of a river, rather than the extent and manner of that use. If it be capable in its natural state of being used for purposes of commerce, no matter in what mode the commerce may be conducted, it is navigable in fact and becomes in law a public river or highway." And again (p. 443): "There are but few of our fresh-water rivers which did not originally present serious obstructions to an uninterrupted navigation. In some cases, like the Fox River, they may be so great while they last as to prevent the use of the best instrumentalities for carrying on commerce, but the vital and essential point is whether the natural navigation of the river is such that it affords a channel for useful commerce. If this be so the river is navigable in fact, although its navigation may be encompassed with difficulties by reason of natural barriers, such as rapids and sand bars." Numerous decisions of State courts were cited as supporting this view, including some of those to which we have referred.

Pumpelly v. Green Bay Co. (13 Wall., 166) involved the right to compensation for land overflowed with backwater from a dam erected and maintained in the Fox River, under authority of the State of Wisconsin, for the improvement of navigation. (A permissible exercise of State power, in the absence of action by Congress, although it was an interstate navigable water. Willson v. Black Bird Creek Marsh Co., 2 Pet., 245, 251; Gilman v. Philadelphia, 3 Wall., 713.) The raising of the river above its natural stage by means of an artificial structure was the gravamen of the complaint. It was argued (p. 174) that the State might, in the interest of the public, "erect such works as may be deemed expedient for the purpose of improving the navigation and increasing usefulness of a navigable river, without rendering itself liable to individuals owning land bordering on such river, for injuries to their lands resulting from their overflow by reason of such improvements." This court overruled the contention and held there was a taking without compensation contrary to the applicable provision of the constitution of Wisconsin.

In the United States v. Lynah (188 U. S., 445) the same principle was applied in the case of an operation by the Government of the United States. For the improvement of the navigation of the Savannah River certain dams and other obstructions were placed and maintained in its bed, with the result of raising the water above its natural height and backing it up against plaintiffs' embankment upon the river and interfering with the drainage of their plantation. This was held (pp. 465, 471) to be a taking of private property, requiring compensation under the fifth amendment, notwithstanding the work was done by the Government in improving the navigation of a navigable river. The raising of the water above its natural level was held to be an invasion of the private property thereby flowed.

In several other cases the limitation of the public right to the natural state of the stream has been recognized. (Packer v. Bird, 137 U. S., 661, 667; United States v. Rio Grande Irrigation Co., 174 U. S., 690, 698; Leovy v. United States, 177 U. S., 621, 631.)

It follows from what we have said that the servitude of privately owned lands forming the banks and bed of a stream to the interests of navigation is a natural servitude, confined to such streams as in their ordinary and natural condition are navigable in fact, and confined to the natural condition of the stream. And, assuming that riparian owners upon nonnavigable tributaries of navigable streams are subject to such inconveniences as may arise from the exercise of the common right of navigation, this in like manner must be limited to the natural right. The findings make it clear that the dams in question, constructed by the Government in the Cumberland and Kentucky Rivers, respectively, are for raising the level of those streams along certain stretches by means of backwater, so as to render them, to the extent of the raising, artificial canals instead of natural waterways. In the language of engineering, the Government has "canalized" the rivers. We intimate no doubt of the power of the United States to carry out this kind of improvement. Nor do we doubt that, upon the completion of the improvements, these rivers—the Cumberland because it is an avenue of communication between two States; the Kentucky and also the the Cumberland because, in connection with the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, they furnish highways of commerce among many States (Gilman v. Philadelphia, 3 Wall., 713, 725; the Daniel Ball, 10 Wall, 557, 563; South Carolina v. Georgia, 93 U. S., 4, 10)—remained navigable waters of the United States for all purposes of Federal jurisdiction and regulation, notwithstanding the artificial character of the improvements. (Ex Parte Boyer, 109 U. S., 629, 632; the Robert W. Parsons, 191 U. S., 17, 28.)

But the authority to make such improvements is only a branch of the power to regulate interstate and foreign commerce, and, as already stated, this power, like others, must be exercised, when private property is taken, in subordination to the fifth amendment. (Monongahela Navigation Co. v. United States, 148 U. S., 312, 336; United States v. Lynah, 188 U. S., 445, 465, 471.) And we deem it clear that so much of the properties of the respective defendants in error as was unaffected by the flow of the rivers or their tributaries prior to the construction of the locks and dams in question was private property and not subject to be overflowed without compensation in the raising of the level of the rivers by means of artificial dams.

These cases have no proper relation to cases such as Gibson v. United States (166 U. S., 269), where no water was thrown back on claimant's land, and the damage was confined to an interference with the access thence to the navigable portion of the river; Scranton v. Wheeler (179 U. S., 141, 153), which likewise had to do with the interruption of access from riparian land to a navigable channel; Bedford v. United States (192 U. S., 217, 225), where the damage to claimant's land resulted from operations conducted by the Government 6 miles farther up the river; Jackson v. United States (230 U. S., 1, 23), where owners of lands on the east bank of the Mississippi claimed compensation as for a taking of their property by reason of the effect of levees built on the west bank opposite their lands as a part of a system of levees designed to prevent crevasses, retain the water in the river, and thus improve the navigation. In each of these there was no direct invasion of the lands of the claimants, the damages were altogether consequential, and the right to compensation was denied on that ground.

2. It is contended in No. 84 that the damage to Cress's land by the overflow of 6.6 acres, because it depreciated its value only to the extent of one-half, does not measure up to a taking, but is only a "partial injury," for which the Government is not liable. The findings, however, render it plain that this is not a case of temporary flooding or of consequential injury, but a permanent condition, resulting from the erection of the lock and dam, by which the land is "subject to frequent overflows of water from the river." That overflowing lands by permanent backwater is a direct invasion amounting to a taking is settled by pumpelly v. Green Bay Co. (13 Wall., 166, 177); United States v. Lynah (188 U. S., 445, 468–470). It is true that in the Pumpelly case there was an almost complete destruction, and in the Lynah case a complete destruction, of the value of the lands, while in the present case the value is impaired to the extent of only one-half. But it is the character of the invasion, not the amount of damage resulting from it, so long as the damage is substantial, that determines the question whether it is a taking. As the court said, speaking by Mr. Justice Brewer, in United States v. Lynah (188 U. S., 445, 470): "Where the Government by the construction of a dam or other public works so floods lands belonging to an individual as to substantially destroy their value there is a taking within the scope of the fifth amendment. While the Government does not directly proceed to appropriate the title, yet it takes away the use and value; when that is done it is of little consequence in whom the fee may be vested. Of course, it results from this that the proceeding must be regarded as an actual appropriation of the land, including the possession, the right of possession, and the fee; and when the amount awarded as compensation is paid the title, the fee, with whatever rights may attach thereto—in this case those at least which belong to a riparian proprietor—pass to the Government and it becomes henceforth the owner." There is no difference of kind, but only of degree, between a permanent condition of continual overflow by backwater and a permanent liability to intermittent but inevitably recurring overflows; and, on principle, the right to compensation must arise in the one case as in the other. If any substantial enjoyment of the land still remains to the owner, it may be treated as a partial instead of a total divesting of his property in the land. The taking by condemnation of an interest less than the fee is familiar in the law of eminent domain. Where formal proceedings are initiated by the party condemning, it is usual and proper to specify the precise interest taken, where less than the fee. But where, as in this case, the property owner resorts to the courts, as he may, to recover compensation for what actually has been taken upon the principle that the Government by the very act of taking impliedly has promised to make compensation because the dictates of justice and the terms of the fifth amendment so require (United States v. Great Falls Mfg. Co., 112 U. S., 645, 656; United States v. Lynah, 188 U. S., 445, 465), and it appears that less than the whole has been taken and is to be paid for, such a right or interest will be deemed to pass as is necessary fairly to effectuate the purpose of the taking; and where, as in this case with respect to the 6.6 acres, land is not constantly but only at intervals overflowed, the fee may be permitted to remain in the owner, subject to an easement in the United States to overflow it with water as often as necessarily may result from the operation of the lock and dam for purposes of navigation.

3. In No. 84 some question is made about the allowance for the damage to the land by the destruction of the ford across Whiteoak Creek and the pass way, but we deem the objection substantial. It is said there is nothing to show how Cress acquired ownership of the ford and that it does not appear that he had a right to pass over the adjoining land of one Brown. It seems to us, however, that the findings, while meager, sufficiently import that Cress had a right to a private way and ford as appurtenant to his land and that the damage to the land by the destruction of the ford was $500. This brings the case squarely within United States v. Welch (217 U. S., 333, 339) and United States v. Grizzard (219 U. S., 180, 184, 185).

4. In No. 718 there is a contention that because the backwater is confined to Millers Creek it does not amount to a taking of land. But the findings render it plain that it had the necessary effect of raising the creek below the dam to such an extent as to destroy the power of the milldam that was essential to the value of the mill, or, as the findings put it, "The water above the lock and dam, when it is at pool stage, is about 1 foot below the crest of the milldam, which prevents the drop in the current which is necessary to run the mill." Under the law of Kentucky ownership of the bed of the creek, subject only to the natural flow of the water, is recognized as fully as ownership of the mill itself. The right to have the water flow away from the milldam unobstructed, except as in the course of nature, is not a mere easement or appurtenance, but exists by the law of nature as an inseparable part of the land. A destruction of this right is a taking of a part of the land. (Gardner v. Village of Newburg, 2 Johns. Ch., 162, 166; Tyler v. Wilkinson, 4 Mason, 397; Fed. Case No. 14, 312; 24 Fed. Cas., 472, 474; Johnson v. Jordan, 2 Metc., 234, 239; Wadsworth v. Tillotson, 15 Conn., 366, 373; Parker v. Griswold, 17 Conn., 288, 299; Harding v. Stamford Water Co., 41 Conn., 87, 92; Holsman v. Boiling Spring Bleaching Co., 14 N. J. Eq., 335, 343; Beach v. Sterling Iron & Zinc Co., 54 N. J. Eq., 65, 73; Scriver v. Smith, 100 N. Y., 471, 480; Crook v. Hewitt, 4 Wash., 749, 754; Rigney v. Tacoma Light & Water Co., 9 Wash., 576, 583; Benton v. Johncox, 17 Wash., 277, 281; Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal., 255, 390; Hargrave v. Cook, 108 Cal., 72, 77; Pine v. Mayor, etc., of City of New York, 103 Fed., 337, 339; 112 Fed., 98, 103; Wood v. Waud, 3 Exch., 748, 775; Dickinson v. Grand Junction Canal Co., 7 Exch., 282, 299; Stokoe v. Singers, 8 El. & Bl., 31, 36, Erle, J.)

(5) In both cases it is urged that there was error in allowing costs against the Government. Section 24 (20) of the Judicial Code, under which the suits were brought, originated in the provisions of the so-called Tucker Act of March 3, 1887, chapter 359, Twenty-fourth Statutes, 505, and the argument of the Government is that while under section 15 of that act costs were recoverable against the United States, in the district court as in the Court of Claims, yet that section 297, Judicial Code, repealed all of the Tucker Act with the exception of sections 4, 5, 6, 7, and 10, which relate to matters of procedure, and that there is no longer any authority of law for allowing costs against the United States in suits brought in the district court. The fact is that section 297, Judicial Code, besides the clause repealing the Tucker Act with the exceptions mentioned, contains in its final paragraph a repeal of "all other acts and parts of acts, in so far as they are embraced within and superseded by this act." Now, not only is the provision of section 2 of the Tucker act, conferring upon the district courts concurrent jurisdiction with the Court of Claims over certain claims against the United States, carried into section 24 (20) of the code, but the provision of section 15 of the Tucker Act for the allowance of costs against the Government is carried in as section 152. It is true that section 24 (20) is a part of chapter 2 of the code, entitled "District courts—Jurisdiction," while section 152 is a part of chapter 7, entitled "The Court of Claims." But by sections 294 and 295 it is declared and enacted as follows:

"SEC. 294. The provisions of this act, so far as they are substantially the same as existing statutes, shall be construed as continuations thereof, and not as new enactments, and there shall be no implication of a change of intent by reason of a change of words in such statute, unless such change of intent shall be clearly manifest.

"SEC. 295. The arrangement and classification of the several sections of this act have been made for the purpose of a more convenient and orderly arrangement of the same, and therefore no inference or presumption of a legislative construction is to be drawn by reason of the chapter under which any particular section is placed."

From this it is plain that section 152 of the code applies to suits in the district courts as well as to those in the Court of Claims.

Judgments affirmed.

Mr. Justice McReynolds took no part in the consideration or decision of these cases.

INCREASED FARM PRODUCTS.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I have here a letter from one of the citizens of my State calling attention to the importance of growing larger areas of crops. I ask that I may proceed for a minute or two in my own explanation and then I shall ask to have the letter read.

Mr. President, as one of the many citizens of this country who has protested against war, I wish to call to the attention of the Senate one or two things which I deem to be of the greatest importance at this time.

Our country is now at war with a powerful European nation. There is but one course for us to pursue. Every loyal citizen of our Government must show his loyalty and patriotism by actual deeds and not by mere words; to be able to do so selfishness, greed, and hatred must be eliminated. Our best efforts must now be directed as patriotic citizens glad and willing to do our full duty. Each and every individual citizen will, I hope, realize that he has a solemn duty to perform, whether on the field of battle or at home We now have a tremendous responsibility to carry out. The great financiers of our land must cooperate with the laborer. The owner of the factory, like the owner of the farm, should have but one purpose in view, and that purpose must be to do everything in his power and to sacrifice upon the altar of freedom his every effort and everything at his command for the benefit of our people and maintenance and preservation of our country.

In carrying out this tremendous responsibility the producer of foodstuff, or the farmer, should willingly and ungrudgingly do his part, and I am sure that he will do it when his attention is called to the importance of planting larger areas of all kinds of crops in order that the people will be supplied with all kinds of foodstuff as cheaply as the cost of production will permit.

I ask that the letter may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the letter.

The Secretary read the letter, as follows:

NEW YORK, April 10, 1917.

Senator A. J. GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have been thinking about the food question and the great necessity of raising as much grain as possible this year. It strikes me that this country can best assist the allies in our common purpose in two or three ways:

First. Raise all grain possible, so as to relieve allies of food worry.

Second. Manufacture of munitions, so as to keep allies supplied with same as needed.

Third. Patrol the Atlantic coast, so as to relieve allies' ships of that duty.

And it seems to me the first is, if anything, the most important. To do this, it seems to me, there should at once be organized a department to see that every possible acre of land adapted to grain raising should be sown this spring.

Take North Dakota. There should be some man in charge of the State. Under him should be a man in charge of each county, and under him a man in charge of each township. A survey should be made at once of each township; each farmer should be seen, and a card index made showing his name; address; age; size of family; number of acres in his farm; number available for grain; number already plowed; what tools and machinery he has; what help he has; and what he requires to put in every acre of his tillable land; how much seed and feed he has on hand; how many work horses he has; and such other general information as may be deemed necessary.

As you must know, last year's wheat is in many instances not fit for seed. Many farmers are short of seed, which is scarce and high in price. Many will be discouraged about seeding all their land. This must be overcome. This survey must find who needs seed and who has seed, and must see that each farmer gets necessary seed at a fair price; no extortionate prices to be permitted. Where farm help is needed, it must be immediately supplied, to the end that the crop is sown. Time is limited, as the crop must be gotten in during the next 30 days if we are to have enough to eat next year. And with a duty on this country to feed its own population, of which it is contemplated one to two million shall be withdrawn from the active fields of labor and production, as well as to assist to the extent of its ability in supplying the allies with food, it seems to me that it is absolutely necessary that every effort be made to have all of North Dakota's fertile acres seeded to the nonperishable crops for which she is justly noted—wheat, oats, barley, rye, and corn.

This same plan of organization should be carried out to harvest and secure the crop. Labor in North Dakota is not overplenty now. The help problem on the farm is already a serious one. This organization must act as a labor bureau where our farmers may apply for such extra help as may be needed to harvest and thrash the crops this fall.

In bringing about this organization our men over military age who have a capacity and an ability along this line of organization should be made use of as a patriotic duty, with small pay, if any. They should be and doubtless would be glad to serve their country in this way. I assure you of my own willingness to assist to the extent of my ability.

It seems to me that in the grain-raising States immediate action is absolutely necessary. Otherwise I fear we shall not get nearly all of our available tillable land into grain crops this year, and it will be 12 long months before planting time comes round again.

Sincerely, yours,

OSCAR J. SEILER,
Jamestown, N. Dak.

GREAT BRITAIN MILITARY SERVICE ACTS OF 1916.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a public document the Great Britain military service acts. They are of date January, 1916, and May, 1916. Of course, if they have already been printed, I shall not make the request, but I do not understand that they have been.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest that the document had better be referred to the Committee on Printing, and then we will be able to find out whether they have been printed or not.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am willing that that shall be done. I am only anxious that the matter shall be printed as a public document, if that has not already been done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The matter will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. TILLMAN:

A bill (S. 1587) to increase the number of midshipmen in the Naval Academy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. RANSDELL:

A bill (S. 1588) to foster commerce between the United States and foreign countries by facilitating the reexportation in bond from ports of the United States of goods imported into the United States, duly entered for warehousing and stored in bonded warehouses; to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (S. 1589) making appropriation for the construction of a roadway and walks leading to and around the Chalmette Monument, Chalmette, La.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 1590) providing for an increase of salary for the United States marshals and for the United States district attorneys for the western and eastern districts of Louisiana; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 1591) to permit the purchase of certain public lands in Louisiana at private sale; and

A bill (S. 1592) for the relief of settlers within the limits of the grant to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge & Vicksburg Railroad Co.; to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. 1593) to promote the safety of employees and travelers on railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their cars with automatic adjustable fire extinguishers, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 1594) to amend the act to regulate commerce as amended, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

A bill (S. 1595) to promote the efficiency of the Public Health Service;

A bill (S. 1596) appropriating $500,000 for the use of the United States Public Health Service in encouraging rural sanitation, with special reference to the prevention and suppression of malaria and typhoid fever;

A bill (S. 1597) to provide a Division of Tuberculosis in, and an advisory council for, the United States Public Health Service, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 1598) to provide divisions of mental hygiene and rural sanitation in the United States Public Health Service; to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

A bill (S. 1599) for the relief of the heirs of Mrs. Susan A. Nicholas;

A bill (S. 1600) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to readjudicate the case of Albert H. Gillespie against the United States, No. 30777, on the docket of said court;

A bill (S. 1601) for the relief of the legal representatives of the estate of Alphonse Desmare, deceased, and others;

A bill (S. 1602) for the relief of the estate of Thomas F. Swafford, deceased;

A bill (S. 1603) for the relief of the legal representatives of Lapene and Ferre;

A bill (S. 1604) for the relief of the legal representatives of George E. Payne, deceased;

A bill (S. 1605) for the relief of the legal representatives of Patrick Wood and Margaret Wood Delany, deceased.

A bill (S. 1606) for the relief of James M. Morgan,

A bill (S. 1607) for the relief of the heirs of Isabella Ann Fluker; and

A bill (S. 1608) for the relief of the New Orleans-Belize Royal Mail & Central American Steamship Co., of New Orleans, La.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SHAFROTH:

A bill (S. 1609) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. WALSH:

A bill (S. 1610) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. PHELAN:

A bill (S. 1611) for the erection of a public building at the city of Auburn, State of California, and appropriating moneys therefor; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

A bill (S. 1612) granting a pension to William F. Rogers (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 1613) making appropriation for publishing the name, service, and post-office address of persons who were granted pensions on account of service in the Revolutionary War; to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. HARDING:

A bill (S. 1614) granting an increase of pension to Georgianna Thomas;

A bill (S. 1615) granting an increase of pension to Thomas J. Gafford; and

A bill (S. 1616) granting an increase of pension to Annie M. Shell; to the Committee on pensions.

By Mr. CUMMINS:

A bill (S. 1617) granting to the State of Iowa all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the land within the meander lines, as originally surveyed, of the lakes within said State; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 1618) to reimburse J. Mandelbaum & Sons, of Des Moines, Iowa, for certain duties paid in excess; to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (S. 1619) to correct the military record of Jerome Chilson;

A bill (S. 1620) donating a bronze or brass condemned cannon to Crocker Post, Grand Army of the Republic, at Des Moines, Iowa, for cemetery purposes;

A bill (S. 1621) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of William M. Carroll; and

A bill (S. 1622) to correct the military record of T. J. Shropshire; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 1623) to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as heretofore amended, and to further regulate commerce among the States and with foreign countries;

A bill (S. 1624) to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their locomotives with safe and suitable boilers and appurtenances thereto," approved February 17, 1911; and

A bill (S. 1625) concerning baggage and excess baggage carried by common carriers in the District of Columbia and the Territories, and common carriers while engaged in commerce between the States and between the States and foreign nations, and prescribing the duties of such common carriers in reference thereto while so engaged, defining certain offenses and fixing the punishment therefor, and repealing all conflicting laws; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

A bill (S. 1626) to amend section 8 of an act entitled "An act to amend the laws for preventing collision of vessels, and to regulate the equipment of certain motor boats on the navigable waters of the United States," approved June 9, 1910; to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill (S. 1627) to amend an act entitled "An act granting pensions to certain enlisted men, soldiers, and officers, who served in the Civil War and the War with Mexico," approved May 11, 1912;

A bill (S. 1628) granting a pension to Eliza J. Mosher, widow of Albert A. Mosher;

A bill (S. 1629) granting pensions to soldiers, sailors, and marines confined in Confederate prisons; and

A bill (S. 1630) to extend the provisions of the act of June 27, 1902, entitled "An act to extend the provisions, limitations, and benefits of an act entitled 'An act granting pensions to the survivors of the Indian wars of 1832 to 1842, inclusive, known as the Black Hawk War, Cherokee disturbance, and the Seminole War,' approved July 27, 1892"; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 1631) increasing the pay of certain enlisted men in the military and naval service of the United States during the continuance of the war with Germany, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SHIELDS:

A bill (S. 1632) to suppress the sale of pistols, revolvers, and other firearms of like form, size, and description, commonly used in the commission of felonious homicides and assaults, and to provide punishment for violation of the provisions of the same;

A bill (S. 1633) to amend section 162 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911; and

A bill (S. 1634) to amend section 162 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the Judiciary, approved March 3, 1911; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 1635) to appropriate $500,000 to aid the Andrew Jackson Memorial Association in the erection of a monument at Nashville, Tenn., to commemorate the life, character, and services of Andrew Jackson; to the Committee on the Library.

A bill (S. 1636) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to Lewisburg, Marshall County, Tenn., three brass cannon, with carriage; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CURTIS:

A bill (S. 1637) to reinstate Frederick J. Birkett as third lieutenant in the United States Revenue Cutter Service; to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill (S. 1638) for the relief of James L. Wallace, his heirs or assigns; to the Committee on Indian Depredations.

A bill (S. 1639) for the relief of Matthew McDonald; and

A bill (S. 1640) to correct the naval record of Reuben E. Lawrence; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (S. 1641) for the relief of the heirs of Daniel W. Boutwell;

VOLUNTARY MILITARY SERVICE.

Mr. SHERMAN. I offer the concurrent resolution which I send to the desk, and ask that it be read and go over under the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 3), as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized and requested to call for volunteer enlistments for military service in the Army of the United States to the aggregate number of 1,000,000 men, under such regulations as the President or the War Department shall provide, 500,000 of such men to be called into the military service of the United States immediately from and after their enlistment and the remainder thereof whenever the President shall require.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, at some opportune time I wish to be heard very briefly on the resolution. I hope it will then receive due consideration by the Senate, as I think we are now wasting valuable time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will lie over and be printed.

AGRICULTURAL DEFENSE.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I submit a resolution, and ask that it be read and referred to the proper committee, and that the accompanying document be inserted in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 28), as follows:

Resolved, That the Council of National Defense be requested to consider the advisability of establishing a commissioner of agricultural defense, or some other authority, whose duty it shall be to assemble into one organization the various agencies—National, State, and private—which can effectively deal with the problem of mobilizing the farm labor of the country to the production of larger crops and otherwise render practical aid to the farmer in the present agricultural crisis.

That they examine the feasibility of the plan submitted herewith, or prepare another plan and report forthwith to the Senate appropriate legislation to make such plan effective:

1. This plan to provide for retaining in their present occupations all employees of National and State agricultural departments, competent farmers, efficient farm hands, and others actively engaged in productive agriculture.

2. Assuring farmers immediately, through evidence of practical cooperation, sufficient additional labor to care for and harvest an increased acreage of crops at the season of maximum labor demand.

3. Enlisting in agricultural defense those who are not available for military service, who are, nevertheless, competent to assist in crop production.

4. Protecting against criticism for nonservice all who are faithfully engaged in the production of crops and stimulating them to greater effort through appropriate national recognition of their services.

5. Insuring the prompt transportation of seed, fertilizer, and farm equipment needed by farmers.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There are some drawings in the matter sent to the desk by the Senator from New Jersey, and the Chair is of the opinion that it will be necessary to refer the whole matter to the Joint Committee on Printing before it can be inserted in the RECORD. Is that not correct?

Mr. SMOOT. The Chair is correct, Mr. President. The

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I request that the document be matter will have to be referred to that committee. referred with the resolution.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should suppose that the resolution would go to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as I understand, there are certain diagrams accompanying the document which the Senator from New Jersey desires printed in the RECORD, and, of course, in order to do that it will be necessary to have the Joint Committee on Printing pass upon them and determine whether they shall be printed or not. Then the document can be referred afterwards to the Agricultural Committee.

Mr. FLETCHER. I did not know that the Senator from New Jersey asked to have the document printed. I thought he asked to have the whole resolution considered by some committee, and, of course, the Committee on Agriculture would be the appropriate committee.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from New Jersey asked that it be printed in the RECORD without reading.

Mr. FLETCHER. That can not be done without reference to the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I do not want to take the time of the Senate to make any remarks on the resolution at this time, but I feel that it is necessary in presenting it that the Senate should know why it is offered.

Mr. President, I offer this resolution suggesting that the National Council of Defense consider a plan herewith submitted aiming to mobilize the agricultural forces of the Nation under such authority as the council may recommend.

This plan was prepared by Edgar L. Smith, president of investigator in matters of organization. It comes to me with the Farmers' Bureau (Inc.), of New York, an expert and trained indorsement of the agricultural department of the State of New Jersey and with a letter from Alva Agee, secretary of the State Board of Agriculture of New Jersey, urging that it be given serious consideration.

My resolution supplements the admirable resolution recently offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], which called upon the Secretary of Agriculture to consider means of increasing the acreage under cultivation. It is imperative, however, that we first provide the man power necessary to maintain the production on the acres now in cultivation. This is the main object of the plan submitted.

In these trying times men who have had the experience to become efficient farmers are necessary to produce the maximum crops; therefore they must stick to their posts. A soldier can be trained in a year; it takes nearly five years to train a competent farm hand.

Already the best workers on the farms are preparing to enlist. They will leave the farms unless they are shown that it is their patriotic duty to remain. The farms of the country are undermanned to-day on account of the great drafts made upon their man power by munition and other manufacturers.

We are now creating a situation in which the farmer confronts the possibility of losing to the Army or to war industries even those men which he has to-day.

In my own State the Secretary of Agriculture informs me that several of the most efficient men on his staff are studying to become officers in the Army. He fears a breakdown of his organization. He also fears by reason of loss of farm hands that the production of the great potato crop in New Jersey will be perilously curtailed, if some plan is not promptly formulated by the National Government to keep farm workers at their posts and to provide additional hands at the season of harvest.

The departments of the National Government are now overburdened, but we have in the State departments of agriculture, in the county agents and demonstrators, and in various farmers' associations throughout the country the material which, under proper authority and competent leadership, can be promptly combined into a great national organization for agricultural defense.

This resolution further suggests that the Council of National Defense consider the enlistment of those who are unavailable for military service yet who are available for service on farms and can be assigned to duty in sections where there is a shortage of farm labor.

In short, Mr. President, we are facing a grave crisis in agricultural production, and it seems advisable to consider creating at once an organization which will not only urge farmers to grow more crops, but will have the authority to mobilize man power, and, if necessary, the working capital and equipment needed to produce crops.

And let us give to such organization and to the farmers the national recognition necessary to show their record of service in order to protect them against the criticism that in this hour of trial they were slackers, and that this generation and future generations may know of their faithful service to their country.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution and accompanying document will be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

OBJECTIONABLE MATTER IN THE RECORD.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I rise to a matter of privilege, and invoke the attention of the Senate for a very few moments. Under Rule XIX of the Senate, it is provided:

> 2. No Senator in debate shall, directly or indirectly, by any form of words impute to another Senator or to other Senators any conduct or motive unworthy or unbecoming a Senator.
> 3. No Senator in debate shall refer offensively to any State of the Union.

Mr. President, the wisdom of that rule is obvious and needs no discussion. Without it not only the motives but the personal character of Members of this body would be constantly subject to criticism, if not to assault. The consequences would be deplorable.

I find in the RECORD this morning, Mr. President, very much to my regret, a number of communications which were inserted in the RECORD, doubtless by consent, but which contain reflections upon certain Members of this body, which are abusive, scurrilous, personal, and offensive to the last degree; designedly so, as to those who penned and posted the communications. Their publication is as much a violation of the rule I have cited as though their recitals were made by a Senator from his desk.

Mr. President, I was not present when the joint resolution declaring war upon Germany was passed by the Senate. Illness detained me at my home. If I had been here, I should have supported it and supported it heartily. I was here during the closing days of the last Congress and remained in attendance by day and by night that a vote might be taken, if possible, upon the joint resolution then pending, but which did sonally that a large proportion of the Senators who since then not pass, as the country well knows. I therefore know perhave been denounced and vilified to an extent that is wholly unpardonable and in a manner most reprehensible, while opposed to that measure, were ready at all times to bring it to a vote, although they would have voted against it. I know personally that several of them remained here to aid in keeping a quorum by night and by day, that the business of the Senate might be expedited. I affirm that their patriotism is equal to my own and to that of Senators who, like myself, supported and would have voted for the measure. The treatment which they have since then received, the abuse and vilification which they have endured at the hands of the press, which makes the public opinion of the country, is without justification. Instead of benefiting it will tend to lower the standard of representation in this body, for here, of all places, a representative of a sovereign State should be independent. He should speak his mind, however much his opinions may oppose or offend those of his colleagues and however much they may disagree with those of the majority. Unless that be his privilege, Mr. President, which he may exercise without subjecting his motives to the reproach of treason or corruption, there is an end of free and full discussion of measures of great importance to the people.

I do not in any sense commit myself to the views of Senators who recently addressed themselves against the joint resolution declaring war with Germany, but I believe in the honesty of their convictions. I protest, however, against the insertion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of communications which not only reflect upon them personally but which question their motives, charge them with treason, and demand their punishment. It is not only wrong but it is wholly indefensible and unjustifiable. Unless the matter is brought to the attention of the Senate and such communications expunged, it will be very difficult to determine what limitation can be placed upon the contents of communications inserted in the RECORD holding up the Members of this body to public humiliation, and inviting, if not encouraging, similar attacks upon them from outside sources.

I do not, Mr. President, I can not believe that the Senator who introduced these letters was aware of the extent to which their comments upon the conduct and character of Members of this body goes, and I am sorry he is not here. I believe, if his attention were called directly to some of these communications, he would join in asking that they be expunged from the RECORD, as I now request.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in my office this morning, as is my custom, I picked up the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and was greatly astounded to read the many telegrams placed in the RECORD, addressed to Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS, and asked by that Senator to be printed in the RECORD without reading. I can not believe that the Senator from Mississippi read those telegrams, for, if he had done so, I feel positive that he would never have asked that they be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Those telegrams do reflect upon the character of Senators. Not only that, Mr. President, but, in my opinion, the statements contained therein are untrue. I have spoken to one or two of the Senators, but found that they felt some delicacy in having the matter brought to the attention of the Senate, and asked me to say nothing in relation to it, preferring that it might go by unnoticed. If it were not for the honor of the Senate and the violation of the rules of the Senate, we might follow that course, and no doubt that would be the easiest way to have the whole matter forgotten; but if no notice is taken of it, and no action taken, it would be a precedent, Mr. President, which I think would be very unwise, indeed.

If the Senator from Mississippi were in his seat at the present time, I would ask him to request that these telegrams be expunged from the permanent RECORD.

There is no need of now encumbering the RECORD with the statements to which I have reference. Senators themselves can read them. Those statements are unjust; and it is most unfortunate that they have been placed in the RECORD.

I desired to say this much, Mr. President, because I believe if a precedent of this kind is established it will return to plague us in the future.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I now move to expunge from the RECORD the objectionable matter to which I have referred, but I do not care to have action taken upon my motion in the absence of the senior Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS said:

Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege. I understand that while I was in my office this morning attending to my mail something was said about some telegrams or letters or petitions which I had introduced and had published in the RECORD. I do not know just exactly what the strictures or criticisms were, nor do I know whence they proceeded, but I want to make this statement to the Senate.

A great many telegrams and memorials and petitions were being presented by very many Senators upon both sides of the question lately under debate. I received I do not know how many—perhaps if I said hundreds I would undermeasure it. I instructed my secretary to classify and take out of the list all those which contained anything that looked like a personal insult toward any Senator or a personal criticism of any Senator and leave the balance of them, which I would introduce and have published.

Now, if accidentally some telegram has been included amongst those which were published which reflected upon the patriotism, the honor, or the good sense of any Member of this body, I hope I need not say that I did not want to do that. My instructions were given for the purpose of avoiding that very thing. Amongst the Senators who differed with me upon the question lately under debate were men like the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], whom I have loved for years while a colleague of mine here and in the other House and whose patriotism and honor and honesty I have and have had absolute confidence in all the time; and there are others.

I should be very sorry indeed if any of the telegrams were of that character. I did not have time to reread them all; the Senate will understand that. I merely acknowledged the receipt of them. I asked that a classification be made, and that those of them which did not reflect upon anyone—those that merely approved my conduct and approved the action that the President has taken, the action that Congress has taken, that the people of America have taken in defense of the assaulted flag and the national honor and self-respect—were to be handed me and I would offer them for insertion in the RECORD.

If accidentally or incidentally some telegram or letter or resolution has gone in of a different purport, it has not been done by my intention.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I desire to say, now that the Senator is in the Chamber, that when I called the attention of the Senate this morning to the subject I made the statement that I was very sure the Senator had not carefully read them, or he never would have offered them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I read them, every one, Mr. President, at one time or another, and after I got through answering them I asked my secretary to make this classification and hand me those of them that did not reflect upon Senators. If any mistake has been made it was not made by him intentionally, because he had no more intention of needlessly insulting Senators than I had.

Now, so much for that. Of course, any man who commends the action of the President or of any Senator who has taken a very strong position in behalf of the defense of our national safety and the assertion of our national honor does in a certain degree reflect upon the Senators who have taken an opposite position. That can not be helped. But I did attempt to cut out of it everything which was affirmatively reflective upon anybody. I am very sorry if there is anything in the RECORD inserted by me—and, by the way, I doubt if there is anything; I have not read them——

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator will read them, he will find that there is scurrilous matter contained in some of them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well. I especially doubt the word "scurrilous." I merely want to make that statement. I am sorry I was not in the Chamber when gentlemen chose to criticize me in my absence. I had to be down in my room answering my mail; and having made this explanation, I hope it will be sufficient.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Mississippi that in my statement this morning I made the remark that I felt positive the Senator from Mississippi had never read the telegrams that were printed in the RECORD, or some of them to which there can be objection made, or the Senator never would have allowed them to be printed. They did reflect upon the integrity, the honesty, and the patriotism of individual Senators, and, I might say, Mr. President, in a most offensive way. All that would be necessary, I knew, was to call the Senator's attention to these telegrams and he himself, as I said this morning, would ask that they be eliminated from the permanent RECORD.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I suppose I have now lying on my desk something like four or five hundred telegrams and letters which while commending me for the position which I take, and while commending the President and the Congress, bitterly assaulted Senators. Those telegrams are lying there yet, and have never been put in the RECORD, because I did not think that I had a right to put them there, although they are the sincere utterances of sincere and patriotic Americans. If any telegram has slipped through the meshes that is insulting to any Senator or reflects upon his patriotism or honor, I am, of course, very sorry, and if later on, when I examine the RECORD myself, I find which are the individual ones I will myself move that they be eliminated.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want to call the Senator's attention to the telegrams, because then they would go in the RECORD again. I think the proper thing to do is simply to call the Senator's attention to the telegrams, and then pass on the motion made by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know what that motion was. What was it?

Mr. SMOOT. To simply eliminate the telegrams to which there could be objection made.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I am not willing to do that. That is a reflection upon me. I will myself offer a motion later on, when I have had time to examine the RECORD, to eliminate such of them as I regard as insulting or reflective upon Senators. I am not willing that it shall be done on another Senator's motion.

Mr. SMOOT. I know all that is desired by the Senator from Colorado or anyone else is simply to have them eliminated.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will do that myself, in as far as it is, in my opinion, right and proper.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on April 6, 1917, approved and signed the following joint resolution:

S. J. Res. 1. Joint resolution declaring that a state of war exists between the Imperial German Government and the Government and the people of the United States, and making provision to prosecute the same.

REPORT OF PANAMA RAILROAD CO. (S. DOC. NO. 7).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the Sixty-seventh Annual Report of the Board of Directors of the Panama Railroad Co. for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 11, 1917.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no further concurrent or other resolutions, morning business is closed.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I ask to have the unfinished business laid before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that when the bill is in the Senate I shall renew the motion to strike out the provision with regard to civilian military camp training.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is that presented by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 19, line 3, the Senator from New Jersey proposed to strike out "$29,000,000" and to insert:

$58,000,000: Provided, That hereafter the pay of enlisted men in the Regular Army shall be $30 per month, and that the pay of noncommissioned officers shall be increased in the same proportion: Provided further, That in no case shall any noncommissioned officer receive more than $100 per month as a result of this act.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the point of order was made to this amendment yesterday evening and not ruled upon by the Chair. I therefore renew the point of order on the ground, first, that it is new legislation on an appropriation bill, and, secondly, that no estimate has been made for it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not think it is new legislation; but the Chair does think that if there has been no estimate made, and it increases the appropriation, the point of order must be sustained.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I desire to offer a modification of the same amendment to the proviso on page 19, which I understand still remains in the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the proviso on page 20, line 2, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided further, That hereafter the pay of enlisted men in the Regular Army shall be $30 per month, and that the pay of noncommissioned officers shall be increased in the same proportion: Provided further, That in no case shall any noncommissioned officer receive more than $100 per month as a result of this act.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I am not going to discuss the merits of the amendment. It is the same amendment, except that it does not seek to appropriate the money. It simply seeks to change the law by amending an amendment to which the proposed amendment is germane, which, I think, takes it out of the provisions of the rule.

Mr. WARREN. Oh, but, Mr. President, it entirely changes the law. It is, from all points of view, out of order.

Mr. HUGHES. So does the amendment change the law. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the committee amendment which is on the bill changes the law, and it is subject to a point of order. The point of order is not made, and it is now in the bill; and, of course, any amendment that is germane to the committee amendment is in order.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, this has not been estimated for. It was not presented here on a previous day and sent to the committee as the rule provides. It does propose to change the law entirely, and the result of it is to greatly increase the expenses of the Government, so that it is clearly out of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not a question as to whether this is general legislation upon an appropriation bill at all. The Chair does not think this is general legislation on an appropriation bill. The Chair believes he is compelled to sustain the point of order, under the rules, upon the ground that the amendment is increasing the appropriation when the same has not been estimated for by the department. That is the ground for sustaining the point of order.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I simply want to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the committee itself has entered upon the subject of increasing the pay of certain men in the Regular Establishment. The language reads as follows:

Provided, That hereafter one of the enlisted men of each main recruiting station who has been detached for duty at such station under the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 2, 1901, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, have the rank, pay, and allowances of a first sergeant of Infantry.

Inasmuch as they have started to deal with this subject, inasmuch as they have started to make increases, the committee can not very well come in and say that the hands of the Senate are tied on this subject when they have operated to a limited extent themselves. I think it is perfectly in order to move to cut the pay of those sergeants or to increase the pay of the sergeants that they have dealt with in this amendment; and by the same process of reasoning it is possible for us to deal with other enlisted men besides the enlisted men they are attempting to deal with.

I should like to have the proposition as it now is submitted to the Senate without any ruling by the Chair, if that is not asking too much.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has gone all over these questions, he should think, twenty-five times. The Chair has ruled, and was sustained by the Senate, that when you started in on a bit of general legislation you opened up that general subject so that amendments could be made thereto; but that is not this question. There is no showing that an increase in the pay of one man can not be made out of the appropriations here. It is perfectly apparent that you can not raise the wages of all the enlisted men without very largely increasing the appropriations; and this has not been estimated for by the department.

Mr. HUGHES. Of course I suppose the reason for the rule which calls for an estimate on the part of the head of a department with reference to a proposed increase of an appropriation grows out of the fact that it is impossible, in many cases, for the Senate to know what the result of proposed amendments is going to be in the way of additional expenditure of the public money; but, of course, no such reason as that exists in this case. The amendment as originally drawn was its own estimate. It doubled the amount of money. Now, we all know, and it is carried right in this bill, just exactly what the enlisted man of the Army receives. It is perfectly easy for the Chair or any Member of the Senate to double that amount of money. There is no occasion, as I see it, for the application of the rule which seeks to protect the Senate from enacting hasty legislation by means of amendments on money bills.

When it is sought to raise the compensation of a class of public servants about whom there may be great doubt as to the number of them and the amount of money that is to be involved if the amendment prevails, that is a wise and salutary rule, which is intended to shield and protect the Treasury against unwarranted expenditures—against expenditures that might be much greater than the author of the provision, or those who put it upon the law, had any idea of. Of course that rule does not exist in this case. We all know that the enlisted men under this bill are to receive $29,000,000, and we know that to double that it will be necessary to appropriate twice $29,000,000, or $58,000,000. All the experts, all the mathematicians, and all the heads of departments in the city of Washington can not change that elementary fact.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is all true enough, and the Chair, if he were a Member of the Senate, would undoubtedly vote, if he had a chance to vote, to increase the pay of soldiers. That, however, does not change the rules of the Senate the least bit. There is a way, even without an estimate by the head of a department, to have had this matter before the Senate in a regular way. It can be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Appropriations; but it is subject to all those objections save that it is general legislation. It is not general legislation.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if I may say a single word—I am entirely in accord with the ruling of the Chair—I call attention to the words "the effect of which will be." The rule is drawn in a very broad way, so that even if the amendment does not raise the appropriation, if its ultimate effect will be to increase the charge on the Treasury it is out of order.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the pay of the Army is all in one fund, made so by legislation. Of course to undertake to double the pay of privates would require more money and accordingly confusion would follow, because then there would not be enough to pay any part of the Army for the full term for which the bill provides.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, before we depart from the subject that was raised by the motion of the Senator from New Jersey, I desire to say that whenever this question of increasing the pay of the enlisted men gets before the Military Affairs Committee it will be thoroughly investigated, but it has not been before the committee because no suggestion has ever come from the Senate or from the War Department. At that time I will discuss the question at length.

There are two amendments that I wish to propose to this bill that were passed by yesterday owing to inadvertence. I desire to move to amend by inserting the following after line 10, on page 89:

Provided further, That any funds appropriated under section 1661, Revised Statutes, for the fiscal year 1916 or former years, and remaining on August 29, 1916, to the credit of any State, the Territory of Hawaii, or the District of Columbia, shall remain available only to the end of the fiscal year 1918 for expenditures authorized by law.

Under the old statute, Mr. President, there has been an annual appropriation of $2,000,000 made for the support of the National Guard. It was distributed amongst the States. That statute has been repealed by the national-defense act, and yet there are funds in the Treasury against which the States are drawing. Now, there is no disposition to cut out the appropriation which has been made, but the department wants to limit the time and the purpose for which these appropriations shall be available.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, these moneys are now being drawn for the purpose of meeting obligations created before the change in the law, are they not?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And have no reference whatever to new obligations created since?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. None at all; and they wanted to limit the time when this appropriation shall cease to be used. It would revert to the Treasury, of course. I ask to have the Secretary's letter printed in connection with the proposed amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. Where is the amendment?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is in the first part of the letter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, after line 10, on page 89, the following:

Provided further, That any funds appropriated under section 1661, Revised Statutes, for the fiscal year 1916 or former years, and remaining on August 29, 1916, to the credit of any State, the Territory of Hawaii, or the District of Columbia, shall remain available only to the end of the fiscal year 1918 for expenditures authorized by law.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, can the chairman of the committtee advise the Senate why the States have not used this fund? I see that the provision of the amendment goes back several years.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I ask the Secretary to read the letter from the Secretary of War. That explains the whole situation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT.
Washington, April 6, 1917.

Hon. GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN,
Chairman Military Committee, United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR: Referring to the House bill No. 13, making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, it is requested that the following proviso be inserted after line 6 on page 62:

"Provided further, That any funds appropriated under section 1661, Revised Statutes, for the fiscal year 1916 or former years and remaining on August 29, 1916, to the credit of any State, the Territory of Hawaii, or the District of Columbia, shall remain available only to the end of the fiscal year 1918 for expenditures authorized by law."

Section 1661 automatically made available $2,000,000 each year for the support of the National Guard, the money remaining available until expended. The act of June 3, 1916, provided that, "A sum of money shall hereafter be appropriated annually." Since this act, no further appropriation is available under section 1661, but the money that had already been made available and apportioned to the various States was considered available until expended. The States continued to use the balances of funds on hand under 1661 for approved expenditures.

The accounting officers of the Treasury hold that these balances on hand in the various States were not available after the passage of the appropriation act August 29, 1916. The States incurred obligations chargeable against these funds with the understanding that the amount of money already apportioned them under this section was available until expended.

The object of the proviso requested is to legalize the expenditures already made and to fix a definite time within which the balances will remain available.

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator from Michigan will see from that it is really to protect the States and to authorize them to audit claims already incurred and fix the limit.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is very clear to me, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I have one other amendment. I should like the Senate to consider this quite carefully. It is for the establishment and maintenance by the Weather Bureau of additional aerological stations for observing, measuring, and investigating the atmospheric phenomena in the aid of aeronautics. It comes recommended by the Chief of the Weather Bureau and it is also recommended by those who have in charge the improvement of the Aviation Service of the United States.

In Great Britain, and I think in France, there is a system which has been adopted for measuring the air currents and ascertaining by scientific methods where the currents of air are liable to affect injuriously the aviation service. It is approved by the department and Dr. Walcott has given it a great deal of consideration. I think now is the appropriate time to try to ascertain all there is about the air.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the chairman what the cost will be?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. They ask for an appropriation of $100,000. The letter from the Chief of the Weather Bureau is attached and a memorandum giving the reasons for asking for this appropriation. I ask that they be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR AERONAUTICS,
Washington, D. C., April 10, 1917.

Hon. GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am submitting herewith a brief memorandum restating the urgent need for the appropriation of $100,000 for aerological stations in aid of aviation. I earnestly hope you will find time to read it carefully. This is not an agricultural matter simply because the Weather Bureau is a part of the Department of Agriculture. As you know, weather and storm conditions affect almost every important activity of the Nation, and none more vitally than aeronautics. In the effort now being made to train a large corps of air pilots, training camps are alrealy being organized and others will soon follow. The safety of the lives of aviators and the security of costly machines and property can be greatly conserved by the atmospheric studies and measurements provided for by this appropriation. It is a matter of the utmost practical importance to aeronautics and should receive the full consideration I hope Congress can be induced to give it.

Very respectfully,

C. F. MARVIN,
Chief of Bureau.

MEMORANDUM RELATING TO THE EXTENSION OF THE UPPER-AIR WORK OF THE WEATHER BUREAU.

Amendment.

For the establishment and maintenance by the Weather Bureau of additional aerological stations for observing, measuring, and investigating atmospheric phenomena in the aid of aeronautics, including salaries, travel, and other expenses in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $100,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture.

This appropriation is to enable the Weather Bureau to extend its upper-air service to aid in all kinds of military operations, and especially in connection with the testing, trying out, and experimentation with all kinds of aircraft, including the training of pilots and operatives in every way possible.

Firing of heavy projectiles: This upper-air service is also greatly needed and of direct value in the scientific management of heavy ordnance. Accuracy in long-range gunfire requires that account be taken of the influence of the free air currents upon the trajectory of the projectile.

The Weather Bureau is now the only branch of the Government that maintains systematic observations of the upper air. It has one aerological station, maintained heretofore for scientific purposes. There is a small nucleus of only six or eight men who are technically trained in the special duties required in this work. More men and more stations and equipment are needed to give to the military branches of the Government the aid and information they need in all kinds of aeronautical and heavy-artillery operations.

The funds will be used to employ and train new men and to establish and equip stations at which systematic observations will be made of free-air conditions by means of pilot balloons whose flight, when properly observed and recorded by means of theodolites, gives the velocities and the motions of the different wind strata in the free air.

Aeronauts and gunners in charge of heavy ordnance need this information very much in connection with military operations. It can not be adequately obtained by any other agency.

Many of the instruments or parts thereof, and materials required, were formerly procured from Russia, Germany, and France, and can now be obtained only by the slow and difficult plan of organizing, training, and encouraging home industries.

Large appropriations are needed for building up the aeronautic strength of the Nation and providing for its defense. This free-air service in aid of aeronautics and the firing of projectiles must be provided for. It is a real service greatly needed and highly valuable.

Character of stations: In case of actual hostilities in this country two types of stations must be maintained, namely:

Permanent stations at fixed aeronautical bases devoted to training aviators, testing and trying out of aircraft, experimentation, etc. Also fixed stations at permanent fortifications.

Mobile stations, consisting of portable stations to operate with the Army and Artillery in the field.

Amount of appropriation: The sum of $100,000 carried by the amendment was based on an estimate submitted by the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics on December 8, 1916. The work contemplated at that time was altogether upon a peace basis, and several times the amount estimated will be necessary to adequately meet war-time requirements.

APRIL 6, 1917.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the proper place in the bill—

For the establishment and maintenance by the Weather Bureau of additional aerological stations, for observing, measuring, and investigating atmospheric phenomena in the aid of aeronautics, including salaries, travel, and other expenses in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $100,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to have the Senate reconsider the vote whereby the provision on page 106 of the bill was agreed to and to move to strike out the language beginning at line 25, after the word "from," the language to be stricken out being "the War Department allotment of the appropriation for printing and binding or other," so that it will read:

Such printing and binding to be made from available appropriations.

Unless this is done it will place the Government Printing Office in a very awkward position, because the appropriation for printing and binding is made to the Public Printer and certain allotments are set off to the War Department, and he makes his contracts based upon that allotment.

I think there can be no objection to striking out those words, and I move to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment was adopted.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I could not hear the Senator from Florida. May I ask him to repeat his motion?

Mr. FLETCHER. I move to strike out, on page 106, beginning after the word "from," in line 25, the words "the War Department allotment of the appropriation for printing and binding or other," so that the payment for printing and binding will be made from available appropriations. The Senator will note that on page 37 the bill carries an appropriation for printing and binding, and this would prevent confusion in the Government Printing Office and be the proper way to handle that situation in case the printing is done by the department.

Mr. SMOOT. As the amendment now stands all such printing and binding that the Secretary of War may approve is to be paid from the War Department allotment of appropriations for printing and binding. I think that is perfectly right. I think it ought to be paid from their appropriation for printing and binding.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is. I propose to leave the words "from available appropriations" in, so that it would be payable out of the available appropriation for this purpose. On page 37 of the bill you will find a provision made including the printing.

Mr. SMOOT. I see the words following this would cover it; that is, it provides that the payment for such printing and binding shall be made from available appropriations.

Mr. FLETCHER. That would be the language.

Mr. SMOOT. That would mean the same thing; but it has to be paid from the fund set aside for that purpose in the War Department.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to is reconsidered and the Senator from Florida moves an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 106, line 25, strike out the words "The War Department allotment of appropriations for printing and binding or other."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there are no further amendments, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. KIRBY. I desire to present an amendment authorizing the President to call for volunteers.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 41, after line 10, insert:

Provided further, That war having been declared, the President is hereby authorized to call for volunteers in numbers of 500,000 until as many men are enlisted in the Regular Army as are deemed necessary to bring the war to a successful conclusion.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I make a point of order that the amendment is general legislation on an appropriation bill; and, second, that it will involve a vast expenditure and is violative of the rule to which the attention of the Chair was called by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] a while ago. No estimate has been made for the increased expense of this proposed measure.

Besides that, Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Arkansas, without any disposition to criticize the purpose of his amendment, the same subject will have to be involved in the measure that is now being considered by the House committee, and that will shortly be considered by the Senate committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I desire to make a point of order against the provision on page 93, from line 6 to line 18, the committee amendment. I desire to make the point of order that it is new legislation and has not been provided for in any bill heretofore. It is the same point that has been raised against this other amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The trouble is that the amendment has been concurred in.

Mr. KIRBY. Does the Chair state that it is too late to make a point of order now?

Mr. LODGE. Our rule is not new legislation, it is general legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A point of order, the Chair thinks, can be made at any time. The Chair does not think it is new legislation, but the rule of the Senate is general legislation.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The national-defense act covers the subject. The purpose was merely to correct it so as to relieve the department of a good deal of bookkeeping and make the provision as it is now under the national-defense act more easy of administration.

Mr. KIRBY. I do not understand that the defense act provided for the payment of the expenses of these men in traveling to and from camp. This new law does provide for that, and I make a point of order against that.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The national-defense act provided pay for transportation, and this simply modifies that measurably so as to make it easier of administration.

Mr. KIRBY. Has the Chair ruled on my point of order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is not in a situation to rule. There seems to be a dispute. If the defense act provided for the payment of traveling expenses, the Chair does not think it is general legislation.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will call the attention of the Chair to the provision. I did not have it before me. The national-defense act, section 54, in connection with these training camps provided——

Mr. KIRBY. Will the Senator read the provision that provided the pay?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Without reading it all, as it is quite a long section, it reads:

To furnish, at the expense of the United States, uniforms, subsistence, transportation by the most usual and direct route within such limits as to territory as the Secretary of War may prescribe.

That is in the national-defense act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is not new legislation. It is simply fixing the amount to be paid. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I should like to renew the motion to strike out from line 11, on page 92, down to and including line 19, on page 94.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the paragraphs relating to civilian military training, beginning in line 11, on page 92, and going down to and including line 19, on page 94.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, in support of that motion I want to say a few words. Having declared war, it seems to me that the resources of the country and the money to be expended ought to be used in training soldiers who are needed to fight the battles of the country. The hearings in the House Military Committee on this appropriation bill show that it is the general understanding that no man who takes training at these military training camps is required by any law to serve in any army of his country. He can not be required because of the fact that he has received the military training to enlist here or there or yonder, or to do any military duty whatever. With war declared, if we are to spend three and one-half million dollars for these summer training camps for people who are not obligated to become soldiers, to enlist in the service, or to do public service for their country in time of war, I believe that $3.500,000 ought to be saved and ought to be used in training men who will become soldiers.

It seems to me it would be well enough and all right to do this at a time when war is not impending, or when war has not been declared. Men might be put into such training as would make them soldiers, but since we are using the money to give them training, with no obligation upon their part to enlist, and since there has been no disposition on the part of the people who had this training last year to enlist, and none of them did enlist for service on the Mexican border, I think this money ought to be saved and go to the National Guard. It may be that some of them did enlist and go to the front down there, but only $1,000,000 is provided for the maneuvers and training of the National Guard, while we have $3,500,000 appropriated for civilian training, and when it is all over and the money has been expended not one single man who has had the benefit of it can be required to go into the Army and defend his country. I think we can save $3.500,000 here, and that it ought to be done. I call the Senate's attention to this again.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I do not care to argue this matter at any length; but the motion of the Senator from Arkansas now is directly in the teeth of the proposition he made a while ago, to authorize the organization of an army of volunteers. This is distinctively a volunteer organization of the country, where thousands of young men go and train for 30 days. Without meaning to reflect on the National Guard, the training received in these encampments is worth more than the training received in the National Guard, for the reason that for 30 days they engage in intensive training at the rate of 8 hours a day, while in the National Guard they meet four times a week and drill about an hour or an hour and a quarter, so that in 30 days of this work men get more training than they do in the National Guard in a year.

Mr. KIRBY. I want to ask the Senator from Oregon a question. Is it not a fact that there is no obligation upon one of these men who receive this training to enlist or to serve the country, and that he can not be required to do it?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. As I stated to the Senator a while ago, I believe that the Secretary of War, under the national-defense act, can impose enlistment upon these men longer than 30 days, because—and I called the Senator's attention to this yesterday—the law authorizes that they may be enlisted under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe. I believe the Secretary of War could, under that provision of the law, require them to enlist for a year as a condition precedent to training, if not possibly longer, dependent upon the emergency or crisis that confronted the Nation at the time.

Mr. KIRBY. Does the Senator from Oregon mean that the Secretary of War could require enlistment in the Army when the law does not authorize it?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I say the Secretary of War can impose conditions upon the young men who want to go into training camps. He could say to these young men by regulation: "You will not be received unless you enlist for a certain time." The time now fixed is 30 days, but the Secretary might fix a longer time.

Mr. KIRBY. In the hearings we had that very proposition presented. The Secretary was asked why this requirement was not made, and he said nobody would have gone in if they had done so; that they would not have been able to get anybody. I have in my hand a copy of the hearings. At the point to which I have referred Gen. Scott is talking.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I beg to suggest that the mere fact that these young men have taken this training is an evidence that they desire to serve their country and that they would serve their country if needed.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. And all over the country they have taken this training.

Mr. KIRBY. But they did not serve their country on the Mexican border.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I want also to suggest to the chairman of the committee what has happened to come to my knowledge. I know of several regiments which are seeking organization which are composed almost exclusively of men who secured their training at these military camps. Men are in this Capital to-day trying to organize themselves in the most efficient manner for the service of the Government, who are not only ready to enlist but who are ready to go anywhere the Government may demand that they shall go. It has been my understanding, as to the thousands of men who have gone to the Michigan encampment at least, that they went there impressed with the idea that they were receiving this special training for service when it should be called for.

Mr. KIRBY. I will ask the Senator, is it not a fact, however much they might have been impressed, that there is no law requiring it?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Requiring the training of these young men?

Mr. KIRBY. No; requiring their enlistment and service in the Army after they shall have been trained.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; but there is this provision, Mr. President; and I repeat what I said a while ago——

Mr. KIRBY. I should like the Senator to call my attention to that provision.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Let me call the Senator's attention to the first provision of section 54 of the national-defense act, which reads:

SEC. 54. Training camps: The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to maintain, upon military reservations or elsewhere, camps for the military instruction and training of such citizens as may be selected—

There is even a process of selection under the act—

for such instruction and training, upon their application and under such terms of enlistment and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

Mr. President, I venture to predict that these training camps will be equivalent to the British training camps, where soldiers are trained before they go across the English Channel. In other words, the Secretary of War may say to these men, "We will not receive any man into these training camps who is under the age of 19 or who is over the age of 25." He not only can do that, but he can impose terms of enlistment of 30 days or more, if he sees fit to do so; and a national crisis might compel him to adopt a course not only of enlistment but a policy of selection.

Mr. KIRBY. If the Senator will consent to an amendment providing that a man shall, after having this training, be subject to call for service in the Army, I shall be glad to withdraw the amendment I have offered. I only want the money expended in making soldiers after war is declared. In the military training camps in Canada the men are enlisted and are soldiers before money is expended in training them; they are in war; and war has been declared by us. Why should we waste three and one-half million dollars in training citizens who are not required to go into the military service and who do not go?

Mr. WEEKS. I want to ask the Senator from Arkansas from whom he was quoting when he said these young men would not go to the training camps if any conditions were imposed that would make it necessary for them to serve, if they did go?

Mr. KIRBY. I did not mean that these men would not respond, but I say there is no law requiring them to respond; there is no legal obligation resting upon them to do so; and I say when it is proposed to spend three and a half million dollars in training men, there ought to be some obligation on them to render some service to the Government after they have been trained.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Arkansas to quote from some one who said that these men would not go to the camps if any obligation were placed on them.

Mr. KIRBY. I do not know what a man might do. What I am speaking about is that he does not serve in the Army, and is not required to do so.

Mr. WEEKS. The Senator from Arkansas is overlooking what I have been trying to bring to his attention. He quoted from some one who said that these young men would not go to the camps if any obligation were placed upon them.

Mr. KIRBY. I quoted from Gen. Scott.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I want to say that, in my judgment, Gen. Scott was very badly informed on that subject.

Mr. KIRBY. I quoted from the hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs of the other House in the Sixty-fourth Congress, on pages 615, 690, 723, and 804. There the whole matter was gone into, and it was developed that the men who went to the camps could not be required to enlist; and it was said that they would not do so.

Mr. WEEKS. Will the Senator put in the RECORD what Gen. Scott actually said?

Mr. KIRBY. I quote the following from the House hearings, to which I have referred:

Mr. WISE. What is the reason of the department not requiring the men in the summer camps—why do they not have some regulations by which they would obligate themselves to serve the country if they take this training?

Gen. SCOTT. As I understand, they offered themselves in this way, and it is the only way in which we can get them; they refused to go into the National Guard.

Mr. WISE. Under the law the department had the authority to prescribe the rules and regulations for their entrance, and why did you not require them when going to the camps to obligate themselves to serve the country?

Gen. SCOTT. We are carrying out the national-defense act of June 3, 1916.

Mr. WISE. That act gives you the authority to prescribe the rules and regulations for the reception of people into these training camps. As one of the rules why do you not require that they take an obligation to serve the country if needed?

Gen. SCOTT. We take from every class of people in the country the greatest amount of service that we feel we can get. The policy is to do everything possible under our present volunteer system, the defects of which I am pointing out.

Mr. WISE. Has there been any objection on the part of the men who go to these camps to obligate themselves?

Gen. SCOTT. They do not want to go into the National Guard or into the Regular Army, but they are willing to do what they have done.

Yes; they are willing to go to the national training camps for a summer vacation and, it may be, to become prepared, and many of them might go to war. They are not less patriotic than other men. I think they would go to war, mayhap; but if we are to spend the Government's money, after war is declared let us see that they shall go to war.

I quote further from the same hearings:

Mr. WISE. Why would they not be willing, if they wanted this service, to obligate themselves to serve the country, if needed?

Gen. SCOTT. I will ask you to refer to the act.

Then Mr. McKELLAR, who has been promoted to the Senate, asked this question:

Mr. McKELLAR. We passed the act authorizing you to do that; why did you not do it?

Gen. SCOTT. Because we try to get the most out of every class of men. We do not believe those men will obligate themselves for services beyond what they are giving now in time of peace.

Mr. WISE. I want to get the most for the money that we spend; but if a man is not willing to obligate himself to serve the country, of what service will he be?

Gen. SCOTT. He would be much more valuable if he obligated himself, but if they will not obligate themselves we can not help it.

That is the condition; that is what has developed; that is what Gen. Scott said about it.

Mr. WEEKS. Now, Mr. President, having obtained the information which I desired, I want to say, although it goes without saying, that men are engaged in different forms of occupation. Some can devote a month in the year to preparation for Government service; some can devote one or two evenings a week, and others can join the regular service. As a matter of fact, these men were so situated, generally speaking, that they could devote a month to this form of service. Last year, when we were considering sending troops to the border, a committee representing these Plattsburg men came before the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, with authority to speak. They stated that they were ready to obligate themselves in any way to serve the Government in case of war. I have no doubt that they will do that now or at any other time. Those camps were made up of the best and most patriotic young men we have in this country. They are preparing themselves, so that in case of actual war they may be of service. There would be no slackers among them if there were war or any possibility of it. They would not go to the camps for a month if they did not want the training.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to me?

Mr. WEEKS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FALL. I may be entirely in error, but my understanding of what Gen. Scott said was that these young men would not obligate themselves to join the National Guard and the Regular Army in time of peace. He did not say that they would not obligate themselves to serve the country.

Mr. WEEKS. That is exactly what I understood.

Mr. KIRBY. How does the Senator expect a soldier to serve his country but in the line of battle?

Mr. FALL. I will ask the Senator if under any circumstances he would volunteer for service?

Mr. KIRBY. I certainly would; and if compulsory military service is required by Congress, I shall insist on the age limit being increased to 50 years, for I do not want to require any man to do anything which I can not be compelled to do, notwithstanding he might be willing to do it.

Mr. FALL. The Senator expresses his willingness, if compelled to go into the military service by conscription, that the age limit may be raised. He also answered that he would under some circumstances volunteer, but the Senator would not join the ranks.

Mr. KIRBY. I would raise a regiment before the Senator from out West would get one up.

Mr. FALL. That may be; I am not speaking of a "Senator from out West."

Mr. KIRBY. Then what was the Senator's remark made for?

Mr. FALL. Because the Senator has not volunteered; because he has not joined the Regular Army——

Mr. KIRBY. Has the Senator from New Mexico done so? I am over age as the limit stands now, but I am willing to raise the age limit.

Mr. FALL. And why is the Senator reflecting on these young men who go and prepare themselves, so that if they have to volunteer or be conscripted, they may be worth something?

Mr. KIRBY. I do not want the Senate to get the idea that I am reflecting on anyone. I am making a plain statement.

Mr. FALL. I should like to ask the Senator if there is a military school in his State?

Mr. KIRBY. There is not.

Mr. FALL. I am glad to say that we have one in New Mexico. We have, I think, a school that ranks third among the civilian military schools of this country, and I think any of those boys would volunteer to-day. Many of them do not belong to the National Guard.

Mr. KIRBY. I did not rise to disparage any man who has gone to the Plattsburg camp, either as to his patriotism or as to his disposition to enlist in the Regular Army. What I was trying to do was——

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, am I speaking in the time of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. KIRBY. The Senator certainly is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas has the floor.

Mr. KIRBY. I am perfectly willing that the Senator shall have as much time as he likes.

Mr. FALL. I will speak in my own time when the Senator gets through.

Mr. KIRBY. What I am trying to do is not to disparage the summer camps or the training given there; but, since war has been declared, it seems to me that three and a half million dollars might better be expended upon some sort of organization that can be and is at the call of the military department.

We have provided $1,000,000 for the training and the maneuvers of the National Guard. The National Guard all responded when the call was made to go down to the Mexican border. They were in a position where they were required to respond. Now it is proposed to expend three and a half million dollars for civilian camps. I repeat that I do not want to disparage anybody who has gone to a training camp; but let us as business men, paying out the people's money for the protection of these United States, provide only for men to receive the benefit of the training whom the Government can call upon in its time of need. That is all I want to say about it, Mr. President.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. If I may be permitted, I should like to offer an amendment. I do not know whether it is in order——

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is an amendment pending.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will briefly try to explain what the amendment is before I make the request. The amendment proposes to insert after the word "under," in line 15, on page 92, the words, "such terms of enlistment and under." That will make it read in this way:

As may be selected under such terms of enlistment and under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That amendment is in order.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I call the Senator's attention to the fact that that is, as I understand, in the national-defense act?

Mr. McKELLAR. It is in the national-defense act, but it is not in this bill. My purpose in offering this amendment is to have Congress specifically provide that the department shall, as I believe it should and as I believe every other Senator will agree with me that it should, require some form of enlistment. It may be necessary for them to have very different forms of enlistment applicable to different classes of our citizens who are trained in military camps, but surely it was the purpose of the defense act—and I remember discussions of the act and the reports made in reference to it and the words of it——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say to the Senator that I have no objection to the amendment, because it is already in the national-defense act.

Mr. KIRBY. I withdraw my amendment to strike out the provision if the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee is accepted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Tennessee is agreed to, without objection.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

Mr. FALL. I object.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I should like to have the amendment stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. On page 92, line 15, after the word "under," it is proposed to insert the words "such terms of enlistment and under," so as to read:

For the expense of maintaining, upon military reservations, or elsewhere, camps for the military instruction and training of such citizens physically capable of bearing arms as may be selected under such terms of enlistment and under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator from Tennessee that the phrase "under such terms of enlistment," in my humble judgment, will authorize the Secretary of War to present to an applicant an enlistment contract, including pay, and in effect will authorize the Secretary of War to recruit a volunteer army upon any terms that he sees fit? I do not think that is the contemplation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him at this time?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to call the Senator's attention to the original act. This provision of the original act, as is shown in the hearings before the House Committee on Military Affairs, has been entirely disregarded by the War Department. The original defense act provides as follows, under the head of "Training camps," section 54:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to maintain, upon military reservations or elsewhere, camps for the military instruction and training of such citizens as may be selected for such instruction and training, upon their application and under such terms of enlistment and regulations—

And so forth. Now, it will be seen that this appropriation bill—and, by the way, the last appropriation bill also—leaves out the words "under such terms of enlistment." It was believed by some of the officers that, if any term of enlistment at all was required, there would be a very much smaller number of men to go to these camps, and they have disregarded the plain mandate of the statute, as shown in section 54 of the act. I think they ought to be given latitude; I think the Secretary of War ought to establish such terms of enlistment as he may see fit; but I think it would be manifest to almost anyone that there ought to be some method of utilizing the men who are trained at these camps.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. There is but one way to do it, and that is to have some form of enlistment, say, for a week, or for a month, or for three months. It is absolutely necessary in order to judge of the qualifications of the man who may afterwards apply for a commission in the Army, or for any other military reason that might be apparent at the time of his request.

I want to call the attention of the Senator to those facts, and I hope he will not object to the amendment that has been offered, especially as it is already in the law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I regard it as fortunate that thus far in the operation of the so-called Plattsburg idea the officers of the Army have not conformed technically and exactly to the language of the national defense act, for, certainly, to require any of these young men who apply for a month's training to enter into an enlistment contract, and to give the Secretary of War the right to prescribe the terms of such contract, would result inevitably not only in decreasing the number of men who would present themselves but also in creating another military force in the United States; and we have three or four different branches of the Army now.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. FALL. I simply wanted to ask the Senator if this was not a training act, as distinguished from a service act?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Absolutely.

Mr. FALL. The bill which is now under consideration is not a universal-service act.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. FALL. The subject of universal service and universal training has been discussed by the people of the United States for a long while, and, in my judgment, many who would be perfectly satisfied with universal training might object to universal service, just as some who will accept the provisions of this act as to training will not join the Regular Army or the National Guard, but undoubtedly would be ready to yield allegiance and loyalty and come to the assistance of their country if they were summoned in time of war.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think I should like to comment on the question and comments made by the Senator from New Mexico before I yield again.

Mr. President, it must not be forgotten while we are considering this matter of the Plattsburg camps or any amendment to this section of the bill that we are now in a state of war, and that any amendment offered to this bill which would in a mandatory way compel an applicant for a month's training to enter into an enlistment contract will necessarily complicate the work of the War Department in preparing the real armies that must go forth and fight. As I said on the floor of the Senate the other afternoon, according to the notices which we read in the press, the administration is contemplating raising the Regular Army to war strength by volunteers and, as we also read in the press, raising the National Guard to full war strength by accepting volunteers and, in addition to that, creating a new army on a conscriptive basis, with half a million men in its first increment and another half million men in its second increment. If we insert mandatory legislation here with respect to mere training camps, we will simply by that much tie the hands of the War Department in creating the real forces that must go forth and bear the brunt of the battles; for, Mr. President, every man who stops to think a moment must realize that the training camps while this war is in progress can not command the services of Regular Army officers as instructors. There are not enough Regular Army officers, by any means, to fill the places which will be created by the vast expansion of our military forces. It will be next to impossible to find a Regular Army captain or lieutenant or second lieutenant or major to attend a Plattsburg camp to train men for 30 days while this war is in progress; and you will not get many men in those camps who would not ordinarily volunteer into the guard or the Regular Army or be subject to conscription in the 500,000 army. So I do not believe that we ought to put into this bill practically a mandatory provision—for it will be regarded as such in many respects—asking the Secretary of War to draw up an enlistment contract for Plattsburg training-camp men.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will pardon the Chair, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] first asked to interrupt.

Mr. KIRBY. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I merely wanted to state that this is already the law. Now, manifestly it either ought to be repealed or we ought to conform to it. That is my view of it, and I think it must be the Senator's view. We have the law under which these training camps are organized, and we are simply directing what the department shall do. Now, this does not require any particular form of enlistment, and I do not think it will make a difference of a man at any of these training camps, but it will give the Government this hold on them—that it will require some form of enlistment to bear allegiance to the United States in some way. In other words, it will give us some hold on them in return for the money that we are paying out for their benefit and to make them a military asset.

I understand that this kind of military training is very effective. Now, why not make these men one of the military assets? The only way we can do it is by having some form, some measure of enlistment. That has been proved by the fact that when we were asking for men to go into the Army in Mexico it is said that probably less than half a dozen out of the 30,000 or maybe more than 30,000 trained went from the Plattsburg camp. Now, my idea is that when we spend this money, especially as it is the law, we ought to uphold the law and ought to uphold the best interests of our country by having some measure of enlistment, so that we can take advantage of it, now that we need them.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, if we had no other force in training except the Plattsburg men, of course I would not object. In fact, I would strenuously urge that they be held to some obligation in the future. But the trouble with the Senator's proposal, in my judgment, is that it complicates the situation. If we are going to expect the Secretary of War to prescribe certain obligations for these men who received the 30 days' training which they shall be called upon to perform after they have received it, then we are on the road to creating another military force in the United States, a special Plattsburg reserve——

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. And it can not be done without interfering with the forces that we now have and complicating our entire situation; and if it is to be done, the question of pay will come in, inevitably. You can not expect or ask men to enter into an enlistment contract unless it carries a compensation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from New York now yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. KIRBY. If the Senator established a department in his business to train intelligent young men for a particular service of accounting, and spent $3,000,000 in it, and if he had in view the purpose of having these men employed thereafter in his establishment, and his man who had the department in charge did not require some sort of a contract with them to enlist thereafter with the Senator in his service if he needed them, what would the Senator do with that man? He would fire him in a minute, would he not? Here is the Government in the same attitude.

Now, on the other point I should like to ask another question. The Senator says it will interfere with our Military Establishment. Do we need 500,000 more men than the full Army strength and the full National Guard strength now? Is not that the Senator's understanding?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I understand, of course, that that number is to be called for. We certainly need it, and more too.

Mr. KIRBY. Well, is not this a good way to get it? And if you are not going to get it, what is the use of wasting the money?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, this is not the best way to get it. This is an entirely separate thing, and it is only contemplated that these men are to be trained for one month. It is impossible to make an army out of such men.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, the asset that is being created by expending a small amount of money in loaning the regular officers of the United States for training civilians for 30 days in a year is an asset of the United States Government. It is not for the benefit of these men. They have no reward for it. They give up their business, they surrender their time, they leave their homes and their families, with no provision whatsoever for them. They go to these training camps. They there take military instruction under the direction of the trained officers of the United States. They come out of there an asset of this great Government. They surrender their own time. They are not all possibly able as readily as is the Senator from Arkansas to raise regiments. Many of these men did volunteer and did go to the border.

What are the facts with reference to these remarks that have been interjected during this debate with reference to the recruiting for the border? It is true that on the 16th day of March, Gen. Pershing having been ordered across the border by the President of the United States, the Congress of the United States adopted a resolution authorizing the recruiting of the Regular Army up to full force, and a wave of enthusiasm went all over the country. It was supposed that something was going to be done for the protection of American citizens and reparation for injury to American lives and American citizens and American property in Mexico. On the 17th day of March this body passed a resolution to the effect that the Pershing expedition should be confined solely to a pursuit of Villa and the support of the de facto Government of Mexico, and that wave of enthusiasm died out, and we not only did not secure the full number of 20,000 or 38,000 as authorized but enlistments fell off from the number which had been enlisted for the month preceding. A damper was thrown over the enthusiasm of the youth of this country.

The statement that these Plattsburg men did not enlist in the National Guard is not correct. They did, to the number of thousands. From the training school in California to the training school at Plattsburg, they enlisted. Why? Because the President of the United States called out the National Guard after the Carrizal massacre, when the regular troops of the de facto government had attacked soldiers in arms of the United States and shot them down, had captured others, and refused to release those who were captured. The President of the United States called upon the people of the United States to fill up the National Guard, and they were recruited to full strength and marched to the border with enthusiasm; but when they reached the border they were informed that nothing was to be done, and they will not enlist again under the same circumstances in the National Guard or in the Regular Army.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. FALL. I yield for a question.

Mr. KIRBY. What is the use of wasting time and money in training these people if they will not enlist?

Mr. FALL. Why, because instead of the United States Government being in the condition of a private firm, as under the question asked by the Senator from Arkansas of the Senator from New York, the United States Government is not a private employer.

Mr. KIRBY. Certainly.

Mr. FALL. The United States Government can force the Senator from Arkansas into the United States service.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. FALL. I will yield when I have concluded my answer. The United States Government, having created a great asset by training officers and privates at Plattsburg, can, by a resolution of this body, force every one of those trained men into its service and keep them there for life, if it so desires. It is not like a private firm.

Mr. KIRBY. On that point, does the Senator think good business methods should be abandoned in the administration of public affairs?

Mr. FALL. Why, certainly, I think—I am in favor, sir, of universal service. I am in favor of universal training preparatory to universal service.

Mr. KIRBY. Well, if the Senator thinks business methods should be abandoned in the conduct of public business, I will not interrupt him further.

Mr. FALL. I think that both myself and the Senator from Arkansas—or, at least, I will speak for myself—I think I would be a better man to-day, sir, mentally, morally, and physically if the United States had forced me into its training camps and given me a military education for one, two, or three years. It might not have improved the Senator from Arkansas, but I can speak for myself.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, since this discussion came up, I have read the existing law in the Army reorganization bill, and I have also read the provision in this bill providing for civilian military training. I take it that in this appropriation bill no new law can be made. If the appropriation that is contemplated for these camps is based on the law in the Army reorganization bill providing for training camps, then it attempts to amend existing law by striking out the words "and under such terms of enlistment," and it would be subject to a point of order. If the language in this bill is new language, based on no law providing for a training camp of this kind, it is clearly new legislation, and not in order on this bill.

I do not desire to make the point of order, although I believe it is subject to a point of order; but, Mr. President, I intend to vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], and I wish to state briefly why I intend to do so.

I was one of those who, for more than a year, earnestly prayed and hoped that this Government would not become involved in the war in Europe. When our flag was fired upon and our ships were sunk, I came to the conclusion that the hope of peace was gone; that we no longer could maintain the peace, and I voted for the declaration of war.

Now, after we have gone to war I believe in going to the battle line with all the force and power this great Nation can command. I do not propose to apologize for my vote declaring war, and I do not propose to play politics in sending other men to the firing line. When we call on the young men of this country to go to the battle field and sacrifice their lives for their flag and their country, certainly the politicians of America can afford to sacrifice their political heads for their country's sake. I do not think it is a time to determine whether a question is politically expedient or not. I think the hour has arrived when the Congress of the United States should determine all these questions solely from the point of view as to whether it is right and whether it is the course to pursue to bring victory to our arms and a speedy conclusion to this war.

I have no doubt these civilian training camps are popular among a number of the citizens of our country. I have no criticism to make of what was done in the years past in training civilians in military science. But that was under the terms of peace. We were then training men whom we might use in the event of war. To-day war is here. If men are needed, they are needed on the battle field.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator just a moment?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Surely.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not know what the Senator means when he refers to a question of political expediency in reference to this measure, or the particular section under consideration, but I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the language is exactly the language as it came to us from the House, and it is simply an appropriation to carry out a standing statute—that is, the national defense act. As to the language which the Senator suggested, while personally I was willing to accept it and am willing to accept it now, because it simply reaffirms the language of the national defense act, I do not think it is necessary.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator the bill was passed originally in the House before we had reached a state of war, and although the language in the bill is not the language of the national defense act, it leaves out the material part of the national defense act relating to this subject, yet I would have been glad to have accepted it if we were facing a condition of peace as we were when the bill was passed by the House originally. We all know that for questions of speed and expediency the bill as it was passed last March or last February by the House was passed under a suspension of the rules last week when no amendments were allowed; it was sent over here and the responsibility placed on the Senate to put the amendments in.

Now, I am not criticizing the course of the chairman of the committee in reporting the bill, but I do criticize the position of Senators who insist that we should at this time give military training to citizens who do not propose to go to war. I do not know myself that 30 days' training at this time when we want soldiers is going to be of any great value, but I will not resist the appropriation on that account. However, I do say that every dollar this Nation has got and every available man this Nation has got should now be used to defend this country and to defeat the enemy that is at our door. I should like to know what value it is to any of us or to the country to train a citizen soldiery who do not propose to go to war.

The situation, as I said, was different last year in the last year's bill because there was no war. After these men had received their training the presumption was that at least some of them would respond to their country's call if we went to war. Now we are in a state of war. I want to know where is the common sense of the situation to spend the Government's money on training a single man in a military camp at the expense of the Nation who does not say in advance that he is going to war? Many men are going to be in these camps not of conscription age who probably will not volunteer. Do we want to waste our time in giving these men military training if they are not going to war, and if they are going to war what is the objection to their stating when they enter the camp that they are going to war or will be ready to go?

I have grave doubt myself as to whether the appropriation for these training camps is of any value at all now. I think in place of them we had better establish officers' training camps, where the young men of this country can go and get training as officers, and attempt to train a million men as soldiers to fight the battles of the country.

But I am not going to vote against the provision if this amendment is adopted, because I am not a military man. Others who are wiser than I seem to think it ought to go in the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In just a moment. I can see no reason in the world why the provision in reference to civilian military training camps should command my vote to spend the Government's money in training people who are not willing to say they will go into the Army after they get the training. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to make this suggestion to the Senator. Just now an immense number of young men are being accepted in the Officers' Reserve Corps. Does not the Senator think that the money could be very much better spent as a matter of fact by having training camps for young reserve officers?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Surely it could. I do not think there is any question about it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does not the Senator go further than that? Whether these camps are kept or not, ought we not to establish camps or schools of some kind for the training of the young officers who have been accepted with only a modicum of training?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I agree with the Senator from Tennessee entirely. If this provision goes in the bill as proposed by the Senator from Tennessee these camps would be open to men who are in the Officers' Reserve Corps, men who want to be trained to get junior officers' commissions in our Army, and they should not be crowded out by civilian citizen soldiery who want training at the Government expense and are not willing to say that they will fight the Nation's battles. I am willing to spend every dollar that is needed. I believe the time has come when we have got to go to compulsory service, and go to it at once. We have got to let the common enemy know that all the great resources of this country, men and money, will be spent to the last degree to win this fight and win it conclusively. But I am not willing to waste $3,000,000 of Government funds on men who ask to be trained in a military way and are not willing to say that they want that training for the purpose of serving our country.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, there is, of course, a great deal of sound sense in what the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has been saying, and conditions have changed from last year. Then we had no war and we were training men for the future. Now we have a war and we must necessarily train for the present. But I want to call this fact relating to this subject to the attention of the Senate. These men would not have gone into these training camps and taken the intensive training which has been given them if they had not desired military service. Anybody who contends for a moment that it is simply a summer outing does not know anything about the conditions that have obtained in the camps, because the most intensive training has been given those men. I doubt if you could get into the heads of young men as much of value from a military standpoint in 30 days in any other way. I am speaking particularly of the Plattsburg camp, with which I am somewhat familiar.

Then, again, I want to call this to the attention of the Senate. It is the cheapest possible way of training men. If they go into the militia you pay them for whatever service they perform; they immediately go on the pay roll, and whatever transportation and other facilities are given them must be provided by the Government. These men have been paying their own expenses up to this year, not only their transportation but other expenses, and now we are simply paying for their transportation and the costs of providing them with food while they are in camp. They get no pay whatever; therefore, if it were purely a question of training it is the cheapest training that can be furnished by or through the Government.

Last year, as I stated before, a committee representing the Plattsburg camp men came to Washington with authority to say that they were prepared to go into the service if war were declared with Mexico. I do not know this accurately, but I think if an investigation were made it would be found that more of these training-camp men have already volunteered for service in proportion to their numbers than any other class of men in this country. I have not any doubt about it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let me ask the Senator, have the Plattsburg or any other training-camp organization made such voluntary offers since war has been declared?

Mr. WEEKS. I do not know as to that. I have not seen a Plattsburg camp man since war has been declared.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to ask the Senator if these gentlemen have offered to serve their country in the ranks or have they asked for commissions?

Mr. WEEKS. I can not state definitely as to that. I know it is a very common thing to say that men will serve as officers who will not serve in the ranks. I do not know whether they volunteer for one purpose or the other.

Mr. THOMAS. I will state what inspired the question. In the last few days I have received from my State letters from scores of gentlemen who are anxious to serve in the Officers' Reserve Corps. I have heard of none so far who care to enlist, though I have no doubt there are thousands of them. There is a difference, as we know, between the two classes of service; but I know when the time comes the young men everywhere are going to volunteer. I am so confident of it I will say that I do not believe in conscription. The question was asked in perfect good faith.

Mr. WEEKS. We have 8,000 Massachusetts men in the ranks in the service to-day.

Mr. THOMAS. I have no doubt before long the Senator's State will have 80,000 in the ranks.

Mr. WEEKS. I want to say that I have not had from Massachusetts more than 20 letters altogether from persons asking me to recommend them for commissions.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. WEEKS. I yield.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I may say in answer to the Senator from Colorado that I have a telegram from the adjutant general of my State only this morning advising me that the National Guard of the State had recruited up to the full strength.

Mr. THOMAS. I have no doubt of it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I merely make that statement to show that the young men are enlisting as privates without regard to commissions.

Mr. WEEKS. I believe it will be found that wherever applications have been made for commissions, or in most cases, the men have had sufficient training and sufficient position to warrant their being entitled to have that ambition. I do not think it is any reflection on a man who wants to serve in the way he can serve best or can perform the best service. I am going to take the trouble to look this matter up, because I think it can be easily demonstrated that the men who have this training-camp experience are those who have offered themselves most readily for service.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WEEKS. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I want to say to the Senator that I have had quite a number of letters from citizens of Alabama offering their services to the Government. I know that we have had men in the Plattsburg camp. In none of those letters has it been stated to me that the men who are offering their services were qualified by reason of Plattsburg training. That may mean that they did not think that the Plattsburg training qualified them, or it may mean that the Plattsburg camp men have not responded. But I am not reflecting on that proposition. I think there is no doubt that the training in the Plattsburg camp last year was of some value; but I want to ask the Senator, now that we need soldiers, why should we spend any money training men unless we know that they want to fight, and that means enlistment? That is all there is in the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee. It merely says to these men, "If you want us to train you as soldiers and spend the Government money to do it, you must enter these camps under such a contract as the War Department shall prescribe in reference to your future service to your country." Now that there is war declared, is there anything unreasonable about that?

Mr. WEEKS. I do not think there is.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is all there is about it. I am very glad to support the provision if this amendment is put on it, and opposed to it without it.

Mr. WEEKS. I do not like the general tone of criticism of these camps as being anything but useful, and that they are rather for the preparation of a lot of toy soldiers. I do not think the results would justify that charge.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I agree with the Senator about that. Last year I think it was a useful training. Some of the men who went to the Plattsburg camp are well qualified to serve their country as soldiers. A number of men went there who thought it more or less a holiday. It was a good training for them, but for many reasons they were incapable of serving after they got the training. But now conditions have changed entirely, and if we are going to spend $3,000,000 for this training I think the Government is entitled to prescribe what the terms of it shall be.

Mr. WEEKS. Does not the Senator recall the fact that this proposition was carried in a bill which was reported from the Military Committee before the 4th of March, when there was no war, and it was purely a peace measure?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Surely; and I am not criticizing the committee. I stated a moment ago that I had no criticism of the committee, because when this bill originally came up we were not at war. But conditions have changed since that time, and I think the bill ought to be changed.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will permit me, I will state that the committee will not object to it. The committee are in favor of it, I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be read for action on the committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, under the subhead "Permanent establishment," on page 7, line 18, before the word "enlisted," to strike out "thirteen" and insert "nineteen," so as to make the clause read:

For extra pay of 19 enlisted men (cavalrymen), 2 teamsters, 11 laborers employed in keeping clean the equipment used by cadets in riding and equitation other than military, 4 specially qualified trainers engaged in training mounts used by cadets in riding and equitation other than military, and 2 laborers for harrowing and sprinkling and assisting in the care of the riding hall, at 35 cents each per day, $1,460.48.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Buildings and grounds," on page 29, after line 12, to strike out:

Hereafter printing, binding, and blank books required for the use of the United States Military Academy may be done or procured elsewhere than at the Government Printing Office when, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, such work can be more advantageously done or procured locally, the cost thereof to be paid from the proper appropriation or appropriations made for the Military Academy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This completes the amendments of the committee.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] has an amendment which he desires to offer.

Mr. JAMES. On page 29, after line 12, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 29, after line 12, insert:

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint William Harold Kehoe, late a cadet at the Military Academy at West Point, to the position of second lieutenant of Infantry of the Army, and to place him upon the retired list with the pay of a retired second lieutenant of Infantry.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator briefly state the fact?

Mr. JAMES. I will state to the Senate that this bill was reported favorably by the Committee on Military Affairs and passed by the Senate at the last session. It failed to get through the House.

Mr. WARREN. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEEKS. I send a similar amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, following the amendment just agreed to:

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Clyde R. Altman, late a cadet at the Military Academy at West Point, to the position of second lieutenant of Infantry of the Army, and to place him upon the retired list with the pay of a retired second lieutenant of Infantry.

Mr. WEEKS. That bill has also passed the Senate under conditions similar to those regarding the amendment which has just been approved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the committee amendments be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUGHES in the chair). Without objection, that course will be pursued. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Treasury Department," subhead "Public buildings, construction, sites, and rent," on page 3, after line 14, to insert:

Barbourville, Ky., post office: For completion, $700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 8, after "$75,000," to strike out "and the limit of cost fixed by the act of October 20, 1914, is increased by the sum of $200,000," so as to make the clause read:

New York, N. Y., assay office building: For continuation, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 4, to insert:

Paris, Tex., post office: For commencement, $100,000.

Mr. KENYON. I understand that provision is made for the commencement of a new post office building at Paris, Tex., because a fire destroyed the building there, but I take this occasion to say that in my judgment we ought not to commence any public buildings at this time unless there be some very unusual reason for it.

Mr. MARTIN. Perhaps the Senator is not aware of the fact that there was a separate law passed providing for the construction of this building. It is an appropriation in pursuance of a law that has been enacted. The building was burned at Paris, Tex., and an act of Congress was passed providing for a building and fixing the limit of cost and directing the construction.

Mr. KENYON. I understand that to be true, and I am not objecting to it; but I should like to ask the Senator as to Sandpoint, Idaho, page 19. I see there is an appropriation of $40,000 made for the commencement of a public building there. Sandpoint, Idaho, in 1910 had 993 people. It seems to me that matters of that kind ought to wait.

Mr. MARTIN. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that that building is under contract. It was authorized by law, and the Treasury Department certify that they need this much money for this purpose.

Mr. KENYON. Of course, I suppose that that argument is good; but I should think the buildings might wait, even if they are under contract, and that nothing new in the way of these local improvements should be commenced at this time. I am not going to urge the matter at present, but I am going to object to items of this kind on all these bills.

Mr. MARTIN. I will say to the Senator that there is no item in the bill except to meet obligations created by previous statutes or which has been called for by the Treasury Department to carry on work that is in process of construction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 17, after line 10, to insert:

Pittsburgh, Pa., post office and courthouse: For completion, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, after line 17, to insert:

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized, in his discretion, to include among the buildings to be supplied with heat, light, and power from the central heating, lighting, and power plant, the Pan American Building, the building occupied by the Civil Service Commission, and the municipal fish market, and the limit of cost of said central heating, lighting, and power plant is hereby increased in the sum of $68,000, which amount is hereby appropriated: Provided, however, That said increase in the limit of cost shall be effective and the appropriation herein made available only in the event that the Secretary of the Treasury exercises the discretion herein vested with respect to said additional buildings, $68,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Quarantine stations," on page 25, after line 15, to insert:

New York, N. Y., quarantine station: For the purchase of the New York quarantine station property, $1,400,000, and for the maintenance of the same, $275,000; in all, $1,675,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public buildings, repairs, equipment, and general expenses," in the item of appropriation for general expenses, on page 31, line 10, after the word "inspections," to strike out "$580,660" and insert "$590,000," so as to read:

General expenses: To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to execute and give effect to the provisions of section 6 of the act of May 30, 1908 (35 Stat., p. 537): For additional salary of $1,000 for the Supervising Architect of the Treasury for the fiscal year 1918; architectural designer, at $6,000 per annum; foremen draftsmen, architectural draftsmen, and apprentice draftsmen, at rates of pay from $480 to $2,500 per annum; structural engineers and draftsmen, at rates of pay from $840 to $2,200 per annum; mechanical, sanitary, electrical, heating and ventilating, and illuminating engineers and draftsmen, at rates of pay from $1,200 to $2,400 per annum; computers and estimators, at rates of pay from $1,600 to $2,500 per annum, the expenditures under all the foregoing classes for which a minimum and maximum rate of compensation is stated, not to exceed $178,050; supervising superintendents, superintendents, and junior superintendents of construction and inspectors, at rates of pay from $1,600 to $2,900 per annum, not to exceed $278,960; expenses of superintendence, including expenses of all inspectors and other officers and employees on duty or detailed in connection with work on public buildings and the furnishing and equipment thereof and the work of the Supervising Architect's Office under orders from the Treasury Department; for the transportation of household goods incident to change of headquarters of supervising superintendents, superintendents, and junior superintendents of construction, and inspectors, not in excess of 5,000 pounds at any one time, together with the necessary expense incident to packing and draying the same, not to exceed in any one year a total expenditure of $7,500; office rent and expenses of superintendents, including temporary stenographic and other assistance in the preparation of reports and the care of public property, etc.; advertising; office supplies, including drafting materials, specially prepared paper, typewriting machines, adding machines, and other mechanical labor-saving devices, and exchange of same; furniture, carpets, electric-light fixtures, and office equipment; telephone service; not to exceed $6,000 for stationery; not to exceed $1,000 for books of reference, law books, technical periodicals and journals; contingencies of every kind and description, traveling expenses of site agents, recording deeds and other evidences of title, photographic instruments, chemicals, plates, and photographic materials, and such other articles and supplies and such minor and incidental expenses not enumerated, connected solely with work on public buildings, the acquisition of sites, and the administrative work connected with the annual appropriations under the Supervising Architect's Office as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem necessary and specially order or approve, but not including heat, light, janitor service, awnings, curtains, or any expenses for the general maintenance of the Treasury Building, or surveys, plaster models, progress photographs, test-pit borings, or mill and shop inspections, $590,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public buildings, operating expenses," on page 32, line 22, after the word "employed," to strike out "$3,200,000" and insert "$3,250,000," so as to read:

Operating force: For such personal services as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem necessary in connection with the care, maintenance, and repair of all public buildings under the control of the Treasury Department (except as hereinafter provided), together with the grounds thereof and the equipment and furnishings therein, including assistant custodians, janitors, watchmen, laborers, and charwomen; engineers, firemen, elevator conductors, coal passers, electricians, dynamo tenders, lampists, and wiremen; mechanical labor force in connection with said buildings, including carpenters, plumbers, steam fitters, machinists, and painters, but in no case shall the rates of compensation for such mechanical labor force be in excess of the rates current at the time and in the place where such services are employed, $3,250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Coast Guard," on page 36, line 7, before the word "cadets," to strike out "thirty" and insert "forty-four"; and, in line 8, after the word "instructor," to strike out "$4,049,286" and insert "$4,600,000," so as to make the clause read:

For pay and allowances prescribed by law for commissioned officers, warrant officers, petty officers, and other enlisted men, active and retired, temporary and substitute surfmen, not exceeding 44 cadets and cadet engineers who are hereby authorized, and 1 civilian instructor, $4,600,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 12, after the word "men," to strike out "$520,000" and insert "$750,000," so as to make the clause read:

For rations or commutation thereof at the rate of 45 cents per ration for warrant officers, petty officers, and other enlisted men, $750,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, after line 7, to insert:

To enable the Coast Guard to bring its present telephone system of coastal communication to a high state of efficiency, to extend such system to include all Coast Guard stations not now connected, and to include the most important light stations which have at present no means for rapid communication, including personal services and all other necessary expenses in connection therewith, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, $600,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 24, after the words "In all," to strike out "$5,556,086" and insert "$6,936,800," so as to read:

In all, $6,936,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask may be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 40, after line 19, it is proposed to insert the following:

Crediting in accounts of E. A. Wreidt: The Auditor for the State and Other Departments is hereby authorized and directed to credit E. A. Wreidt, disbursing officer of the Commission on Federal Aid to Vocational Education, in the final settlement of his accounts, with the sum of $102, the amount disallowed in the settlement of his account.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. I also send to the desk an amendment which I propose on page 42, line 7, which I ask may be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 42, line 7, after the word "mints," it is proposed to strike out "$115,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$185,000," so as to make the clause read:

Contingent expenses, Independent Treasury: For contingent expenses under the requirements of section 3653 of the Revised Statutes, collection, safe-keeping, transfer, and disbursement of the public money, transportation of notes, bonds, and other securities of the United States, salaries of special agents, actual expenses of examiners detailed to examine the books, accounts, and money on hand at the several subtreasuries and depositories, including national banks acting as depositories under the requirements of section 3649 of the Revised Statutes, also including examinations of cash account at mints, $185,000.

Mr. TOWNSEND. What is the object of that amendment?

Mr. MARTIN. This clause relates to transportation. In lieu of having coin, bonds, and departmental matter transported by the Post Office Department, the policy has been changed, and it is to be sent and paid for. It is merely a matter of bookkeeping. The Government pays for the transportation of its own business.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Is that a change which has been made in the policy since the bill passed the House of Representatives?

Mr. MARTIN. I do not know whether it was made before the bill passed the other House or not, but this is the first appropriation bill which has come along since the change was made.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this amendment is necessary on account of another amendment which has been made in the bill. The House of Representatives inserted in the deficiency appropriation bill an item, as follows:

Packages of coin and currency hereafter shall be admitted to the mails and transported under the penalty privilege governing their transportation prior to the passage of the act of May 18, 1916.

This was disagreed to by the Senate and the committee thought it unwise, as it repealed the limit of 4 pounds allowed in the transportation of money through the mails.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Was the report unanimous?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN. If the Senator from Michigan is not entirely satisfied about the matter, I desire to say that I have here a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, which makes a very clear statement and a very thorough explanation in regard to it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think I am satisfied; but I was wondering why the House of Representatives had not provided for this item if the law was as it now is when the House passed the bill.

Mr. MARTIN. Would the Senator from Michigan like to have the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury read?

Mr. TOWNSEND and Mr. SMOOT. Let it be inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask that the letter be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that will be done.

The letter referred to is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 10, 1917.

MY DEAR SENATOR: My attention has been called to the fact that in the sundry civil bill, reported to the Senate yesterday with amendments, the appropriation for contingent expenses, Independent Treasury, pages 41–42 of the bill, is carried in the same sum provided by the House, namely, $115,000. The department's estimate under this appropriation was $185,000.

Payments are made from this appropriation for transportation expenses on coin and currency, and when the deficiency bill passed the House a provision was inserted as follows:

"Packages of coin and currency hereafter shall be admitted to the mails and transported under the penalty privilege governing their transportation prior to the passage of the act of May 18, 1916."

When the deficiency bill was considered by your committee this provision was stricken from it, and in lieu thereof an appropriation of $75,000 was provided to cover the cost of these coin and currency shipments during the remainder of the present fiscal year.

As I understand it, the bill is now in conference, and if the conferees adopt the Senate amendment the department will then have funds with which to pay these charges.

The appropriation of $115,000 for the same purpose for the next fiscal year carried in the sundry civil bill was based on the assumption that the House provision in the deficiency bill, providing for the free transportation of coin and currency hereafter, would become law. If not, the appropriation of $185,000 estimated by the department would be required.

Under the circumstances I beg to bring the matter to your attention, and to urge upon you the vital necessity of increasing this appropriation by an amendment on the floor of the Senate, from $115,000 to $185,000.

Very truly, yours, W. G. MCADOO,
Secretary.

Hon. THOMAS S. MARTIN,
Chairman Senate Appropriation Committee,
United States Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous objects, Treasury Department," on page 44, line 3, after the word "laws," to insert "and for enforcement of the laws relating to the Treasury Department and the several branches of the public service under its control"; in line 11, after the word "President," to insert "and the immediate members of his family"; in line 13, after the words "United States," to strike out "$225,000" and insert "$400,000"; in line 22, after the word "employed," to strike out "hereunder" and insert "by or under the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department"; and in line 25, after the word "action," to insert "Provided further, That no person employed under this appropriation shall be paid salary greater than $12 per day," so as to make the clause read:

Suppressing counterfeiting and other crimes: For expenses incurred under the authority or with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury in detecting, arresting, and delivering into the custody of the United States marshal having jurisdiction dealers and pretended dealers in counterfeit money and persons engaged in counterfeiting Treasury notes, bonds, national-bank notes, and other securities of the United States and of foreign Governments, as well as the coins of the United States and of foreign Governments, and other felonies committed against the laws of the United States relating to the pay and bounty laws, and for enforcement of the laws relating to the Treasury Department and the several branches of the public service under its control, hire and operation of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles when necessary, per diem in lieu of subsistence, when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, and for no other purpose whatever, except in the protection of the person of the President and the immediate members of his family and of the person chosen to be President of the United States, $400,000: Provided, That no part of this amount be used in defraying the expenses of any person subpœnaed by the United States courts to attend any trial before United States court or preliminary examination before any United States commissioner, which expenses shall be paid from the appropriation for "Fees of witnesses, United States courts": Provided further, That until June 30, 1918, the President is authorized to direct, without reference to existing limitations, the use of the persons employed by or under the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department if, in his judgment, an emergency exists which requires such action: Provided further, That no person employed under this appropriation shall be paid salary greater than $12 per day.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, after line 2, to strike out:

Appropriations in this act shall not be used in payment of compensation or expenses of any person detailed or transferred, except to the Department of State, from the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department, or who may at any time during the fiscal year 1918 have been employed by or under said Secret Service Division.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "Smithsonian Institution," on page 52, after line 20, to insert:

George Washington Memorial Building: The limit of time for beginning the erection of the George Washington Memorial Building, provided in the act entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings," etc., approved March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., p. 881), is hereby extended to March 4, 1919.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I offer as a substitute for that amendment the amendment which I send to the desk. After it shall have been read, I will explain it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. As a substitute for the amendment of the committee it is proposed to insert:

George Washington Memorial Building: The amount which shall have been subscribed and paid into the treasury of the George Washington Memorial Association before the actual construction of said building shall be undertaken prescribed in the act entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings," etc., approved March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., p. 881), is hereby fixed at $500,000, and the limit for beginning the erection of said building is hereby extended to March 4, 1919.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I think that is a very proper amendment, and I hope it will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not think it is a proper amendment, and I hope it will be defeated.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have gone into this question casually, as has also the Committee on Public Building and Grounds. The only difference which my amendment makes in the present law is this: Under the present law there was to be collected by subscriptions $1,000,000 before the beginning of the construction of the George Washington Memorial Building. This amendment provides that the $1,000,000 required be reduced to $500,000 before the beginning of the construction of the building.

Mrs. Henry F. Dimock, the sister of the Hon. William C. Whitney and president of the George Washington Memorial Association, has this matter in charge. Up to the present time she has secured subscriptions amounting to $375,000 toward the erection of the building. A great many public institutions desire to purchase space in this building, but they do not want to make a contract, nor will they make a promise as to how much space they will take, until at least the construction of the building is begun. Mrs. Dimock states positively that the officials of the association can now secure $500,000 within a short time, and just as soon as the $500,000 is subscribed, if Congress will allow the beginning of the construction of the building, there has already been promised nearly enough to complete the building by public institutions which desire to purchase space in it.

I suppose all Senators have noticed the adopted plan of the building. The Senate Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds is in favor of this amendment, and the chairman of that committee, Mr. SWANSON, advised me he would report a bill to the Senate covering the same subject if it were possible to be passed at this session of Congress.

I doubted the wisdom of this proposition at first, but after the facts were presented to me I felt that the adoption of this amendment would reach the desired end very much more quickly than to insist upon the collection of a million dollars before beginning the construction of the building.

I desire to say to the Senator that this proposition does not involve the Government of the United States in one cent of expense. I am quite positive now that if this amendment is adopted, without doubt the building will be completed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. May I ask the Senator from Utah a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to say that the only thing I have in mind is that if this building is commenced before the money for completing it is assured the chances are about ninety-nine out of a hundred that these parties will come to Congress for an appropriation to help finish the building. If Congress wants to appropriate money to be put into this building we ought to do it, and we ought to do it directly; but if we do not want to do it, then we ought to feel satisfied that we shall not be called upon hereafter to do it.

What I wanted to ask the Senator was this: Is the Senator satisfied from the investigation he has made that if this amendment is adopted there is not any reasonable probability of a request coming to Congress to put up money to help complete this building?

Mr. SMOOT. I am quite satisfied now that if this amendment is adopted Congress will not be asked for a future appropriation for the erection of this building. At first I had perhaps the same thought in mind that the Senator from Washington has at the present time. I thought perhaps—and it looks that way upon its face—that if we reduced the limit to $500,000 in the end we might be called upon to make an appropriation for completing the building; but Mrs. Dimock assures me that just as soon as the erection of the building is commenced she can make contracts with public institutions for space in the building, for which many have already applied, and will thereby secure sufficient funds to complete the building without calling upon the Government of the United States for a cent.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Will the Senator permit another question?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. What is the estimated cost of this building according to the plans which have been prepared?

Mr. SMOOT. I thought I had the exact estimate of cost, but I find I have not.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does not the Senator know approximately?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know exactly what the estimate of the cost of the building is.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator said that the plans and specifications had all been prepared.

Mr. SMOOT. They have been; and I thought I had here the estimated amount required to complete the building, but I have not.

Mr. JONES of Washington. There is now a provision in the law under which this building can not be commenced until a million dollars is available.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; that is true.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I was wondering whether this building is to cost a million or two million or two and a half million dollars. That would have very much to do with my attitude regarding the amendment. If this building is to cost about two and a half million dollars, I feel morally certain that they will come to Congress after it is commenced and ask us to raise probably a million dollars to complete it.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think that the building is going to cost any such sum as that. I do not know whether the Senator has seen the drawings of the building.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have not.

Mr. SMOOT. But, judging offhand as to the probable cost of the building, I should not think its cost would possibly exceed a million and a half dollars; in fact, I doubt whether it would cost that much—but not to exceed that, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If it costs a million and a half dollars and we allow the construction to begin when only $500,000 is secured, does the Senator feel satisfied that they will not come to Congress for an appropriation?

Mr. SMOOT. I do feel so satisfied because of the fact that I am assured that the contracts which they are very sure to get will yield a sufficient sum to pay the cost of erecting the building.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Who is it that wants to make these contracts?

Mr. SMOOT. I have not a list of the applicants; but Mrs. Dimock tells me that the contracts are desired by public organizations.

Mr. JONES of Washington. What is meant by "public organizations"?

Mr. SMOOT. I presume it would include institutions similar to the Grand Army of the Republic, the Daughters of the American Revolution, and other patriotic associations.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Daughters of the American Revolution have a building of their own here.

Mr. SMOOT. I know that; but I merely cited that as an illustration. I meant similar organizations, and perhaps organizations of different characters.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course, I have not any doubt that Mrs. Dimock is entirely sincere and honest in her belief that the money will be secured, but the Senator from Utah knows better than I do how difficult it is to raise a million and a half dollars in connection with institutions of this kind through the public. He also knows how prone the people are after they get a work started in the National Capital in the nature of a public institution to come to Congress, put up a plea that they can not go any further, that they have done all they can do, and ask Congress for money to carry the work on. I know the Senator is very careful in matters of this kind, and if he is satisfied that the Government is not taking any chances by the adoption of this amendment I would feel disposed to defer to his judgment in the matter; but I do not want it understood that I might be opposed to Congress appropriating money for a proposition of this kind. That is not the proposal. It is proposed that these private parties shall put up this building. As long as it goes in that way I do not want it to be put in a position where the probabilities are that they will come to Congress and ask it to finish the work.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Washington that nobody can criticize his position. I know, he knows, and all other Senators know that when public buildings are started they often end by a direct appeal to Congress for an appropriation, no matter what were the promises made beforehand. It does seem to me, however, that when I look over the list of public men and other prominent persons, men and women of this country, who are interested in this building, they certainly can raise enough money in this country to construct a memorial building to George Washington, and I have no doubt if we allow the construction of this building to begin when half a million dollars is available that the contracts which they know that they can already enter into will bring in an amount of money which they are certain they can secure, we run very little risk indeed in granting a request for a change in the law.

I also agree with the Senator as to a direct appropriation; and, so far as I am personally concerned, I would rather make an appropriation direct in the first place than to have an appeal come to Congress later for money to finish the building, based upon the ground that the building is started—it is here—and therefore it must be finished. I would very much prefer to make such an appropriation in the beginning.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator—as I am not particularly familiar with this proposition—if there is any obligation on the part of the Government to pay any portion of the cost of this building?

Mr. SMOOT. I think not.

Mr. KENYON. So that, even if they came to the Government asking for an appropriation, there would be nothing in the way of any obligation?

Mr. SMOOT. There would be no obligation on the part of the Government.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator another question: Can he tell me how long it has been since they started this proposition?

Mr. SMOOT. The act authorizing the erection of this building was approved March 4, 1913.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Then they have been practically nearly four years raising a little over $300,000?

Mr. SMOOT. Well, it probably took some six months to complete the organization, so that they have been at least three and a half years engaged in the work.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think the Senator will agree with me that the raising of the first $300,000 on a proposition of this kind is always the easiest part of the work?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; if it all had to be raised by subscription, the Senator would be absolutely correct; in fact, if it were to be raised by subscription, and I knew it was all to be raised in that way, and it took three and a half years to raise $375,000, I would say now, without a question of doubt, it would be an impossibility to raise the amount required to erect the building; but I understand the subscriptions collected will be a secondary proposition in the erection of the building. If it were not for that I would not agree to the proposition for a moment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will not oppose the amendment upon the statement of the Senator from Utah. I must say, however, that I do not think the Senator from Utah has gone to the bottom of this matter and into the details, as he usually does in matters of this kind.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not had the time to go into it, as I should like.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know the Senator uses his time, and I think all of it, and I thought, when he proposed this amendment, he would probably be able to give a little more information regarding the subject; but I am willing to take his assurance in the matter, so I will not object to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Federal Trade Commission," on page 56, line 26, before the word "powers," to strike out "his" and insert "its," and on page 57, line 4, after the word "manufacture," to strike out "$400,000" and insert "$250,000," so as to make the clause read:

For all expenses necessary to carry out the order of the President of the United States to investigate within the scope of its powers and to report the facts relating to any alleged violations of the antitrust acts by any corporation in the production, ownership, manufacture, storage, and distribution of foodstuffs and the products or by-products arising from or in connection with their preparation and manufacture, $250,000.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I rise particularly to congratulate the committee on having reduced the appropriation in this item of $400,000 to $250,000, and incidentally to call attention to the fact that there are together here in the bill several commissions appropriated for which have been authorized in the last three or four years—the Federal Trade Commission, the Tariff Commission, and the United States Shipping Board. The aggregate appropriations for the maintenance of these commissions for this year are $1,590,420. I note particularly that the Tariff Commission, the members of which have not yet been confirmed, is provided for by an appropriation of $300,000 to carry that work on for one year, including the purchase of textbooks and other matters. It carries me back to a few years ago, when the Monetary Commission had been spending some years in examining the monetary systems of the world. The commissioners were not paid any salaries, to be sure, but I can not help recalling the hysterical cry and protest that went up on the other side of the Chamber because the Monetary Commission, during its entire life of four years or more, spent about three-fourths as much as is being provided in this bill for one year's expenditures for a commission which has not yet been confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "United States Tariff Commission," on page 58, line 2, after the word "Commission," to insert "including the purchase of professional and scientific books, law books, books of reference, and periodicals as may be necessary," so as to make the clause read:

For salaries and expenses of the United States Tariff Commission, including the purchase of professional and scientific books, law books, books of reference, and periodicals as may be necessary, as authorized under Title VII of the act entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," approved September 8, 1916, $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator having the bill in charge if he will not allow the portion of the bill now being read to go over for the present, so that we may recur to it later on, or would he rather have me now offer an amendment I desire to offer to this part of the bill?

Mr. MARTIN. Unanimous consent has been given that the committee amendments be first considered.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want this agreed to until I can offer an amendment to it.

Mr. MARTIN. There is nothing to agree to or to disagree to. There is no amendment now before the Senate in respect to this matter.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I will leave it until we conclude the committee amendments and return to it.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "War Department," on page 61, after line 17, to insert:

MILITARY PUBLICATIONS.

In addition to any other appropriation available for this purpose, there is hereby appropriated $300,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, to be expended in printing and binding publications and manuals necessary for the organization and instruction of the land forces of the United States or such other necessary use as the Secretary of War may prescribe: Provided, That the printing and binding herein authorized may be executed under contract with private concerns if in the judgment of the Secretary of War the public interest requires, notwithstanding the provisions of law requiring such printing and binding to be done in the Government Printing Office.

Mr. SMOOT. That is only for this year.

Mr. WARREN. It is only for one year.

Mr. MARTIN. That is all that is appropriated for this particular purpose at this particular time, and it is clearly so stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Armories and arsenals," on page 62, after line 10, to insert:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of the Interior," subhead "Public Lands Service," on page 103, line 17, after the words "General Land Office," to strike out "$400,000" and insert "$425,000, of which sum $25,000 shall be immediately available," so as to make the clause read:

Contingent expenses of land offices: For clerk hire, rent, and other incidental expenses of the district land offices, including the exchange of typewriters; per diem, in lieu of subsistence, of clerks detailed to examine the books and management of district land offices and to assist in the operation of said offices, and in the opening of new land offices and reservations, when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, and for actual necessary traveling expenses of said clerks, including necessary sleeping-car fares: Provided, That no expenses chargeable to the Government shall be incurred by registers and receivers in the conduct of local land offices except upon previous specific authorization by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, $425,000, of which sum $25,000 shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Surveying the public lands," on page 107, line 15, after the word "exceed," to strike out "one supervisor of surveys, whose compensation shall not exceed $300 per month, and not to exceed 10 surveyors who may be employed in a supervisory capacity," and insert "2 supervisors of surveys"; so as to read:

For surveys and resurveys of public lands, under the supervision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $700,000: Provided, That in expending this appropriation preference shall be given, first, in favor of surveying townships occupied in whole or in part by actual settlers and of lands granted to the States by the act approved February 22, 1889, and the acts approved July 3 and July 10, 1890, and to survey under such other acts as provide for land grants to the several States and Territories, and such indemnity lands as the several States and Territories may be entitled to in lieu of lands granted them for educational and other purposes which may have been sold or included in some reservation or otherwise disposed of, except railroad land grants, and other surveys shall include lands adapted to agriculture and lands deemed advisable to survey on account of availability for irrigation or dry farming, lines of reservations, and lands within boundaries of forest reservations. The surveys and resurveys provided for in this appropriation to be made by such competent surveyors as the Secretary of the Interior may select, at such compensation, not exceeding $200 per month each, as he may prescribe, except that the Secretary of the Interior may appoint not to exceed 2 supervisors of surveys, whose compensation shall not exceed $250 per month each, except in the District of Alaska, where a compensation not exceeding $10 per day may be allowed such surveyors and such per diem in lieu of subsistence, not exceeding $3, when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, and actual necessary expenses for transportation including necessary sleeping-car fares, said per diem and traveling expenses to be allowed to all surveyors employed hereunder and to such clerks who are competent surveyors who may be detailed to make surveys, resurveys, or examinations of surveys heretofore made and reported to be defective or fraudulent, and inspecting mineral deposits, coal fields, and timber districts, and for making, by such competent surveyors, fragmentary surveys, and such other surveys or examinations as may be required for identification of lands for purposes of evidence in any suit or proceeding in behalf of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "United States Geological Survey," on page 111, after line 23, to insert:

Any or all of the amounts herein specifically appropriated for the field surveys or investigations of the Geological Survey shall, when in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior it may be necessary, be made immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Mines," on page 113, after line 21, to strike out:

Not exceeding 20 per cent of the preceding sums for investigation as to the causes of mine explosions; for inquiries and scientific and technologic investigations concerning the mining, preparation, treatment, and utilization for ores and other mineral substances; for inquiries and investigations concerning the mining, preparation, treatment, and utilization of petroleum and natural gas; and not exceeding 30 per cent of the preceding sum for investigation of mineral fuels and unfinished mineral products belonging to or for the use of the United States, may be used during the fiscal year 1918 for personal service in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 114, after line 8, to insert:

Not exceeding 20 per cent of each of the four preceding sums may be used during the fiscal year 1918 for personal services in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was under the subhead "Reclamation Service," on page 123, line 21, after the word "charges," to strike out "and receipts from disposal of power or power possibilities," and on page 124, line 1, after the word "operation," to strike out: "Provided, That the net receipts from the operation of power plants shall be credited to the construction account to reduce the final amount due and shall not be used to reduce the annual payments for construction, maintenance, and operation," so as to make the clause read:

All moneys heretofore or hereafter refunded or received in connection with operations under the reclamation law, except repayments of construction and operation and maintenance charges, shall be a credit to the appropriation for the project or operation from or on account of which the collection is made, and shall be available for expenditure in like manner as if said sum had been specifically appropriated for said project or operation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, these two changes, purporting to be amendments, were not adopted in the committee. They were recommended by the subcommittee to the full committee, but the full committee rejected those two, and they should not come here as committee amendments.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask that the Senate reject the committee amendments on pages 123 and 124. The committee instructed me to have that done.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, before that motion is put I wish to be heard.

As I understand, the subcommittee struck out, on page 124, the proviso at the top of the page. The subcommittee that I appeared before agreed that that proviso should be stricken out. I was called from the Committee on Appropriations for a few minutes, and before I returned to it the committee had adjourned. I was informed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] that he did what he could, as one of the members of the subcommittee, to see that that matter was left out of the bill.

Mr. President, it is no more the business of this committee, or any member of it, to have that matter in this bill than any other private or public matter that could possibly become a matter of interest to anybody in the United States of America. That language was stuck in the bill in the House at 11 o'clock at night in a manner that ought itself to have attracted some attention at the time. I understand that the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], in the full committee, succeeded in having this particular provision remain in the bill. What actuated that course, I do not know. If I did not know the Senator from Washington, I would be justified in thinking that it was in order that some other irrigation projects somewhere might get a few dollars out of the sweat and labor of these particular people. I would be ready to charge anyone that I did not know as well as I know him with that sort of a motive. My long acquaintance with him and my great respect for him make me absolutely exclude him from the denunciation that I would otherwise have given to one who would have done that.

Mr. President, I appeal to the Senate and to the Senator from Washington that when I shall have gotten through with the proposition, he himself will say that it was a mistake to keep it in.

We started out on what is known as the Salt River irrigation project in Arizona under a direct contract that that dam should be built and the water furnished at $35 an acre. Everybody signed it. It kept on with these people, many of whose lands were mortgaged, until it had reached over $80 per acre to get that dam built and this water delivered. When this charge of $80 an acre came on them, it was so oppressive that the Senate remembers that there was no difficulty in my passing a bill through the Senate extending the time of payment for 20 years, as against the 10 years specified in the original irrigation act.

What happened? They started to build an electric-power plant in connection with this particular project. The Government was out of money. The agents of the Government came to the people of the Salt River Valley, who were laboring under this awful burden, and told them that if they would put up $1,000,000 out of their own pockets again they should have the profits of this particular power plant. There was no money in the irrigation fund to do it. They could not complete it. These people in one year put up $600,000 out of their pockets, and in the next year they put up an additional $600,000, a total of $1,200,000 additional, out of their own pockets, wrung from their labor and their sweat and their blood, to try to get from under all this. Under that promise of the department they raised the money, and they completed this particular electric-power plant. Now, as soon as they have completed it and have begun to receive the profits which were promised them if they put up the money, it is sought by this particular provision in the bill to take that money and divert it for 20 years and to give it to any other irrigation project, when there is not one in America paying a profit except this particular one, and this profit arises by reason of these particular people's contributions over and above anything that has ever been required under the ordinary irrigation project.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I quite agree with what the Senator has stated, and also remark in passing that there are one or two other reclamation projects in the same position as described by the Senator, but the proviso here is:

That the net receipts from the operation of power plants shall be credited to the construction account to reduce the final amount due, and shall not be used to reduce the annual payments for construction, maintenance, and operation.

Does not the Senator desire that provision?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is exactly what they put up the money for.

Mr. SMOOT. What the Senator from Washington desires is that that provision be retained in the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. My desire is that it go out of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. And for what purpose?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Because these people put up the money that produced this power outside of any irrigation project, under a promise of the department that if they did it they should have it to do just exactly what this provision says they shall not do.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I must correct the statement that I made just a few moments ago. In the case of the projects that I had in mind, the Government itself had furnished the money, and the profits from the power company in the first place were passed into the Treasury of the United States and not credited to the project itself. But I understand now that that has been changed, and I thought that this House provision was simply making a law what the practice of the department was.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. On the contrary, as I will show the Senator——

Mr. SMOOT. But, of course, if the people of the Salt River Valley put up the money separately and distinctly from the cost of the reclamation project, whatever profits are made by the electric-light plant ought to go to the people.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Unquestionably, and that is all I am asking; and I will demonstrate that to the Senate, and particularly to the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], who I know must have been misinformed, or he would not have insisted that it should remain in the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, just a moment. This proviso only refers to "all moneys heretofore or hereafter refunded or received in connection with operations under the reclamation law." Do I understand the Senator to say that the Reclamation Service controls the power plant, and is it operated under the reclamation law notwithstanding the fact that the people of the Salt River Valley furnished the money to erect the plant?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is absolutely true. The people raised money to the amount of $1,200,000 out of their own pockets, the Reclamation Service not having the money to complete or operate this plant at all. Under the direct provision, as I have shown you, of letters here before me, they told these people: "We have no money. If you will do this, you shall have this," to go to the very items that are denounced in this provision. It was agreed that it should be done for that very particular purpose.

Now, let me show you that there is not a single one of all the irrigation projects making a profit on this particular electric power except the Salt River Valley project.

In the hearings before the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands in the House of Representatives in the last Congress, Mr. HAYDEN stated that he would like to ask Mr. Davis what other projects there are, in addition to the Salt River Valley project, where a profit is now being made from the sale of power. The answer was:

On the Minidoka project, in Idaho, there is a small profit; a little on the Boise, Idaho, project. There are some receipts, which have not yet arrived at the dignity of a profit, on the Strawberry Valley project, in Utah"—

Every dollar of which was supplied by the Government—every dollar.

Now, let me read you, in this connection—and then I am sure my friend from Washington will recede from his position—a letter I received this morning from the Secretary of the Interior. Let me have the attention of the Senator from Washington. He says:

MY DEAR SENATOR SMITH: I am in receipt of your note of April 10, asking whether this department approves of the proviso on page 124 of H. R. 11, the sundry civil bill, which reads as follows:

"Provided, That the net receipts from the operation of power plants shall be credited to the construction account, to reduce the final amount due, and shall not be used to reduce the annual payments for construction, maintenance, and operation."

I am very familiar with the questions involved in this legislation, and after careful consideration I recommended to the last Congress that the net receipts from the operation of power plants upon United States reclamation projects be applied in satisfaction of the annual operation, maintenance, and betterment charges of the water users upon the project from which such revenue is derived, the balance, if any, to be utilized in reducing the construction charge.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for some information?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes; very gladly, when the Senator I am trying to convince is otherwise employed.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I recognize the fact that it would be wise and proper, in the event that the Senator's people have put up the money, that the proceeds arising therefrom should be turned over as he has suggested here; but I want a little information, please. What has been done with the receipts from the electric light or the power plant heretofore?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The Secretary of the Interior has said that they ought to go—and I think all that have been received up to to-day have gone—to the very purposes to which I claim they ought to be applied.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Up to this time the money has been applied as the Senator wants it applied in this amendment?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. In pursuance of the order of the Secretary that it would be so applied.

Mr. SHAFROTH. And that is toward the payment of the amount that is assessed against the landowners under the project?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes; and the landowner's maintenance of these ditches, his whole expense of running the project. If the Senator will wait until I am through with the Secretary's letter, I am sure he will have all the information any Senator will need.

Mr. SHAFROTH. All right; I shall be glad to hear it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona (reading)—

In other words, I favored, and still favor, giving to the water users the benefit of such receipts during the years when they are also under obligation to make annual payments upon the construction charges due. If the plant makes money by its operation, it has always seemed to me to be good judgment and common honesty to let the profits for the year apply against the maintenance charges for that year.

And, I might add, especially when the people themselves, outside of the irrigation business, raised the money to create the power plant.

The passage of this proviso would appear to be in violation—

Here is what the Secretary of the Interior says:

The passage of this proviso would appear to be in violation of a promise made by Supervising Engineer Hill in July, 1910, to the Salt River Valley Water Users' Association, as a result of which the members of that association voluntarily assessed themselves and paid into the reclamation fund about $1,200,000 for the completion of the power canals and plants on the Salt River project, Arizona. This money was collected and used by the Reclamation Service with the distinct understanding by the water users that the net revenue from the power plants on that project would reduce the yearly construction and operating charges of the water users thereunder.

So far as the Salt River project is concerned, I expect that a proposition made by me in accordance with congressional authority to the water users of the Salt River Valley, that they take over the plant and operate it themselves, will prove acceptable to them, and thus, I trust, end the interminable disputes between the water users and the Government as to the cost of the plant and its use and operation by casting upon them the burden of paying the Government for the work done and operating the plant at their own expense.

It is stated by the Secretary himself that this was a direct promise to the people of the Salt River Valley; that he told them that if they would do this they should have it for the very purposes that this particular provision that I am inveighing against would place on them; that they should be relieved of that. Under that agreement with the water users they raised $1,200,000; and now, as he says, he is ready to turn the plant over to them, they to pay the Government what the Government paid for the plant and leave them to run it in any way they please.

I hope that my friend from Washington, in view of these illuminating facts with which he was unacquainted, will not think for a moment of trying to keep in the bill a violation of the contract made by those people from whom they received this vast amount of money, adding a still bigger burden of $85 an acre on their lands that they must ultimately pay the Government.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I will take just a few minutes, I think, in justice to myself.

I would not do an injustice to the people of the Salt River project. I have had the pleasure of visiting that project a couple of times, and have enjoyed the hospitality of those people very much, and was very glad indeed to do everything that I possibly could to have that project go along to a successful conclusion. The reason why I opposed the amendment suggested by the subcommittee in the full committee, to strike out the proviso inserted by the House, was based upon the hearings had before the full committee of the House of Representatives.

It seems that the Government has spent about $13,000,000 on this project, and while other projects in the country have been paying back to the Treasury of the United States part of the construction charge, these people have never yet paid a cent to the Treasury of the United States upon the construction charge.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. When was it declared open so that they could pay?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, yes; I know that it was not declared open until, I guess, just this spring.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Last December. You could not pay on any project until it was declared open.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. So the Senator does not wish to draw the inference that there has been any partiality shown these people?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; I do not say that; but when I got to inquiring a little as to why this project had not been opened as the other projects were I found that apparently it was on account of the continued controversies between the people down there and the department. If anybody is to blame for it, I suppose it is the people down there, for working up these controversies from time to time.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. They were trying to save what they thought they owned.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am not questioning their motives or questioning their good faith in presenting these controversies. Nevertheless it is a fact, Mr. President, that while the people under the projects in other sections of the country have been paying back to the Treasury of the United States, as they promised to pay, the construction charges of the various projects, the people of this project—one of the most prosperous, one of the most wealthy, one of the most successful projects in the country—have not paid back one cent. I do not say who is to blame.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I dispute that statement, Mr. President.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I mean, upon the construction charges. They have paid rental, and things like that.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I dispute that, too. They have paid in probably the original $85 instead of $35 an acre. They started out with a contract of $35. They have brought it up now to $85 an acre that these people have got to pay.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Well, they are not an exception in that respect. I want to call the Senate's attention to the fact that the reclamation people could not, under the law, contract with those people that they should pay less than the actual cost of their project; and though some of the engineers may have represented and estimated that the cost would only be $35 an acre, yet if the cost was, as a matter of fact, $85 an acre, under the reclamation law the people would have to pay it.

Take it out in my State. In the case of one of our projects the original estimate was $50 an acre, and the people were assured that they would not have to pay more than $65 an acre at the outside; and yet, when the cost per acre was finally determined, it was $93 per acre, and our people have been paying and they will have to pay that. In the case of another project they estimated the cost to be $50 an acre, and it is now fixed at $110 an acre.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. How much have they paid back?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The provision in the law makes them pay almost a million dollars on the construction charge. Your people have not paid a cent.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. We paid $2,000,000 in trying to help the project.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is another proposition.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. I merely want to make a brief statement within the time of the Senator from Washington concerning this matter. I was present in the full committee, though not a member of the subcommittee, when this matter was disposed of, and I am satisfied the full committee did not understand it. I am satisfied if the matter had been thoroughly understood by the full committee it would have sustained the action of the subcommittee rather than overruled it. I believe that is the judgment of the members of the committee who are present and who have heard this debate. Of course I do not assume to speak for anyone else besides myself.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I beg pardon of the Senator, I did not hear his statement.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Washington was diverted by the activity of my friend from Utah while I was making my statement, and I will repeat, in substance, what I have already said. I am satisfied after hearing the statement of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] that the full committee did not understand this proposition, and that if it had understood it it would have sustained the action of the subcommittee rather than overruled it. The Senator from Washington will bear me out in the statement that the committee was acting hastily in making an effort to speedily report the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I admit the committee was acting hastily, and I suggest to the Senator that he is acting rather hastily now in not hearing the other side of this proposition. He seems to be willing to take the suggestion of the Senator from Arizona without hearing the other side of the proposition.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I am giving the statement of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I was going to refer to some matters with reference to that.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator from Washington will pardon me, I was merely trying to act hastily and hoped that the discussion might be shortened.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am going to make it as short as I can.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well, I have nothing further to say.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I thought in justice to myself, at any rate, I should say a few words with reference to the proposition suggested by the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator was very kind to yield to me; I appreciate it, and I shall be very glad to hear him.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, evidently the Salt River project in Arizona, as far as the electric plant is concerned, is different from all the other projects in the United States, the people having furnished the money for the erection of the plant. I agree with the Senator from Washington, that the House provision should stand with the exception of applying to the Salt River project in Arizona. I think we could settle differences by allowing the House provision to stand with this proviso. I call the attention of the Senator from Arizona to it. After the word "operation," on page 124, line 5, at the end of the proviso, insert this amendment:

Provided further, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to the Salt River project, Arizona.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I have no objection in the world to that. That is the only one in question where we have put up the money to make the payment. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Will it be satisfactory to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think I ought to make a statement here. I appreciate the kind expressions of my friend from Arizona with reference to myself, and I want to justify those expressions. I do not want to do any injustice to anyone, and I do not think that he wants any injustice done to anybody throughout the country either. I feel satisfied that he wants the settlers under these various projects to be treated all alike; and that is, where they have to pay in some other project to the Government, they ought to pay in Arizona.

Mr. FALL. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. FALL. The Senator will bear in mind that different projects are on an equal footing, the Salt River project, for instance, and the Elephant Butte project in New Mexico, where the country was settled, where farms were owned, where they were under irrigation, where they were in a high state of cultivation, and hundreds of thousands of dollars had been expended for the development of the country by pioneers, who were glad, of course, to have the assistance of the Government in establishing a large reservoir regulating the flow of the water, and they at the same time surrendered their water rights, which were prior, and which the Government could not take away from them. They surrendered their water rights to the Government, which enabled the Government to use the privately owned water rights and, by the construction of the reservoir and storing the excess waters, also to irrigate other Government lands which were absolutely valueless and worth nothing whatsoever. The same state of affairs exists in New Mexico in the Elephant Butte project. The people of those projects were cultivating lands 300 years ago, and those are not on all fours with the projects where the wild lands were taken under a project and where even an excessive cost of $110 an acre constitute the cost of the land, the home, and the water rights. The people down there own their water. These two projects are in a different position.

The point I was calling the Senator's attention to is that where the Government of the United States goes upon cultivated land to construct a project, where the waters are already being used, and there makes a statement to the people that we will construct this project at a certain cost, the people owning their land, not getting it from the Government of the United States under the provisions of the reclamation act, are entitled to rely absolutely upon the contract entered into between themselves and the Government, and those are not on all fours with the other project here, where they should be compelled to pay whatever excessive cost may be piled up by those in charge of the project.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If that were followed, it would relieve several projects in my State from a great amount that they have to pay.

Mr. FALL. It should, in my judgment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But it will not be done.

Mr. FALL. That is no fault of the Senators from New Mexico and Arizona.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is not the Senators' fault. Under the law every man who takes a water right under these projects must pay the cost of reclaiming the land.

Mr. FALL. That must be a reasonable cost, an amount fixed according to the circumstances, of course.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I did not mean that it would be an unreasonable cost. Of course the cost is the amount provided by the reclamation law.

Mr. FALL. The Senator can represent his own State; we will represent ours.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If Senators are going to try to represent their States by giving to their citizens privileges that they do not give to other States, then I will try to represent my State, and that is what I am trying to do here.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If the Senator will give us any privilege——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Not right now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington declines to yield.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I wanted to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington declines to yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know what the question would be. The Senator says it is an injustice. How does the Senator show that it is an injustice?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The Senator will not let me state it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Here is the injustice it proposes to do. It proposes to take the receipts of this power plant and apply them upon the first payment to be made upon the construction charge of the Salt River project. What does the testimony of the reclamation officials show? They say that these receipts will pay for four years at least all those construction payments. What is the result of that? That the settlers will not pay one cent of the construction charges to the Government, while the people in my State are paying to the Treasury of the United States the percentage required by the reclamation law. Now, I say, Mr. President, that that is hardly fair.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. Is it not true that there is quite a difference between the projects in the State of Washington and the State of Arizona in this respect? In the Salt River project in Arizona the people put up the money for the erection of the power plant. They furnish that money themselves as an investment outside of the reclamation project, and all the connection it has with the reclamation project is that the water runs through the reclamation canal and comes to the power plant created by the people of Arizona, whereas in Washington and in Utah—I know it is the case in my own State—the Government itself put up the money for the erection of the power plant, and it becomes a part of the reclamation project. Therefore, it seems to me the Government ought to have absolute control over that.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It seems to me what the Senator suggests confirms the position I take. If this power plant is not any part of the Salt River project, why should we seek to relieve the people under that project from paying into the Treasury their part of the construction of the other? Let them take the power and reimburse them for the money that they put up for the power. I do not want to take away any of that from them.

Mr. SMOOT. If there is any profit made on the power, then that ought to be declared as a dividend to the people, and if it were done that way they could take that same money and make the first payment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let them do that. Let the individuals make their payment to the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. On the reclamation project as they have the control now of the power plant they know exactly the amount to pay, and why not credit them with it instead of paying the money and compelling them to pay it back, taking the money out of one pocket and putting it into another?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course I do not know all the facts, but I have here the testimony of the reclamation people, and that really was the basis for my action. I did not know of this letter that the Senator read. As far as the contract made by the engineer with those people is concerned, if that contract was within his power, of course it should be lived up to, and even if it was not I do not know why it should not be lived up to, but I do know that the Government always says to people under these contracts, if the contract was not within the power of the officer to make they will not stand by it, and they do not stand by it. I do not say that they ought not to stand by it. I do not say there is no justice possibly in that, because I do not know all the circumstances, but I want to give the Senate the basis for my position in regard to this amendment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does not the Senator recognize that when the people put up $1,200,000 the net profit arising from that ought to go to their benefit, especially where it was agreed by the parties that it should be done for that purpose? That is what the Secretary of the Interior has done.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have no objection to its going to them.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is the very thing in dispute in this amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; it is not.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I accept the amendment of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Here is what Mr. Davis, of the Reclamation Service, says in the House committee hearing. He says:

> If the net power receipts were credited to the current payments as they come due, it would more than cover them for the first four years, and the surplus of those four years and the receipts would about cover them for the next two years.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Whose language is that?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Davis's, the chief engineer of the Reclamation Service. He continues:

> So that for six years the power profits would pay the entire construction charges, and after the sixth year they would pay about one-half of what the law requires.
> The CHAIRMAN. While it would be very advantageous to them, it would be very unjust to the reclamation fund and the project?

Now, I want to read what Mr. Davis, of the Reclamation Service, further says:

> Yes, sir. The result would be—.

I call the attention of the Senator from Utah to this language. This is what Mr. Davis, of the Reclamation Service, said:

> The result would be that the Government's investment in the power plant would remain unliquidated for the entire 20 years, whereas now the effect will be to liquidate that entire investment in power very much sooner.
>
> The CHAIRMAN. As a matter of fact, that was something a little outside of the purpose of the reclamation act?
> Mr. DAVIS. Yes, sir.
>
> The CHAIRMAN. And that money should be made available as quickly as possible.
>
> Mr. MONDELL. If such a plan as that is not followed you would scarcely be justified in expending considerable sums for power plants?
>
> Mr. DAVIS. I think not. I think that is the only course that will justify the investment in power, that it shall be returned from the earnings as quickly as possible.
>
> Mr. MONDELL. You think there is no doubt but what this plan will be adhered to?
>
> Mr. DAVIS. So far as I have a voice in it, it will.
>
> Mr. MONDELL. Strenuously?
>
> Mr. DAVIS. I shall favor it strenuously; yes, sir.
>
> Mr. MONDELL. I make that suggestion because I know there are some rather earnest gentlemen who would like to have it otherwise.
>
> Mr. DAVIS. Yes, sir.
> Mr. MONDELL. I think it would be well for those gentlemen to appreciate that everybody interested in the reclamation work feels that this is the proper and reasonable plan, and that no one connected with the Reclamation Service or the friends of the service on the outside is inclined to give them aid or encouragement in their efforts, if any were made, to persuade the Secretary to modify his plan.
> Mr. DAVIS. It is now held by the law officers of the Reclamation Service, and I think also the department, that this method of crediting that I have described is required by the law, and I think will continue to be so held unless Congress changes it. I think there is little doubt about that.

I wish to give the pages of the hearings from which I have read. Pages 638 and 639 of the hearings before the House committee in the Sixty-fourth Congress, second session, upon the sundry civil appropriation bill.

There is the position of the Reclamation Service. Apparently from the language here these people did not put up all of this money for the power plant. The Government apparently had taken money from the Reclamation Service and put it into the power-plant proposition, which is straining the law, to say the least of it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. Davis was speaking of the Salt River project?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is what he was talking about.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, all I said is based upon the statement of the Senator from Arizona that the people of the Salt River Valley furnished the money for the erection and completion of the power plant.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Apparently they did not furnish all of it. You did not have all the facts.

Mr. SMOOT. As to that I do not know.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The proposition here was that it was fair to credit these receipts upon the last payment, so that the people would begin to make the payment as other people, and when the credits meet what they put in on the total cost of the project it would be canceled. It struck me from this statement that that was fair. Now, the Secretary suggests a specific contract made by the service there. Of course, those things appeal to our sense of justice and fairness and equity. I do not know any more about the matter than I have read here. I feel that probably it would be well to let this matter go to conference. So I shall not insist further, having presented these matters, but in view of the suggestions made by my good friend from Arizona and the letter that was read by the Secretary, I shall not object to the adoption of this amendment as it is now proposed, although it was rejected in the full committee. I will let the matter go to conference and be worked out there.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 123.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The proviso is to be stricken from the bill.

Mr. MARTIN. I understand that the committee instructed me to move that the Senate disagree to this committee amendment. I understand there is no objection to that action, that the Senate shall disagree to it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. My motion is to strike out the proviso from the bill just as the subcommittee struck it out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Arizona that the question is now on the amendment on page 123.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. For that I care nothing.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment referred to by the Senator from West Virginia, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 124, line 1, after the word "operation," strike out the colon and the proviso.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask that that amendment be disagreed to. It is the committee amendment and I was instructed to ask that it be disagreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I do not understand the parliamentary situation that leaves it in, instead of leaving that proviso in the bill. I am trying to strike it out. The committee struck it out. I move to strike out at the top of page 124 the proviso.

Mr. MARTIN. The motion I stated is the correct motion, of course.

Mr. WARREN. That is correct, disagreeing to the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; it is not correct. The Senator from Arizona has made the correct motion. Unfortunately, the print before the Senate does not represent the action of the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is the point exactly.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is directly contradictory to what the committee finally did. The committee receded from the subcommittee amendment striking out the provision and left the provision in. Now the Senate has receded from the committee amendment and the Senator from Arizona moves, in effect, that the action of the subcommittee, on page 124, striking out the proviso be adopted. The easiest way out of the situation is the motion of the Senator from Arizona that the proviso at the top of page 124, beginning after the word "operation" and ending with line 5, inclusive, be stricken out.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let me suggest to the Senator that the proper motion to make is the motion of the Senator from Virginia to vote that down.

Mr. ROBINSON. That has been done. The RECORD will show that the motion of the Senator from Virginia to recede from the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if I may be permitted——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I take no interest in the amendment, but I have been watching the proceedings. The Senate disagreed to the amendment on page 123. That leaves the text exactly as it is printed. The next question is on agreeing to the amendment at the top of page 124. I can speak only of the bill before the Senate. I know nothing about the subcommittee's print. That amendment of the committee is to strike out the proviso and the question is on agreeing to the amendment. You do not put the question on a motion to disagree, but the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. The error in the position of the Senator, if the Senator will pardon me for calling attention to it, was pointed out a while ago. That is not a committee amendment. The print is a subcommittee print. The subcommittee did agree to the amendment striking out the proviso. The Senate committee refused to agree to that. The bill has never been reprinted with the committee amendments proper, but what is presented here is the subcommittee print.

Mr. LODGE. My point is that in the bill before the Senate the proviso is stricken out.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; it is not stricken out. That is the motion.

Mr. LODGE. The print before the committee I have on my desk, and it strikes out the proviso.

Mr. ROBINSON. But that is not the correct print.

Mr. LODGE. It does not make any difference what it is, provided it is the print before the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. The committee actually did not report that print. The easiest way out of the matter is to agree to the motion of the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I desire to say that I was the occupant of the chair when the Senator from Virginia moved to disagree to the amendment on page 123, and the Chair put the question on agreeing to the amendment and announced that the noes have it. At the time the then occupant of the Chair left the chair the motion of the Senator from Virginia to disagree to the amendment on page 124 was pending.

Mr. LODGE. Precisely; the motion is to disagree.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that is correct. The print which the Chair has in his possession and is on the desks of Senators, as stated by the Senator from Arkansas, states an amendment proposed by the subcommittee, but not an amendment proposed by the committee. If the committee desires to withdraw it, the committee can withdraw it. If the committee does not desire to withdraw it, the Chair will put the question on agreeing to the subcommittee's amendment.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, there is no subcommittee amendment here. There has been none and can be none under the rules of the Senate. There is no way for the subcommittee to be here before this body with an amendment; none is here and none has been here, and none has ever been before the Senate since I have been a Member of the body.

Mr. ROBINSON. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arizona, which is identical with the subcommittee amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. May I inquire what the report of the committee to the Senate really was? Was it this printed paper?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has no means of knowing anything except from the copy of the bill that comes before the Senate.

Mr. MARTIN. I have some means of knowing. I am the chairman of the committee, and this print I reported to the Senate by order of the full committee. I was not present when the subcommittee did its work—I was called out of the city; but this report was made by me as it is printed here, and it was made by order of the full committee. There is no subcommittee report here, none has been here, and none can come here under the rules of the Senate. This printed bill I reported here by order of the full committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the committee reported an amendment to strike out the following words:

Provided, That the net receipts from the operation of power plants shall be credited to the construction account to reduce the final amount due and shall not be used to reduce the annual payments for construction, maintenance, and operation.

Mr. MARTIN. That is in the print, and the committee instructed me to move in the Senate that that amendment be disagreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is the motion pending now.

Mr. MARTIN. That is the motion pending, to disagree to the proviso on page 124.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will accomplish the same purpose by voting on the question to agree to the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN. Exactly the same.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That leaves it as the Senator from Arizona does not want it. We should adopt a motion to strike it out, to carry out the view of the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The whole proposition is this: I have been trying my best to strike out those lines. I find, if I understand it correctly, that the lines are left in. The Senate is behind me in my desire to get rid of that particular proviso.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let the Senator move to reconsider.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Now, the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee that I appeared before struck out that proviso. In my absence the Senator from Washington moved that that proviso be kept in the bill. The chairman of the committee was instructed to keep that proviso in the bill, and pursuant to that he made a motion to keep it in. That motion was voted down. I do not know whether it would be stricken out or not; but from the mere action of the subcommittee I have made the motion to strike from the bill the proviso, notwithstanding any parliamentary conditions which may exist now. That would settle it as to the proviso, and that is what I want to have settled.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Arizona to say that he had no objection to the House provision providing there was a further amendment to it——

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. But I do not want to tangle it up now with other amendments. I have been waiting here for an hour to get the part stricken out that I want to go out.

Mr. MARTIN. I do not care how you fix it.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to ask the Senator from Arizona this question so that I may know just what he wants. If I offer this amendment:

Provided further, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to the Salt River project, Arizona.

Will that be satisfactory to him?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It will be perfectly satisfactory to me, but why not just strike out the proviso?

Mr. SMOOT. Very well.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I move that the action of the Senate——

Mr. WARREN. Before that motion is made, if the Senator will yield to me for a minute, I think I can state how the situation is and how we can very easily get out of it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It seems to me we should have a reconsideration and then a vote in favor of the committee amendment would make the condition exactly as the Senator from Arizona desires. As I understand it, the motion of the Senator from Virginia was to strike out the proviso at the top of page 124. That amendment was voted down and that leaves the bill as it is with that proviso in. To reconsider that and then vote in favor of the Senate subcommittee amendment would accomplish identically the purpose the Senator from Arizona desires and which the Senate is in favor of. I therefore make that motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is moved that the vote whereby the amendment proposing to strike out the proviso at the top of page 124 was rejected be reconsidered. [Putting the question.] The "ayes" have it. Now, the pending motion is to strike out the proviso at the top of page 124 heretofore read into the bill. [Putting the question.] The "ayes" have it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, to make the paragraph complete, we shall also have to strike out the words "and receipts from disposal of power or power possibilities," on page 123, in lines 21 and 22. The vote agreeing to that amendment must be reconsidered or else the paragraph will be inconsistent.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Utah is right about that.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment on page 123, lines 21 and 22, was agreed to, striking out the words "and receipts from disposal of power or power possibilities."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then, the question is on the motion to reconsider made by the Senator from Utah. [Putting the question.] The ayes have it. Now the question is on agreeing to the amendment. [Putting the question.] The ayes have it; and the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Alaska, expenses in," on page 126, line 20, after the word "heads," to strike out "$200,000" and insert "$215,000," so as to make the clause read:

Education in Alaska: To enable the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion and under his discretion, to provide for the education and support of the Eskimos, Aleuts, Indians, and other natives of Alaska; erection, repair, and rental of school buildings; textbooks and industrial apparatus; pay and necessary traveling expenses of superintendents, teachers, physicians, and other employees, and all other necessary miscellaneous expenses which are not included under the above special heads, $215,000; not exceeding $25,000 of which sum for the purchase of supplies and payment of freight on same, and for payment of labor and material for building and freight on same, shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 128, line 2, after the word "heads," to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$62,500," so as to make the clause read:

Medical relief in Alaska: To enable the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion and under his direction, with the advice and cooperation of the Public Health Service, to provide for the medical and sanitary relief of the Eskimos, Aleuts, Indians, and other natives of Alaska; erection, purchase, repair, rental, and equipment of hospital buildings; books and surgical apparatus; pay and necessary traveling expenses of physicians, nurses, and other employees, and all other necessary miscellaneous expenses which are not included under the above special heads, $62,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "National parks," on page 129, line 5, after the word "park," to strike out "$5,500," and insert "$24,800"; and in the same line, after the numerals "$24,800," to strike out "Provided, That no part of this appropriation or the revenues of the Yellowstone National Park shall be used for payment of salaries for the protection of the park, authorized by the act of March 3, 1883, to be performed by the detail of troops," so as to make the clause read:

Yellowstone National Park: For administration and protection, including not exceeding $600 for maintenance and repair of horse-drawn and motor-driven passenger-carrying vehicles for use of the superintendent in making inspection of the park, $24,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 131, line 6, after the word "employees," to strike out "$10,000," and insert "$20,000," so as to make the clause read:

Mesa Verde National Park, Colo.: For protection and improvement, including not exceeding $433 for maintenance and repair of horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles for use of the superintendent and employees, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 129, after line 23, it is proposed to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is authorized, in his discretion, to accept buildings, moneys, or other property which may be useful in the betterment of administration of affairs of the Glacier National Park, under his supervision, and which may be donated for park purposes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator from Virginia whether the other provision which is found in the Book of Estimates, giving the Secretary of the Interior authority over the roads leading to the Glacier National Park and the Blackfeet Reservation, ought not likewise to be incorporated?

Mr. MARTIN. As I recall it, the committee did not insert that because the Secretary of the Interior, under existing law, already has authority over that matter.

Mr. WALSH. The department does not seem to think so, for it recommended the granting of the authority.

Mr. MARTIN. Still, the Secretary of the Interior has the authority. I have no objection, however, in order to save time, to inserting that, though I am perfectly satisfied the Secretary of the Interior now has authority over it.

Mr. SMOOT. I have an objection to having that go in.

Mr. MARTIN. I am sure the Secretary of the Interior now has that authority.

Mr. WALSH. I am not sufficiently interested in the matter to get into a controversy about it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 131, after line 11, to insert:

Hereafter the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to accept for park purposes any lands and rights of way, including the Grandfather Mountain, near or adjacent to the Government forest reserve in western North Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 132, after line 6, to insert:

Lassen Volcanic National Park, Cal.: For protection and improvement, $5,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 132, after line 19, to insert:

Hot Springs Reservation, Ark.: For the employment of a landscape engineer and such other expenses as may be required for the preparation of a practical and comprehensive plan, together with an accurate estimate of the cost thereof, for improving the Hot Springs Reservation and immediate vicinity, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to be immediately available, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. I send to the desk an amendment which I ask may be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 132 it is proposed to strike out from line 13 to line 19, inclusive, as follows:

From and after July 1, 1918, all revenues of the national parks shall be covered into the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts; and the Secretary of the Interior is directed to submit, for the fiscal year 1919 and annually thereafter, estimates of the amounts required for the care, maintenance, and development of the said parks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be agreed to, without objection.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Virginia, what is the effect of that amendment?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Virginia, I will make a brief statement in reply to the Senator from Montana.

Under existing law funds from at least some of the national parks may be used by the Secretary of the Interior for the improvement of the national parks. Take, for instance, the Hot Springs Reservation in the State of Arkansas. That reservation was created about 1877. During the period which has elapsed since that time the revenues of the reservation have aggregated about $900,000. Of that amount something less than $600,000, I think, including all appropriations made out of funds not otherwise expended in the Treasury, has been paid for the improvement of the reservation. There is now on hand a fund of some $40,000 which is available for the improvement of the Hot Springs Reservation. That is the only reservation in the United States of which I know that is self-sustaining. As I have already stated, it is more than self-sustaining.

The effect of this provision is to cover into the Treasury funds which are now available for the improvement of the reservation, and, at the same time, no provision is made for maintaining the reservation. Of course, provision could be made hereafter. The Secretary of the Interior is very anxious that this provision be not retained in the bill, and I have a statement coming from his office, which I will ask to have incorporated in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, explanatory of that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Permission to do so will be granted in the absence of objection. The Chair hears none.

The statement referred to is as follows:

APRIL 4, 1917.

In compliance with Mr. Miller's request, I beg to quote from page 124 of the sundry civil bill, as it has been reported to the Senate by the committee, the provision relating to the transfer of the revenues of the national parks to the credit of the miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury on and after July 1, 1918:

"From and after July 1, 1918, all revenues of the national parks shall be covered into the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts; and the Secretary of the Interior is directed to submit, for the fiscal year 1919 and annually thereafter, estimates of the amounts required for the care, maintenance, and development of the said parks."

The effect of this provision will be, of course, to cover all the revenues of the Hot Springs Reservation into the Federal Treasury and necessitate our getting funds by direct appropriation thereafter upon recommendation of the appropriation committees of Congress.

At the present time we are able to accomplish considerable development work by using our revenues, and, of course, we contemplate making more extensive improvements. We have asked authority on several occasions to use $75,000 of the revenue fund for rebuilding the Government bathhouse, an improvement which is urgently needed, but this authority was never granted. Our revenues have accumulated because it was felt that there should be no large expenditure of money, such as the improvement of the free bathhouse or the construction of storm sewers on the mountains, until the fund should be large enough to complete any project undertaken.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator from Arkansas a question?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator think the language of the paragraph which it is proposed to strike out applies to the Hot Springs Reservation?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes. The Secretary of the Interior so construes it. It is a national park.

Mr. WARREN. Of course, it is a reservation; but I thought it was specifically provided for.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is the construction placed on the language by the Interior Department.

Mr. WARREN. I agree that that reservation should be taken care of, but, on general principles, I think it better to have the revenues go into the Treasury and then have them specifically appropriated; but at the present time, if this applies to the reservation in Arkansas, of course we must strike it out.

Mr. ROBINSON. It does; and it is intended to so apply.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice the rather peculiar wording of the amendment, and I will call the Senator's attention to it.

Mr. ROBINSON. The pending motion is a motion to strike out.

Mr. SMOOT. I was not aware of that.

Mr. ROBINSON. The amendment which the Senator has in mind has already been agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is agreed to, without objection.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Columbia Institution for the Deaf," on page 134, line 10, after the word "improvements," to strike out "$71,500" and insert "$73,000," so as to make the clause read:

For support of the institution, including salaries and incidental expenses, books and illustrative apparatus, and general repairs and improvements, $73,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of Justice," subhead "Public buildings," on page 136, after line 11, to strike out:

For the erection of shop buildings or factories and their appurtenances, $82,500; for the purchase and installation of woodworking machinery and the installation of same in the shop buildings or factories, and for other necessary equipment preparatory to manufacturing furniture and woodenware, $202,500; in all, $285,000.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, this amendment, as well as the following amendments proposing to strike out line 22 and the balance on page 136, and lines 1 and 2 on page 137, I think should have a word of discussion before we pass from them. I shall support the amendment, but I think the Senate should notice what would be contained in this bill if the amendment was not adopted.

Here is a provision for the expenditure of nearly a million dollars for the erection of factories at two Government prisons. There is not a line of legislation authorizing anybody to manage them or providing for the disposition of the product. There is not the creation of authority in anyone competent to handle them, to buy machinery, or to conduct the factories. They are simply appropriations—in one instance of $285,000 and in the other instance of $445,000 of money for the erection of two factories.

There is nothing connected with the duties of the Department of Justice that provides men capable of handling these factories or capable of constructing them.

Mr. SMOOT. And no appropriation to employ them.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; unless this fund is simply to be taken by the Attorney General and disposed of as he sees fit.

It is most peculiar legislation. It is astonishing, if it came from the department, that it should have come from it. There is a superintendent of prisons, who, in my opinion, is unfit for the place he occupies and who does not properly discharge his present duties. Four hundred thousand dollars of this money is to be spent in my own city, the city of Atlanta, to build and equip a cotton factory. I am not prepared to say that the convicts of the penitentiary are suited for operating a cotton factory. There is not a line about the disposition of the goods; there is no organization suited to the sale or to the purchase of the material necessary for the plant; there is no organization suited to the construction of the plant; and there is no organization suited to the operation.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, there is no such appropriation proposed. On the contrary, the committee propose to eliminate it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to say to the chairman of the committee that he misunderstands me. I am speaking in commendation of the action of our committee, and I am expressing my astonishment—I will not say "astonishment" at action anywhere else—but I wish to express my appreciation of the action of the Senate committee. I am emphasizing it now, lest by any possible chance there might be insistence and any conference report might be brought to the Senate approving such an appropriation.

If we are to build cotton factories we want to know what is to be done with the goods which they produce; if we are to build furniture factories in prisons, we wish to know what is to be done with the goods; and if we are going into the business, we should know who is to handle it.

A cotton factory does not pay, even with unpaid employees, unless managed by somebody competent to run it; and I really think the Department of Justice has about as much to do now as its head can intelligently handle.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 136, after line 21, to strike out:

For the erection of shop buildings or factories and their appurtenances, $129,500; for the purchase and installation of cotton textile machinery and the installation of same in the shop buildings or factories, and for other necessary equipment preparatory to manufacturing cotton textile goods, $315,500; in all, $445,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 137, line 7, after the word "building," to strike out "other than those specifically provided for herein," so as to make the clause read:

Appropriations in this act under the Department of Justice shall not be used for beginning the construction of any new or additional building at any Federal penitentiary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous objects, Department of Justice," on page 139, line 2, after the words "Attorney General," to insert "hire and operation of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles when necessary" in line 7, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$18,500" and insert "$32,500"; and in line 9, after the words "Attorney General," to strike out "$485,000" and insert "$685,000," so as to make the clause read:

Detection and prosecution of crimes: For the detection and prosecution of crimes against the United States; the investigation of the official acts, records, and accounts of marshals, attorneys, clerks, referees, and trustees of the United States courts and the Territorial courts, and United States commissioners, for which purpose all the official papers, records, and dockets of said officers, without exception, shall be examined by the agents of the Attorney General at any time; for the protection of the person of the President of the United States; for such other investigations regarding official matters under the control of the Department of Justice or the Department of State as may be directed by the Attorney General, hire and operation of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles when necessary, per diem in lieu of subsistence when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, and including not to exceed $32,500 for necessary employees at the seat of government, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General, $685,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Judicial," subhead "United States courts," on page 142, after line 12, to insert:

For the salary of the additional judge in the State of Texas, to be appointed under the act of February 26, 1917, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 142, after line 15, to insert:

For the salary of the United States district judge for the district of Porto Rico, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 142, after line 17, to insert:

For the salary of the clerk of the United States district court for the district of Porto Rico, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 145, line 22, after the word "Alaska," it is proposed to insert "Porto Rico."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 147, line 9, after the word "warden," to insert "first chaplain," so as to make the clause read:

Leavenworth, Kans., Penitentiary: For subsistence, including supplies from the prison stores for warden, deputy warden, first chaplain, and physician, tobacco for prisoners, kitchen and dining-room furniture and utensils, seeds and implements, and for purchase of ice if necessary, $110,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of Commerce," subhead "Lighthouse Service," on page 157, line 9, after the word "necessary," to strike out "$1,104,650" and insert "$1,150,000," so as to make the clause read:

Lighthouse vessels: For salaries and wages of officers and crews of light vessels and lighthouse tenders, including temporary employment when necessary, $1,150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Coast and Geodetic Survey," on page 158, line 17, after the numerals "$115,000," to insert "of which sum $10,000 shall be immediately available," so as to make the clause read:

Field expenses: For surveys and necessary resurveys of the Atlantic and Gulf coasts of the United States, including the coasts of outlying islands under the jurisdiction of the United States: Provided, That not more than $25,000 of this amount shall be expended on the coasts of said outlying islands, and the Atlantic entrance to the Panama Canal, $115,000, of which sum $10,000 shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 158, line 21, after the numerals "$250,000," to insert "of which sum $10,000 shall be immediately available," so as to make the clause read:

For surveys and necessary resurveys of coasts on the Pacific Ocean under the jurisdiction of the United States, $250,000, of which sum $10,000 shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 159, line 20, after the numerals "$90,000," to insert "of which sum $20,000 shall be immediately available," so as to make the clause read:

For continuing magnetic observations and to establish meridian lines in connection therewith in all parts of the United States; magnetic observations in other regions under the jurisdiction of the United States; purchase of additional magnetic instruments; lease of sites where necessary and erection of temporary magnetic buildings; continuing the line of exact levels between the Atlantic, Pacific, and Gulf coasts; determination of geographical positions, by triangulation or traverse for the control of Federal, State, boundary, and other surveys and engineering works in all parts of the United States and Alaska; determination of field astronomic positions; and for continuing gravity observations, $90,000, of which sum $20,000 shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 160, line 13, after the word "chandlery," to strike out "$45,000" and insert $56,000," so as to make the clause read:

Vessels: For repairs and maintenance of the complement of vessels, including traveling expenses of persons inspecting the repairs, and exclusive of engineer's supplies and other ship chandlery, $56,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, as I understand, we are simply considering committee amendments. I desire to offer an amendment at this point in the bill but will, of course, defer doing so until the committee amendments have been concluded.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 161, after line 18, to insert:

Chief cartographer, $2,700; topographic and hydrographic draftsmen—one $2,200, one $2,000, one $1,800, one $1,600; in all, $10,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 162, line 18, after the word "force," to strike out "$220,770" and insert "$231,070," so as to make the clause read:

In all, pay of office force, $231,070.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Fisheries," at the top of page 172, to insert:

Developing aquatic sources of leather, Bureau of Fisheries: For developing by the Bureau of Fisheries in cooperation with the Bureau of Standards new aquatic sources of supply of leather, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, to be immediately available, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 173, to insert:

Repairs to Bureau of Fisheries steamer Fish Hawk: For overhauling and repairing United States Bureau of Fisheries steamer Fish Hawk, provide new propelling machinery, and all other items necessary to place her in a seaworthy condition, including incidental and miscellaneous expenses in connection therewith, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Standards," on page 176, after line 12, to strike out:

First, starting at the northwest corner of the present site of the Bureau of Standards on Idaho Avenue and running about 98 feet northeast along Idaho Avenue to Van Ness Street; thence about 908 feet due east along Van Ness Street to a point intersecting a line formed by extending the eastern boundary line of the bureau's present site; thence about 83 feet due south to the northeast corner of the present site of the Bureau of Standards; thence about 961 feet due west to the point of starting at Idaho Avenue, including about 77,600 square feet; second, starting at the point of intersection of the southern boundary of the present site of the bureau with the northern side of Tilden Street, proceeding due east about 750 feet to the southeast corner of the present site; thence due south about 153 feet along a line formed by the extension of the eastern boundary of the present site to the point of intersection of that line with the northern side of Tilden Street; thence about 768 feet in a general westerly direction following the line of the northern side of Tilden Street to the point of starting, including about 77,800 square feet.

And insert:

First, starting at the northwest corner of the present site of the Bureau of Standards on Idaho Avenue, and running thence along the easterly line of said avenue, northeasterly to the northerly line of the Pierce Mill Road; thence with said northerly line westerly to the easterly line of Idaho Avenue, 90 feet wide; thence with said easterly line, northeasterly 95 feet, more or less, to the south line of Van Ness Street, 60 feet wide; thence with said south line 910 feet, more or less, to intersect the prolongation of the present easterly line of the Bureau of Standards site; thence with said line of prolongation, southerly 97 feet, more or less, to the northeast corner of the Bureau of Standards grounds; thence with the north line of said grounds, west 965 feet to the point of beginning, containing 91,500 square feet; second, starting at the point of intersection of the southerly boundary of the present site of the Bureau of Standards with the northerly line of Tilden Street, 120 feet wide, as projected on the permanent system of highways plan, and running thence with said southerly boundary, east 1,125 feet, more or less, to the southeast corner of the present bureau site; thence with the prolongation of the easterly line of the present site, southerly 100 feet, more or less, to the northerly line of the said Tilden Street; thence with said northerly line, and with a curve deflecting to the right, westerly 1,140 feet to the point of beginning, containing 124,000 square feet.

So as to make the clause read:

To enable the Secretary of Commerce to acquire, by condemnation or otherwise, about 155,400 square feet of additional land for enlargement of the present site of the Bureau of Standards, $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the land to be acquired hereunder being described as follows: First, starting at the northwest corner of the present site of the Bureau of Standards, on Idaho Avenue, and running thence along the easterly line of said avenue northeasterly to the northerly line of the Pierce Mill Road; thence with said northerly line westerly to the easterly line of Idaho Avenue, 90 feet wide; thence with said easterly line northeasterly 95 feet, more or less, to the south line of Van Ness Street, 60 feet wide; thence with said south line 910 feet, more or less, to intersect the prolongation of the present easterly line of the Bureau of Standards site; thence with said line of prolongation southerly 97 feet, more or less, to the northeast corner of the Bureau of Standards grounds; thence with the north line of said grounds west 965 feet to the point of beginning; containing 91,500 square feet. Second, starting at the point of intersection of the southerly boundary of the present site of the Bureau of Standards with the northerly line of Tilden Street, 120 feet wide, as projected on the permanent system of highways plan, and running thence with said southerly boundary east 1,125 feet, more or less, to the southeast corner of the present bureau site; thence with the prolongation of the easterly line of the present site southerly 100 feet, more or less, to the northerly line of the said Tilden Street; thence with said northerly line, and with a curve deflecting to the right, westerly 1,140 feet to the point of beginning; containing 124,000 square feet.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, on behalf of the committee, I offer an amendment, which I ask to have adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 178, after line 13, it is proposed to insert:

Office of Secretary: To enable the Secretary of Labor to carry into effect the provisions of the act of March 4, 1913, entitled "An act to create a Department of Labor," to foster, promote, and develop the welfare of wage earners of the United States as applied to women, $46,920.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. I also, in behalf of the committee, offer the amendment which I send to the desk to correct a total.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 206, line 11, correct the total so as to read "$4,756,500."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I understand that the bill is now being read for committee amendments, and it is very likely that the bill will be passed this afternoon, so I ask the chairman of the committee if he will allow me to offer an amendment which has been considered and reported unanimously by the Committee on Irrigation, to be offered to the Department of Labor items? I desire to offer the amendment so that such action as the Senate may see fit to take may be taken now. The reason I seek to offer the amendment at this time is that I have a very important engagement at one of the departments in a very few minutes, which I am very anxious to keep, and I desire to submit the amendment and make such explanation of it as may be necessary.

Mr. MARTIN. There are some further committee amendments; but I am willing to have the Senator offer his amendment, although it is a little extraordinary and questionable whether I have a right, or anybody else has a right, to change a unanimous-consent agreement of the Senate. However, I have no objection to offer, so far as I am concerned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the Senator from South Carolina presenting his amendment now? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come on page 183, after the word "allowable," in line 16.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 183, after the word "allowable," the first word in line 16, it is proposed to insert the following:

That for the purpose of carrying on the work of the Bureau of Naturalization of the Department of Labor provided for by the act approved June 29, 1906 (Stat L., vol. 34, pt. 1, p. 596), as amended by the act approved March 4, 1913 (Stat. L., vol. 37, p. 736), of promoting instruction and training in citizenship of applicants for naturalization, including personal services in the District of Columbia, attendance at educational and citizenship conventions by officers and employees of the Bureau of Naturalization and members of its field force, and other necessary expenses incidental thereto, additional clerks and members of the field force, authority is hereby given for the reimbursement of the printing and binding appropriation of the Department of Labor upon the records of the Treasury Department, and annually hereafter, from the naturalization fees deposited in the Treasury through the Bureau of Naturalization for the cost of publishing the citizenship textbook, prepared and to be distributed by the Bureau of Naturalization to those candidates for citizenship only who are in attendance upon the public schools, such reimbursement not to exceed $30,000, and to be made upon statements by the Commissioner of Naturalization of books actually delivered to such student candidates for citizenship and a monthly naturalization bulletin, mileage, and fees to witnesses subpœnaed on behalf of the United States; the expenditures from this appropriation shall be made in the manner and under such regulations as the Secretary of Labor may prescribe, $305,000.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I merely want to call attention to the fact that this matter has been before the Committee on Immigration twice, this being the second time, and, according to the record, it has been recommended practically unanimously.

The necessity for teaching aliens, especially in the congested districts, the rudiments of our language and something of our Government and its institutions has appealed to everyone. I hope the chairman of the committee will at least allow this amendment to be accepted and go to conference, in order that the conferees may take such action upon it as they may see fit.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, the matter was not submitted to the Committee on Appropriations, and I am entirely without knowledge in respect to it. The mere reading of it shows that it is a matter that needs careful investigation. I am very willing, however, for the Senate to adopt it, in order that it may undergo investigation when the bill gets to conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina is agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, there are a number of committee amendments which have not yet been disposed of.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Legislative," on page 184, after line 11, to insert:

For two new boilers for the Botanic Garden to replace two recently rendered unfit for use, to be immediately available, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 184, after line 22, to insert:

Senate Office Building: For maintenance, miscellaneous items and supplies, and for all necessary personal and other services for the care and operation of the Senate Office Building, under the direction and supervision of the Senate Committee on Rules, $55,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 185, after line 2, to insert:

For furniture for the Senate Office Building and for labor and material incident thereto and repairs thereof, window shades, awnings, carpets, glass for windows and bookcases, desk lamps, window ventilators, etc., $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 185, after line 6, to insert:

For the Capitol: For repairs, improvements, and equipment for Senate kitchens and restaurants, Capitol Building and Senate Office Building, including personal and other services, to be expended by the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, under the supervision of the Committee on Rules, United States Senate, $17,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Government Printing Office," subhead "Public printing and binding," on page 189, line 7, after the word "work," to strike out "$5,250,000" and insert "$5,296,000," so as to read:

Necessary equipment, maintenance, and supplies for the emergency room for the use of all employees in the Government Printing Office who may be taken suddenly ill or receive injury while on duty; other necessary contingent and miscellaneous items authorized by the Public Printer; and for all the necessary materials and equipment needed in the prosecution and delivery and mailing of the work, $5,296,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 189, line 11, after the word "sum," to strike out "$5,999,720" and insert "$6,045,720," so as to make the clause read:

In all, for public printing and binding, including salaries of office force, payments for holidays and leave of absence, and the last-named sum, $6,045,720; and from the said sum printing and binding shall be done by the Public Printer to the amounts following, respectively, namely.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 190, line 1, after the words "War Department," to strike out "$250,000" and insert "$275,000," so as to make the clause read:

For the War Department, $275,000: Provided, That the sum of $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used for the publication, from time to time, of bulletins prepared under the direction of the Surgeon General of the Army, for the instruction of medical officers, when approved by the Secretary of War, and not exceeding $50,000 shall be available for printing and binding under the direction of the Chief of Engineers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 193, line 10, after the word "grounds," to strike out "$200,000" and insert "$221,000," so as to make the clause read:

For the Library of Congress, including the copyright office and the publication of the Catalogue of Title Entries of the copyright office, and binding, rebinding, and repairing of library books, and for building and grounds, $221,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "The Panama Canal," on page 200, line 1, after the word "prisoners," to strike out "$600,000" and insert "$700,000," so as to make the clause read:

For civil government of the Panama Canal and Canal Zone, salaries of district judge $6,000, district attorney $5,000, marshal $5,000, and for gratuities and necessary clothing for indigent discharged prisoners, $700,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 200, line 3, after the words "In all," to strike out "$13,055,000" and insert "$13,155,000," so as to make the clause read:

In all, $13,155,000, to be immediately available and to continue available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 203, after line 10, to insert:

Upon the application of the Governor of the Panama Canal the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to transfer to St. Elizabeth's Hospital, in the District of Columbia, for treatment all American citizens legally adjudged insane in the Canal Zone whose legal residence in one of the States and Territories or the District of Columbia it has been impossible to establish. Upon the ascertainment of the legal residence of persons so transferred to the hospital, the superintendent of the hospital shall thereupon transfer such persons to their respective places of residence, and the expenses attendant thereon shall be paid from the appropriation for the support of the hospital.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Fortifications, Panama Canal," on page 205, after line 24, to insert:

For necessary equipment, including machinery and its installation, for the ordnance repair shops, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 206, after line 3, to strike out:

The appropriations of $160,000 for one dock and $100,000 for necessary dredging for the ordnance depot for the Panama Canal, contained in the general deficiency appropriation act, approved September 8, 1916, are repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 206, line 9, after the words "In all," strike out "$46,500" and insert "$86,500," so as to make the clause read:

In all, $86,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 206, line 11, after the words "Panama Canal," to strike out "$1,716,500" and insert "$4,756,000," so as to make the clause read:

In all, specifically for fortifications and armament thereof for the Panama Canal, $4,756,000.

The SECRETARY. The committee proposes to change that total so that it will read "$4,756,500."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, before we enter upon amendments offered from the floor I desire to ask that we recur to an amendment appearing upon pages 113 and 114, proposed by the committee. It was considered by the Senate during my absence from the Chamber while in attendance upon the session of one of the committees. This amendment affects the Bureau of Mines. It provides, as the bill came from the House:

Not exceeding 20 per cent of the preceding sums for investigation as to the causes of mine explosions; for inquiries and scientific and technologic investigations concerning the mining, preparation, treatment, and utilization for ores and other mineral substances; for inquiries and investigations concerning the mining, preparation, treatment, and utilization of petroleum and natural gas; and not exceeding 30 per cent of the preceding sum for investigation of mineral fuels and unfinished mineral products belonging to or for the use of the United States, may be used during the fiscal year 1918 for personal service in the District of Columbia.

That was stricken out, and the following inserted in lieu thereof:

Not exceeding 20 per cent of each of the four preceding sums may be used during the fiscal year 1918 for personal services in the District of Columbia.

The Director of the Bureau of Mines addressed to me a communication upon this subject which I should like to read to the Senate. The director insists that the work of the bureau will be very seriously hampered if the amendment proposed by the committee is adopted.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I take the liberty of making a suggestion to the Senator. It seems that the Senate committee struck out the clause and inserted a substitute in lieu of it. What we inserted is what the House committee had reported. The language which we struck out was put in on the floor of the House; but we felt that it needed further investigation, and that took it to conference. If it is agreeable to the Senator, instead of undertaking to unravel it here on the floor this will take the whole matter to conference, and I should be very glad to hear from him and to have him come before the conference committee. We did it from the lack of information. We have adopted exactly what the House committee had originally inserted in the bill.

Mr. WALSH. I shall be very glad to accept the Senator's suggestion.

Mr. MARTIN. This will take the whole matter to conference, and then we will give it careful consideration.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I now offer the amendment which I sent to the desk a moment ago.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 77, after line 10, it is proposed to insert:

For prosecuting work of flood-control in accordance with the provisions of the flood-control act approved March 1, 1917, $10,500,000.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I desire to submit a brief statement concerning this amendment. It provides the funds required for the next fiscal year to carry out the provisions of the flood-control act approved March 1, 1917. That act was the subject of full discussion in the Senate and accomplished an important advance in our methods of dealing with flood problems, especially relating to the Mississippi and its tributaries, and the Sacramento River.

The act constitutes an authorization, but carries no appropriations. It contemplates an aggregate expenditure of Federal funds on the Mississippi River of not exceeding $45,000,000, not more than $10,000,000 to be expended during one fiscal year. It authorizes $5,600,000 for the Sacramento River and limits the annual expenditure to not exceeding $1,000,000. The Missippi River project is a continuance of plans heretofore adopted and in progress for a number of years under the direction of the Mississippi River Commission.

The rivers and harbors bill during the last session carried $6,000,000 for this work, leaving an additional sum of $4,000,000 necessary therefor. The rivers and harbors bill, as everyone knows, failed of passage, and it is now necessary to provide the total amount estimated for, namely, $10,000,000, which, in addition to the $500,000 required for the Sacramento River, amounts to $10,500,000.

The Sacramento River item is also in pursuance of the work already begun, and it will include some features which are new, for which the plans have not yet been prepared in detail; and in the opinion of the War Department the present requirements will be met by the appropriation of $500,000.

The passage by Congress of the flood-control bill fairly precludes questions as to the necessity for this appropriation. It was our object in advocating and passing that measure to place this great enterprise on a substantial and permanent basis and to insure its prompt completion. Congress must have had all this fully in mind when it passed the flood-control bill.

If this appropriation is not made the work will necessarily be suspended, and loss to the Government will inevitably result. To promptly carry forward the plans already made will result in a saving to the Government of several million dollars. Moreover, it is in harmony with a wise policy of conservation, the importance of which is emphasized by the existing national crisis. Surely every consideration of wisdom now prompts us to prevent a diminution in our food supply. Not only would the food supply of the United States be greatly reduced if this work should be suspended, delayed, or discontinued, by reason of the consequent destruction of crops and property within the vast area to be protected from overflows by this work, but it is also true that a speedy completion of the great task to which this appropriation contributes means an enormous increase in our food supply, necessary under normal conditions, and imperative under those which surround us now.

It is therefore urged that the amendment be agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I do not desire at this time to question the value of the project for which this money is required; but it strikes me that in view of the great emergency that faces the country, and the prospect of the tax burden being enormously multiplied during the next year or two to support a very much expanded army, we could afford to wait before we spent this $10,000,000. There are many projects for which, of course, in ordinary times, in times of peace, it would be entirely wise and proper for Congress to appropriate money; but this is a time when I think some projects ought to be postponed. Ten million dollars is a pretty big sum of money. If we are to go ahead with things which are not immediately necessary merely on the ground that they will be of some benefit in the future, there will be no limit whatsoever to the amount of money which can be appropriated.

I suggest that this amendment should not receive the sanction of the Senate at this time, in view of the emergency which confronts us.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. Has this been estimated for?

Mr. ROBINSON. It has.

Mr. LODGE. Has the department sent in an estimate for it?

Mr. ROBINSON. The War Department has formally estimated for it. I have a copy of the estimate in my hand, and I will ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. LODGE. I mean, has an estimate been sent in for the appropriation?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes, sir. This is the estimate which was submitted to the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the estimate referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

The estimate is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, March 3, 1917.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress copy of a communication from the Secretary of War of the 3d instant, submitting estimates of appropriations required by the War Department for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, for prosecuting work of flood control on the Mississippi and Sacramento Rivers in accordance with the provisions of the flood-control act approved March 1, 1917, as follows:

For the Mississippi River	$4,000,000
For the Sacramento River	500,000
Total	4,500,000

Respectfully,
BYRON R. NEWTON,
Acting Secretary.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 3, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to forward herewith for transmission to Congress supplemental estimates of appropriations aggregating $4,500,000 required by the War Department for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, for prosecuting work of flood control on the Mississippi and Sacramento Rivers in accordance with the provisions of the flood-control act approved March 1, 1917.

From the accompanying letter of the Chief of Engineers it appears that the act of March 1, 1917, authorizes the prosecution of certain work of flood control on the Mississippi and Sacramento Rivers to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, but the act itself carries no appropriation. It is considered a matter of great urgency to prosecute the work vigorously and these estimates are submitted at this time with a view to securing funds at this session in order to carry out the provisions of the act referred to.

The flood-control act, authorizing this work, having been passed on March 1, 1917, it was of course impracticable to include these items in the regular estimates for 1918.

Very respectfully,
NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, March 2, 1917.

From: The Chief of Engineers, United States Army.
To: The Secretary of War.
Subject: Estimate of funds required for work of flood control on Mississippi and Sacramento Rivers.

1. The flood-control act of March 1, 1917, authorizes the prosecution of certain work of flood control on the Mississippi River and the Sacramento River, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, but the act itself carries no appropriations. It provides that the expenditures on the Mississippi shall not exceed $45,000,000 in the aggregate, and not more than $10,000,000 shall be expended during any one fiscal year. It authorizes a total expenditure of $5,600,000 on the Sacramento River and provides that not more than $1,000,000 shall be expended for this work during any one fiscal year.

2. The work proposed on the Mississippi River is in continuation of work of the same character as that which has been carried on for a number of years, so that it is well organized and can proceed at the maximum rate permitted. The pending river and harbor bill carries an item of $6,000,000 for this work and the additional estimate submitted herewith therefore calls for $4,000,000 for the Mississippi River. Some doubt has been expressed concerning the passage of the river and harbor bill. If it does not pass, this estimate for the Mississippi should be increased from $4,000,000 to $10,000,000.

3. The work proposed on the Sacramento River is partly in line with work already in progress, but will also include other features that are new for which plans have not been prepared in detail. While it is a matter of great urgency to prosecute the work vigorously, it is believed that for the first year an appropriation amounting to one-half of the authorized limit of annual expenditure will suffice and the estimate is, therefore, submitted for $500,000.

W. M. BLACK,
Brigadier General.

Estimates of appropriations required for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, by the Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

WAR DEPARTMENT.

OFFICE OF CHIEF OF ENGINEERS.

Mississippi River—
For prosecuting work of flood control in accordance with the provisions of the flood-control act approved Mar. 1, 1917 (act Mar. 1, 1917)	$4,000,000
NOTE.—This amount is in addition to the item of $6,000,000 for this work in the pending river and harbor bill. If the river and harbor bill fails to pass, this item of $4,000,000 should be increased to $10,000,000.—(W. M. Black, Brig. Gen., Chief of Engineers.)
Sacramento River, Cal.—
For prosecuting work of flood control in accordance with the provisions of the flood-control act approved Mar. 1, 1917 (act Mar. 1, 1917)	500,000

Mr. SMOOT. This is a subsequent estimate, then?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. It was not in the Book of Estimates, but it came in as a subsequent estimate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is not material in this case. It is made to carry out the provisions of existing law.

Mr. SMOOT. I just wanted to ask for information, Mr. President; that is all. I wanted to know whether it was an original estimate or whether it was a subsequent estimate.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ROBINSON. In just a moment. I do not know what the Senator means by "an original estimate." In an estimate of March 2, 1917, the statement was made that—

> The work proposed on the Mississippi River is in continuation of work of the same character as that which has been carried on for a number of years, so that it is well organized and can proceed at the maximum rate permitted. The pending river and harbor bill carries an item of $6,000,000 for this work.

The estimate goes on to state that if this is not passed it will require $10,000,000. Then, on a subsequent date, it was stated that it would require $10,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. What I mean by the Book of Estimates is this: Under the law the Secretary of the Treasury is required to have the estimates in by a certain date.

Mr. ROBINSON. That could not have been done in this case. This act only passed on March 1, 1917.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not saying a word about that. I simply——

Mr. ROBINSON. But the Senator was asking me a question, and surely he does not object to my answering it. It could not have been in the Book of Estimates, because the act was not passed until March 1, 1917.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from Arkansas if it is not a fact that there is an unexpended balance to the credit of that project?

Mr. ROBINSON. No; there is none.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. As I recollect—I have frequently been thrown in contact with the Mississippi River improvement—we never have made an appropriation for this work in excess of $6,000,000 in any one year; and while I would not desire to do anything which would in any way embarrass the work to be undertaken upon the Mississippi River, and while I voted for the bill which has become a law, I quite agree with the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] that in the present stress if a less sum than $10,000,000 will suffice we ought to address ourselves seriously to that question now.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Senator says that this amount can be expended and will be expended during the year, of course anyone interested in its completion would hardly desire to oppose it. We have in the past done a great deal of work in a very desultory manner on the Mississippi River, and, as I have said on this floor before, I am utterly opposed to piecemealing that work. It is too important to the country and to the sections immediately related to that project. But there is a great deal of wisdom in what the Senator from New York says. If half this sum will suffice, we ought not to appropriate double the amount that can be appropriately used; and we never have appropriated at any time, during stress or otherwise, for the Mississippi River over $6,000,000 for a single year's work.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield to me?

Mr. ROBINSON. Just a moment, please. The Senator from Michigan has asked if there is not an unexpended balance available for the purposes which this appropriation is intended to meet. I have refreshed my memory by inquiring of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], whom I regard as an authority on these subjects, and he states that there is no balance.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the Senator permit me? Perhaps there is no balance because this is now practically a new project. The whole Mississippi River situation has been changed by recent legislation, and for that project as it now exists under the law there could not very well be an unexpended balance.

Mr. ROBINSON. It will require, so says the department, this $10,500,000 during the next fiscal year to carry forward the plans that have already been adopted; and that was the contemplation of the original flood-control act, the act of March 1, 1917. The purpose of that act was to put these appropriations upon a permanent and continuing basis.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, may I say just one word to the Senator? I understand, in reply to the question asked by the Senator from Michigan, that all of the money appropriated last year for the Mississippi River has either been expended or contracts have been let for same. I will say to the Senator from Michigan that the Mississippi River Commission is one place in this Government which never holds back a dollar. The needs are so great that as soon as an appropriation is made contracts are immediately let for the whole sum carried therein. I saw a great deal of this work going on myself when I was in Louisiana just a few days ago. I venture to say that there is not a dollar of the appropriation of last year that is now uncontracted for. I have been told that they have let out contracts for every dollar of it. Of course there are a few dollars on hand now, but within a very short while it will all be gone—before the end of this fiscal year.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. There is in this plan a joint responsibility which devolves upon certain communities particularly affected.

Mr. RANSDELL. There is.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And those communities have engaged to contribute a very large part of this cost.

Mr. RANSDELL. They have.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. They have done so very liberally in the past; and the local interest is to be coextensive with the General Government?

Mr. RANSDELL. Absolutely; and the commission can not spend the money unless the money from the communities is given at the same time, or until the Secretary of War is satisfied that it will be put up; and I will say to the Senator that the legislatures of the various States, in anticipation of the passage of the flood-control bill, have authorized the various levee boards to issue bonds. The local communities are in position to put up their portion of the money. They will carry on their work just as rapidly as the National Government does, and the National Government can not spend its money unless the local people put up their pro rata share.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I am not at all doubtful of the purpose and intention of those communities to carry out in good faith the terms of this act; but we are expending vast sums of money. Such figures as now confront us would have seemed absolutely impossible a few years ago; and I do not now refer to the defense items which will stagger the country. But this money must come from some source. We do not know what that source will be; but if we pile up these burdens they must be met, and if in meeting them our action is to assume a confiscatory form, we may well hesitate before we get into such a situation.

Mr VARDAMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. My sympathy with the plan to improve the Mississippi River, I think, will not be misunderstood. I am strongly in favor of it, but I wonder whether a good opportunity is not here presented to at least temporarily preserve our cash resources to the extent of several million dollars without doing violence to this great work.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, the appropriation carried in the amendment is asked pursuant to an act of Congress approved March 1, 1917, providing for the control of the flood waters of the Mississippi and Sacramento Rivers. I realize the importance of economy in the matter of appropriations. I feel as keenly as any Member of this body the great burden that is going to be placed upon the backs of the toiling masses of this country. I would do anything within my power to lessen the load which the extraordinary conditions are going to put upon them. But this is not a donation; it is an investment. The money appropriated by this amendment will enable the people who must pay the expenses of war—feed and clothe the Nation by their toil—it will be a help rather than a hindrance to them in meeting the fearful demands upon them. The Congress considered maturely the question of dealing in this way with the flood waters of the Mississippi River, and after mature deliberation agreed upon a plan for its solution, of which this resolution is a part. Anything that adds to the productivity of the soil—any measure that has for its purpose the protection of the alluvial lands from inundation, from the ravages and devastation of the overflow, I repeat, is not a donation. It is not an extravagance, but rather a wise investment. It is quite true Congress has in the past appropriated something like $6,000,000 a year for similar work on the Mississippi River; but the wisdom of the engineers and the experience of mankind generally in dealing with this problem have demonstrated that the method of handling the question in piecemeal, as has been done in the past, is not only inefficient, disappointing in results, but most expensive. The Chief of the Board of Engineers came before the Committee on Commerce of the Senate and stated that if the flood-control bill should provide for an expenditure of $45,000,000 by the General Government, extending over a period of five years, with an annual appropriation of $10,000,000, it would enable the Government to do this work by the continuous-contract system for something like 15 or 20 per cent less than by yearly appropriations, and thereby save to the taxpayers approximately $8,000,000. That matter was thoroughly discussed in the Senate; it was thoroughly understood during the consideration of the flood-control bill, and the wise, scientific policy embodied in that measure approved. It will be a great mistake—in fact, it will be acting in bad faith—for the Senate to refuse to carry out the terms of that bill and refuse to make this appropriation. The people throughout the Mississippi Valley and along the banks of the river will be required to contribute not less than one dollar for every two that the Government appropriates, and it must be paid before a dollar of the Government money is available. It is a fair division of the burden, and I think will meet the approval of the American people who are to pay the taxes and furnish the sinews of war with which the work will be done. The Mississippi River Commission and the Board of Engineers, I apprehend, have begun to make arrangements already to carry out the terms of the flood-control bill. They are making ready to carry out this contract, for it is a contract between the people of the Mississippi Valley and the Government; and unless the Government stands by its contract and executes the law and makes the appropriation, of course, the work can not be done under the continuing-contract system, which system would result in great economy to the taxpayers of this country.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, there have been no contracts entered into as yet with reference to this matter.

Mr. VARDAMAN. But, as a matter of fact, the Board of Engineers, I apprehend, have laid out the plans, pursuant to the law passed last March, and they are doubtless getting ready to carry out the terms of the statute.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. To be sure.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Now, there is this fact to be considered: We are going to appropriate, it seems from the papers—and they have pretty correctly forecasted what Congress would do—something like $7,000,000,000 for the prosecution of the war as a starter, as my friend from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] says. A very large number of men are going to be taken from the factories, from the farms, from the productive enterprises of the country. Somebody has got to raise the corn and wheat and meat with which to feed these people. There must be cotton raised also to clothe them, both to put on their backs and on their feet—for if hides become much more costly people will soon be wearing cotton shoes. Now, this is a good conservation scheme. It will save from the ravages of the flood the most productive section of this Republic—a section that is capable of raising enough corn to feed and cotton to clothe the armies of the allies. If this appropriation is made, the States and municipalities along the line of the river will proceed at once to make the arrangement to contribute their pro rata of the funds to pay for the work.

I insist, Mr. President, that this is not the right place to begin economizing. To refuse this appropriation will be gross extravagance. The act will not have an element of economy in it. There are many other ways by which you can save money, and save it to the taxpayers, without doing anybody a serious injury. We have got to make these improvements. We must take care of this problem or the people in some parts of the Mississippi Valley will be compelled to abandon their homes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I would not delay this work any more than the Senator from Mississippi. You have the power now to let contracts and bind the Government to their payment. The Government is already bound, and you have the right to proceed with the work. The Government can not retreat from its very laudable purpose to improve the Mississippi River. This ought to be done; but the available cash balance in the Treasury looks lean, contracts would be just as efficient for the present, at least until the communities affected have raised their proportion of the cost.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator certainly is not serious in saying that the Government could go on and let these contracts without making any provision for the payment of the contractor. He would be an unwise, imprudent, or enormously rich, benevolent individual who would undertake to do the work provided for in the flood-control bill after Congress had refused to make an appropriation to pay for it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am serious in saying that the power now exists under the law to commit this Government to the extent of $45,000,000 in the improvement of the Mississippi River; and a contract need not necessarily be executed in the year in which it is made, nor in two years. You have a period over which you can extend this work.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The law requires, as the Senator knows, that it shall be done within five years.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Very well.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Now, the Senator, of course, does not mean that the Board of Engineers or the Mississippi River Commission can go ahead and let contracts and expect anybody to execute the contracts and go to the expense of doing the work without any appropriation to meet the expenses of it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Why, Mr. President, contracts have been let without number for our internal improvements without a single dollar to the credit of the project.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And these contracts can be let now; but what I am pointing out to the Senator from Mississippi, who is a sensible man, is this, that it is not necessary now to go to the Treasury of the United States and deplete it to the extent of $10,000,000 to pay for something which we have not yet started to do and which, it seems to me, is hardly demanded by the present situation.

I have said all I am going to say about it. I am in sympathy with the project. I aided in its passage. For years I have been opposed to piecemeal appropriations for that improvement. I think we have expended millions and millions of dollars in a very unscientific way upon this river. What you are going to do on the Mississippi River is to carry out the intelligent plans now the basis for that improvement, and you can do it just as well under your contract authorization if you have $5,000,000 appropriated to start with as with more, and the Treasury would not feel the shock so keenly.

Mr. VARDAMAN. As a matter of fact, Mr. President, the able Senator from Michigan knows very well that the money will not be taken from the Treasury except in payment for the work as the work is done; and for the Senator to say that we could do just as well and get as much work for $5,000,000 as we could for $10,000,000——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I did not say that.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I beg the Senator's pardon; he did say it; that is, I understood him to say it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; if the Senator will pardon me, I did not say as much could be done with $5,000,000 as $10,000,000. I said contracts could be let and work undertaken on the good faith of the Government as well with $5,000,000 as more.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I can not agree to the logical process of the able Senator and therefore do not subscribe to his conclusion. If the learned Senator is correct, the Government of the United States need not make any appropriations at all. It could go ahead and authorize contracts to be made, the work done, and rely upon the contractors to take the Government's promise in settlement. If that system would work, it would be very fine, but I have my doubts about finding a man capable of executing such a contract who would be willing to trust to luck, to God, the fates, or some other intangible something for the money. I submit that if we are going to carry out the terms of the statute—if the Government of the United States is going to act in good faith with the people of the Mississippi Valley, the Senate ought to vote for this appropriation. It is manifestly right—so just and such a prudent thing to do that it strikes me that all further argument is unnecessary. I am willing to leave the question to the prudence and good judgment of the Senate.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Michigan approves of the plan.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I voted for it.

Mr. PHELAN. But he does not desire at this time to appropriate the amount of money provided for in the amendment proposed, because it would make an apparent draft upon the Treasury, and in our fiscal exhibit it would not appear to our advantage; and that because all the money can not be immediately used. The bill that was enacted March 1, 1917, provided that the work should be done within five years, and so far as the Sacramento River is concerned, it is fairly entitled to a million dollars this year and a million dollars for every year thereafter. In view of the fact, so eloquently stated by the Senator from Michigan, there is no disposition to make even the appearance of an unfavorable fiscal balance, and where it ought to be a million only $500,000 has been asked for the prosecution of this work.

The project and appropriation are estimated for and approved by the engineers. The State and Federal Government pay an equal amount.

I would like to ask my colleague, the junior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], who has just left the State legislature in session, whether or not the State has provided, under the law, its share of the cost; and in view of that fact, if such be a fact, if there is not a contractual obligation on the part of Congress to carry out the provision of the law?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, if I may be permitted just very briefly to the gentlemen on this side of the House who have questioned the particular appropriation, I would like to explain the interest of the State of California, and I would be very glad if I may enlighten them.

We have had in California an ever-recurring problem. You solved that problem by the passage of the flood-control bill on the first day of last month. Definitively then the Congress of the United States entered upon a policy, and the policy that then was decreed by the Congress we ask now to be executed by giving the requisite appropriation. Our portion of this particular appropriation is indeed very small—$500,000 of the $10,500,000 requested.

The State of California, in conjunction with the Federal Government, for many years in the past has been engaged in endeavoring to do what was essential to the navigability of one of the great rivers of the Nation, the Sacramento River. The Federal Government has for many years in the past directed all the work to be done upon that river. In this flood-control project it is the engineers of the United States Government not only who approve the work, but under whose supervision it is actually done.

Just prior to my departure from California the legislature of that State made available its half million of money to be used in conjunction with the half million that might be appropriated by Congress for this particular work. In the past in this fashion the work has always been done. Our money has been expended by the United States Government under the supervision of the United States engineers. We feel that a contractual obligation exists between us and the Federal Government by virtue of the policy that has been pursued in the past, and certainly by virtue of the policy adopted by the flood-control act of March 1 last. Now, our money is available. We ask that $500,000, a like amount, be made available by this bill so that we may go forward with the work. While it may be true that the present is an occasion where the strictest economy ought to be exercised, as a new Member, a freshman as it were, glancing through the bill just now before the Senate it occurs to me that an expenditure such as that asked now for the preservation of the agricultural lands of the United States could hardly be held to be, in view of the other projects of the bill to which we have agreed, unduly extravagant.

I hope that we may continue the work that has been ours in California, and that our friends from the Mississippi may continue the work that is theirs, and that we may protect the lands essential for all of us in the future, by placing upon this bill the appropriation asked.

Mr. KELLOGG. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if this item of $10,500,000, and the facts in connection with it, were presented to the committee, and if so why it was not included in the bill? I am unfamiliar with the facts.

Mr. MARTIN. I will say to the Senator from Minnesota that it reached the committee when the committee was about on an adjournment, and the estimate came in so late the committee had no opportunity to investigate and consider the question.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I notice the act No. 367, which is the basis for this appropriation, says:

> (b) That no money appropriated under authority of this section shall be expended in the construction or repair of any levee unless and until assurances have been given satisfactory to the commission that local interests protected thereby will contribute for such construction and repair a sum which the commission shall determine to be just and equitable but which shall not be less than one-half of such sum as may have been allotted by the commission for such work.

The State of California has met this requirement if I understand the statement of both the Senators from California; but I do not believe it is contended that those in the territory especially affected on the Mississippi River have as yet met the requirements of the law. Of course they will do so.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I want to say to the Senator that there will not be one dollar of this money expended until the terms of the act have been complied with.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Oh, Mr. President, I understand that, of course. I agree entirely with the Senator from Mississippi. But I think that at this particular time it is not necessary to appropriate $10,000,000 for the work.

I have said all I am going to say about it. I am committed to this project, and I do not propose to deal with it in a small or narrow way; but it looks to me as though the initial appropriation was excessive.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD the estimate in connection with the item just agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, March 3, 1917.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress copy of a communication from the Secretary of War of the 3d instant, submitting estimates of appropriations required by the War Department for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, for prosecuting work of flood control on the Mississippi and Sacramento Rivers in accordance with the provisions of the flood-control act approved March 1, 1917, as follows:

For the Mississippi River	$4,000,000
For the Sacramento River	500,000
Total	4,500,000

Respectfully, BYRON R. NEWTON,
Acting Secretary.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 3, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to forward herewith for transmission to Congress supplemental estimates of appropriations aggregating $4,500,000 required by the War Department for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, for prosecuting work of flood control on the Mississippi and Sacramento Rivers in accordance with the provisions of the flood-control act approved March 1, 1917.

From the accompanying letter of the Chief of Engineers it appears that the act of March 1, 1917, authorizes the prosecution of certain work of flood control on the Mississippi and Sacramento Rivers to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, but the act itself carries no appropriation. It is considered a matter of great urgency to prosecute the work vigorously and these estimates are submitted at this time with a view to securing funds at this session in order to carry out the provisions of the act referred to.

The flood-control act, authorizing this work, having been passed on March 1, 1917, it was of course impracticable to include these items in the regular estimates for 1918.

Very respectfully, NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, March 2, 1917.

From: The Chief of Engineers, United States Army.
To: The Secretary of War:
Subject: Estimate of funds required for work of flood control on Mississippi and Sacramento Rivers.

1. The flood-control act of March 1, 1917, authorizes the prosecution of certain work of flood control on the Mississippi River and the Sacramento River, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, but the act itself carries no appropriations. It provides that the expenditures on the Mississippi shall not exceed $45,000,000 in the aggregate, and not more than $10,000,000 shall be expended during any one fiscal year. It authorizes a total expenditure of $5,600,000 on the Sacramento River and provides that not more than $1,000,000 shall be expended for this work during any one fiscal year.

2. The work proposed on the Mississippi River is in continuation of work of the same character as that which has been carried on for a number of years, so that it is well organized and can proceed at the maximum rate permitted. The pending river and harbor bill carries an item of $6,000,000 for this work and the additional estimate submitted herewith therefore calls for $4,000,000 for the Mississippi River. Some doubt has been expressed concerning the passage of the river and harbor bill. If it does not pass, this estimate for the Mississippi should be increased from $4,000,000 to $10,000,000.

3. The work proposed on the Sacramento River is partly in line with work already in progress, but will also include other features that are new for which plans have not been prepared in detail. While it is a matter of great urgency to prosecute the work vigorously, it is believed that for the first year an appropriation amounting to one-half of the authorized limit of annual expenditure will suffice and the estimate is, therefore, submitted for $500,000.

W. M. BLACK,
Brigadier General.

OFFICE OF CHIEF OF ENGINEERS.

Mississippi River—
For prosecuting work of flood control in accordance with the provisions of the flood-control act approved Mar. 1, 1917 (act Mar. 1, 1917)	$4,000,000
NOTE.—This amount is in addition to the item of $6,000,000 for this work in the pending river and harbor bill. If the river and harbor bill fails to pass, this item of $4,000,000 should be increased to $10,000,000.—(W. M. Black, Brig. Gen., Chief of Engineers.)
Sacramento River, Cal.—
For prosecuting work of flood control in accordance with the provisions of the flood-control act approved Mar. 1, 1917 (act Mar. 1, 1917)	500,000

Mr. STONE. I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 40, after line 15, insert:

For payment, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, to the legal heirs of Napoleon B. Giddings, deceased, in accordance with private act numbered 165, Sixty-fourth Congress, approved February 8, 1917, $1,950.

Mr. STONE. I will state that I submitted this amendment to the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Virginia, and he favors the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington obtained the floor.

Mr. STONE. I have another amendment to offer, but I will withhold it for the present.

Mr. JONES of Washington. On page 160, after line 13, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 160, after line 13, insert:

Two new vessels for the Coast and Geodetic Survey, including their equipment, to replace the Patterson and Gedney, $708,000.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I will be glad to explain the amendment. I think it was taken up quite fully before the subcommittee, and all the facts were presented. I do not think I violate the proprieties when I say that the subcommittee were convinced of the necessity of these vessels and the importance of having them, but that they thought we could get along without them for another year.

I want to say this, Mr. President: The Coast and Geodetic Survey have been asking for two new vessels for several years. It is the business of the Coast and Geodetic Survey to make soundings and locate rocks and dangers to navigation and make charts showing these obstructions and these dangers and also to give information with reference to the currents that are to be encountered in different sections of the ocean. It is especially important now. The condition on the Pacific coast is really deplorable in this respect. The Coast and Geodetic Survey have no vessel at all with which they can make soundings in the open sea. They have no vessels that they can take to sea for that purpose.

The Gedney was condemned a year or two ago and has been sold. The Patterson, the other vessel, has also been condemned and they are not permitted to take it out in the open sea. So the condition on the Pacific coast is that the Coast and Geodetic Survey have no vessel at all that they can use to make soundings except close to the shore or on the inside waters.

Now, what is the situation with reference to conditions that our shipping has encountered? I will not say that the dangers they have been subjected to have been entirely because of the lack of these charts and surveys and soundings, but the dangers have been largely the result of our not having the soundings made.

I have here a chart prepared by the Coast and Geodetic Survey showing the vessels wrecked in Alaskan waters especially and the value of the cargoes and the vessels. I will simply give it in brief. United States vessels that we lost: In 1910, the revenue cutter Perry, value $100,000; in 1913, the lighthouse tender Armeria, value $400,000; and the revenue cutter Tahoma in 1914, off the Aleutian Islands, value $300,000, making a total of $800,000. These are Government vessels that we have lost in the Alaskan waters and some of those losses can be traced almost to the failure of the Government to have information with reference to obstructions and shallow waters, and so on.

Now, with reference to private wrecked vessels, where the loss has been $20,000 or greater, there have been since 1867—of course, that goes back quite a time—vessels and cargoes to the value of $7,916,000 that have been lost in those waters. The total number of vessels wrecked is 402, of a value of over $13,867,000, and while the complete data with reference to the loss of life is not available, the document issued by The Pacific Fisherman in 1914 states:

It is positively known that in 19 wrecks 449 lives were sacrificed.

Mr. President, while, as I said, all this is not the result of the lack of these vessels, very much of it can be traced almost directly to the fact that we have not the proper soundings and the proper charting, and so forth.

Mr. THOMAS. Is it not true that many of these obstructions to navigation, hidden rocks, have been discovered through the accidental collision of vessels which they have destroyed and which have been christened by the names of vessels lost?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is true.

Mr. THOMAS. I was told the other day by the Secretary of Commerce that such is the case, and also that at the present rate of progress made by the Coast and Geodetic Survey under the insufficient provisions in the appropriation acts it would take 196 years to properly chart the Pacific coast so as to make it reasonably safe for navigation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is true, and with the conditions as we have them now we can not do it at all because we have not the vessels that can go into the open sea.

Mr. President, here is a very striking illustration of the need of work of this character. I have here a chart which shows the coast of Washington and Oregon. It is stated here by the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and there can not be any question as to the accuracy of these figures, that 266 vessels were lost through foundering, stranding, and burning on the coast of Washington and Oregon from 1906 to 1916—practically in the last 10 years—266 of our vessels were lost on the coast of Oregon and Washington. It gives the names of the vessels. Of course, I will not take the time to read them. Then I have here a chart showing practically the same thing with reference to the California coast.

There is just one more illustration to which I wish to call attention. In 1916 the revenue cutter Bear was lost on the coast of California, and that was a loss to the Government of the United States of $1,000,000. It is shown also conclusively that the cause of the loss of that vessel was the lack of proper soundings along that coast. I have here a map which shows the line supposed to have been taken by the Bear. It shows the soundings and lack of soundings, and shows how by reason of the lack of soundings this vessel got off the regular line of travel and got into the dangerous place from which it could not escape. I will not take the time to unfold this, but I do want to remind the Senator also of the fact that we expect and the Government expects to have many of the naval vessels on the Pacific coast and in the Pacific Ocean.

It would be almost a crime for us to leave conditions in the way they now are, and to put these vessels there with the dangers that come to them by the lack of proper information upon the charts that are issued by the Coast and Geodetic Survey. If there ever was a time when we needed work of this character, it is now. This may be classed even as a war and preparedness measure. While I think we sometimes put too many things on the ground of preparedness, yet this is one of vital importance to our merchant fleet and to our naval vessels.

Furthermore, the Navy has asked from the Coast and Geodetic Survey that much information shall be gathered by it; that much charting shall be done by it; and yet it can not be done unless we can get these vessels.

Mr. President, I do not want to take any more time. I have a great deal of information on the subject gathered here, but it seems to me what is presented by these charts, to which I have called attention, will show to Congress that it is almost a criminal waste not to provide these vessels. They can be secured within 18 months, possibly within a year. Of course, it takes time to build such vessels; but the longer we put it off the more vessels will be lost and subjected to these dangers.

I venture to assert that, if we had provided these vessels two or three years ago, when the Coast and Geodetic Survey was urging them, the work that they would have done up to this time would more than have saved the actual cost of the vessels. I hope the Senate will furnish the appropriation to secure these vessels, so that we may have them at the very earliest possible date.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, when we are appropriating such vast sums of money for the construction of ships in the Navy and preparing to construct under Government aid, or at least under Government encouragement, such vast numbers of ships for the mercantile marine, it seems to me that this comparatively small item to make the navigation of those ships safe is a measure of the most elementary economy.

It is an astounding situation when we consider that, with the amount of work that is yet to be done on the Pacific coast in this line by the Coast Survey, and the extent of that work, including Alaska, there is no Coast Survey vessel available at this time for the work. We have one vessel on that coast; that is the Patterson; and while it has not been officially condemned, it has been decided by the Commerce Department that it is not safe to send it to sea; it can only be used in the harbors.

This appropriation is estimated for on page 779 of the Book of Estimates. It has been recommended for two successive years. The merit of the recommendation is admitted, and has been admitted ever since the proposition has been submitted to the committee. The failure to make the appropriation is simply due to procrastination; to putting it off until to-morrow or until next year. The old cry of "Mañana," which has been the curse of so many countries, seems to have affected the action of Congress in this matter. The recommendation is renewed this year by the Department of Commerce, and it is also urged by the Coast and Geodetic Survey in the strongest terms in which it is possible to express it.

In regard to the cost of these ships and the possibility of obtaining them, the Department of Commerce has an understanding with the Navy Department by which it will be able to avail itself of the means which the Navy Department possesses for obtaining the construction of these ships at reasonable prices and to save itself from being held up on the plea of high prices due to war. While the great shipbuilding plants have their capacity taxed in supplying the contracts of the Navy and the demands of the mercantile marine, investigation has been made as to the feasibility of obtaining immediate work upon these two ships. It has been found that smaller shipbuilding concerns are ready to undertake the construction of them at once, and the department will be able to secure them within a reasonable time.

I have much data here, which, however, I think it is not necessary to put into the RECORD. I ask leave, however, to have printed in the RECORD, without reading, a letter from the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey upon the subject—it comprises only one page—in support of the appropriation. I sincerely hope that the proposition will be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request of the Senator for the insertion in the RECORD of the matter to which he refers will be granted, without objection. The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
UNITED STATES COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY,
Washington, April 11, 1917.

Hon. MILES POINDEXTER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR POINDEXTER: Supplementing my memorandum given you yesterday regarding the urgent need of two vessels for the Coast and Geodetic Survey for surveying work on the Pacific coast, it has occurred to me that two questions might arise in opposition to your efforts to have this made an amendment to the sundry civil bill:

First, the high cost of building these vessels at this time. This question is answered in a very few words. The Department of Commerce, through Secretary Redfield, has made arrangements with the Navy Department by which the former will get the benefit of the low price in the Navy Department for the iron and steel in the construction of any vessel that may be built.

The second point, that they can not be completed within a reasonable time. I am advised that a vessel can be built in from 12 to 15 months, so that not later than September or October, 1918, a vessel could be in commission. Furthermore, if Congress makes this money immediately available a vessel could be in commission by July, 1918.

I recall that you asked me to send you any additional facts, and I think these are pertinent.

I am, respectfully, yours, E. LESTER JONES,
Superintendent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, before the vote is taken on this question I desire to explain to the Senate the position of the committee which had this bill in charge in not inserting the items in reference to these two ships.

It appears that the Coast and Geodetic Survey now have a ship on the eastern coast, which, of course, is available to send to the western coast if they desire to do so. It is complained that two ships which they have now in that service on the western coast are not seaworthy in bad weather, although they are using them in weather which is not bad—in fair weather. They ask for $706,000 with which to build two survey ships. The Secretary of Commerce appeared before the committee, and when asked how long it would take to complete this work if we should give them these two ships on the Pacific coast. he stated that it would take 20 years to finish the work in the States of Washington and California, and that it would take 170 years to complete the entire work on the Pacific coast, even if they had these two ships. That demonstrates that if we had these ships ready now we would not get very far afield with them; that we could not do a great deal of this work immediately.

Mr. President, the committee in preparing this bill has endeavored to strike out of it every item in reference to public buildings, and every item in reference to ordinary expenditures for the civil side of the Government which it was not necessary to put into it at this time. We refused to make provision for all new public buildings that have not already been authorized and contracts let; we refused to make provision for all new work of this kind. Why? Because the Government is facing war conditions, and in our opinion it was not the patriotic duty of the Congress to strain the Treasury of the Government by making civil appropriations where they were not absolutely necessary. It is apparent that if it is going to take 20 years to finish the survey it is a problem that can well go until after the war, and although $700,000 is not a tremendous item, numbers of such items may strain the Treasury.

I want to call attention to one further fact the subcommittee had under consideration with reference to this item. The most important question that is facing the American people to-day is the speedy conclusion of the war in Europe. The most important aid that we can give to our allies on the battle fields of Europe is to supply them with munitions at once. What does that mean? It means transportation. And what does transportation mean? It means building ships. Every effort of the military arm of this Government is being used to-day to supply ships to carry munitions and war material to Europe. To-day every shipyard is needed for that purpose, and if we agree to this amendment and provide for the building of these two ships, it may be a small item, but we are directing that the Government at this time occupy a portion of the shipyards of the country that might be occupied in building supply ships to help carry on the war to build two survey ships for the purpose of surveying a coast, a work which the Secretary in charge of the department says will take 20 years to complete.

Under those circumstances the subcommittee that prepared these items were of the opinion that it was well enough to let this appropriation go over until a later period.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, it seems to me that the facts stated by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] constitute the very strongest argument that could be made for the adoption of this amendment. He says that if we start this work immediately it will take 20 years to finish it and consequently there is no hurry about starting it. I say that the extent of the work as shown by the length of time that will be required to complete it indicates that there is not a day to be lost in beginning it. The length of time that will be required to complete these surveys and to locate the dangerous shoals and rocks in waters which ships have to navigate, simply indicates the extent of the coast, the amount of it that is unsurveyed, and the enormity of the dangers that are confronting shipping that attempts to navigate those waters.

Furthermore, the Senator from Alabama says that we ought to concentrate all of our shipbuilding energies and resources on the construction of ships to carry food and munitions to our allies, or the allies in Europe. The Senator from Alabama has evidently overlooked the fact that we have two coasts to this country. The Atlantic Ocean is not the only avenue of approach to the allies with the means for supplying their needs. It is not true, as the Senator from Alabama has said, that every shipyard in the country is engaged in building ships to carry food to Europe, and that every ship that can be obtained is engaged in carrying munitions of war and food supplies across the Atlantic Ocean. A great many shipyards are engaged in constructing ships, and a great many ships are sailing the sea carrying munitions of war and food supplies to the allies across the Pacific Ocean.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator a moment?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I suggest to the Senator that the Government is building a railroad into the coal fields of Alaska in order to develop coal which possibly may be needed by the Government, and the loss of one battleship would build enough of these vessels to do the whole work in a very short period.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is very true, and it is a very timely suggestion. Why, Mr. President, although it may take 20 years to do all of the work that awaits the Coast Survey on the Pacific coast, on the very first day that one of the ships built under this appropriation is engaged in this work it might locate a hidden rock or some danger to navigation that would save from being sunk one of the food-supply ships or munitions ships to which the Senator from Alabama has referred.

Many pinnacle rocks, as they are called, have been discovered in the short time since we have secured appropriations for the use of the so-called wire drag on the Pacific coast. Who knows but that many of the wrecks which have already occurred would not have been avoided if we had even one of these ships engaged for a week, or even for a day, in searching the waters for such obstructions?

This very bill to which this amendment is offered contains an item of over $7,000,000 for carrying on the work on the Alaskan railroad. As an incident to that undertaking by the Government there has been a tremendous development of commerce and increase of population and development of resources in Alaska. The consequence of that has been that commerce and navigation have increased between the ports of Alaska and the ports of California, Oregon, and Washington. Those ships have to navigate these uncharted and unsurveyed waters which have been discovered to be full of dangers. Those dangers are very difficult of discovery.

As the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] has suggested the coal fields of Alaska, which are being opened up by the Government railroad, will be used by the Navy. We have neglected to make preparation for it, but steps are under way for the construction of the necessary appliances, so that this coal, which is the equal of the Pocahontas coal which we are now using on the Pacific coast after carrying it around through the Panama Canal, can be utilized by the Navy. Supply depots will be established there; naval vessels will navigate those waters in order to refuel themselves; and all the increasing commerce, which will be brought about by this $40,000,000 enterprise of the Government, will have to navigate these waters for which these two ships are needed. I fail to see anything, if the reasons given by the Senator from Alabama are the ones which actuated the subcommittee, to justify the conclusion which they reached. They seem to have ignored the fact that this improvement is an aid to all the undertakings to which the Government has committed itself by the declaration of war against Germany, for the carrying on of commerce with Vladivostok, and the carrying of munitions, railroad equipment, food, guns, and all the supplies which the armies of Russia need, to that port, to be transported over the Siberian railroad to the Russian front.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator, if he will allow me to interrupt him, that, of course, there are a large amount of munitions that go that way, and that there are no uncharted seas on that line of travel; that these charts do not apply to the lines running out of Seattle and San Francisco and going to the Orient; that it is up and down the coast. Those portions of the coast have been surveyed long since. There are no dangers in that line of travel.

I am not concerned about this item if the Senate wants to put it in. It was kept out of the bill merely in pursuance of a policy not to put in the bill, so far as the civil branch of the Government was concerned, items that could be avoided at this time and that the committee did not think were vitally necessary, and with the further conclusion that we reached in reference to building ships were not materially needed. In the case of this work that must extend over 20 years with these two ships, no large amount of it could be done within the next year or two years of this war, and we thought it was an expenditure that we could economize in for the present. But one of the moving causes, to my mind, if not to the whole subcommittee, was that I think every available shipyard to-day should be used for war purposes, and not for charting uncharted seas over which there is comparatively little commerce moving at this time. I do not refer to the whole Pacific coast in that statement, but I mean that the seas that they propose to chart are not on the usual line of your commerce on the Pacific coast.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, they are sufficiently on the usual lines so that 260 ships were sunk by hidden dangers within a period of nine years off the coast of Oregon and Washington alone, to say nothing of the wrecks that occurred in Alaska and off the coast of California. When the Senator, in the face of those facts, says that there is no commerce there that amounts to anything, it simply indicates that he has not looked up the records.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, but I did not make that statement. The Senator is putting words in my mouth that I did not utter. I said they were not along the usual lines of your great commerce, referring to what the Senator himself has referred to—your westbound commerce to the Orient. I stated that it is up and down the coast. Of course, I recognize that you have considerable commerce with Alaska, but it is not along the lines that the Senator was talking about a moment ago.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I was referring to the statement in which the Senator said that this survey related to waters off the usual lines of commerce. The inaccuracy of that is shown by the fact that 260 ships were lost there within the period I mentioned.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator, I am sure, will not misquote me. I have not said that there was not any commerce on that route. I said it was not along the lines of your great commerce, which I understand does not lie up and down your coast.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Well, there is a great commerce up and down the coast. There is a great actual commerce and a still greater potential commerce through the Panama Canal and up and down the Pacific coast in transit to the Atlantic coast and between the ports of the Pacific coast and the terminus of the Government railroad and of the private railroad in Alaska—a commerce which has amounted to some $700,000,000 since we have acquired that Territory, a great portion of which was in a very few of the latter years of that period.

Now, these ships that are engaged in commerce with Russia incident to the war go up and down the coast. They go from one port to another on the coast. They may go to San Francisco to unload a cargo which they bring to the United States and from San Francisco to Seattle to load a cargo which they will take to Vladivostok or to Japan. Ships are not confined to a single line going from one coast to the other. Furthermore, Mr. President, the uncertainties of navigation, the winds, and the storms, and the tides which affect the course of vessels in attempting to seek entrance to the harbors of the Pacific coast bring about a certain variation in that course, and it is there that these dangers lurk, off of the entrance to the harbors as ships go and come in this international commerce to which I have referred, and where they have found rocks which were uncharted because there were no ships to chart them.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I simply want to suggest also to my colleague that, as I understand, the plans for these ships would be prepared and adopted after consultation with the Navy Department; and these vessels, when constructed, if the exigencies should require, could be used either as naval auxiliaries or for other purposes in connection with the war.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is true. There is a statement here to that effect from the Superintendent of the Coast Survey.

I do not know that I can add anything to what has already been said in behalf of this appropriation, except to say this: I hope that the Senate will not adopt the apparent attitude advanced by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] that we must stop—because that is practically what it amounts to—the work of our Coast Survey on account of this war. Why, Mr. President, other countries have gone on with their economic and industrial life even though they were more desperately engaged in this war than we are or than we will be. I hope it will not be said that because a nominal state of war—for it does not amount to much more than that at the present time—exists between the United States and Germany we must stop the work of the Coast and Geodetic Survey. It is stopped now because there is not a single vessel on the Pacific coast by which this work can be carried on.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have listened to this discussion with a great deal of interest, probably because I had occasion some time ago to discuss the subject with the Secretary of Commerce. He gave me a very lucid and intelligent description of the work which had been done during his administration by this very important branch of the service, and also the limitations which existed in consequence of inappropriate supplies in the way of ships and money. He recited a number of harrowing incidents involved in the destruction of vessels along the Pacific coast by colliding with hidden rocks in what was supposed, until the collision occurred, to be a perfectly clear channel; and he also gave me some account of the development and the growth of the merchant marine of that section of our country.

I felt then, as I feel now, that the proper charting of the coast—both coasts, for that matter, because the Atlantic coast has not yet been completely and sufficiently charted—constitutes one of the pressing duties of the day, and that it is false economy to refuse to the department the means which are necessary for the carrying on of this work. It is unfortunate that it has been postponed as far and as long as it has been.

The recital by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] of the destruction of 260 ships within a period of 10 years reads like the record of a monthly campaign of submarines. The amount is appalling, and there is no question but that they will continue, possibly proportionately, but certainly in some degree, and perhaps ships will be destroyed in consequence of the absence of this work quite as fast as we may be able to construct them for the purpose of supplying the other nations engaged in war with Germany with what they may need from us.

It is true, as the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] says, that the usual trade routes between our Pacific ports and those of Asia are open, and that this work is not necessary at present for them. But, Mr. President, the modern German submarine has a radius of 18,000 miles; and how long will it be before these vessels of destruction appear in Pacific waters, in consequence of which the usual trade routes must be avoided? And if they are avoided, then what hidden dangers arise from these unseen sources which might be discovered if this work were expedited as it ought to be?

I believe that I am as reluctant to make large appropriations as any Member of this body, and I certainly commend the spirit which has actuated this committee, as stated by the Senator from Alabama, in the effort to economize in this hour of the Nation's crisis. Yet I discover that this bill, notwithstanding that spirit—which has certainly been exercised—is the largest sundry civil bill in amount which has ever been introduced for our consideration, having been increased some eleven or twelve million dollars over the amount reported from the House.

The fact that it is going to take 20 years to do this work is the strongest argument in favor of its being begun immediately. I think this is one of the needed appropriations to the end that our commerce may be protected, to the end that vessels may be saved, and to the end that lives may not be unduly sacrificed, and I hope that it will be adopted by the Senate.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I desired to address the Senate on this amendment, but I learn from the committee that there is no objection to letting the amendment go to conference.

I think it is a matter of vast importance. The commercial bodies of the Pacific coast have asked for it as a matter of ordinary protection to their ships at sea; and a vessel, the Bear, belonging to the United States, costing a million dollars, was lost, sir, in June, 1916, for the very reason, as explained by the Secretary of Commerce, that the seas were not charted. So it is very poor economy to save $700,000 and lose even a vessel valued by the department at $1,000,000, the Bear. That may recur at any time, especially in view of the fact that the new warships are going to be vessels of greater draft.

I therefore will conclude with the request to the Senate to consider the propriety of letting the amendment go to conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri desire to speak to the amendment?

Mr. STONE. I desire to say that a number of Senators have spoken to me intimating a desire for an executive session.

Mr. PENROSE. Before the Senator submits that request, if he will permit me for a moment——

Mr. STONE. Wait a moment, now. I am not going to submit it for just a moment. I should not attempt to do so without the consent of the Senator from Virginia, in charge of this bill. I want to ask him if he will not agree at this time to have the Senate resolve itself into executive session?

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Virginia will permit me to offer an amendment which he has agreed to accept——

Mr. MARTIN. I will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that there is an amendment pending which ought to be disposed of. This amendment about the ships on the Pacific has not been disposed of.

Mr. PENROSE. I thought it had been accepted and agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. The Vice President can advise the Senate as to that. I did not know that it had been agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has not been agreed to. That is the reason why the Chair inquired of the Senator from Missouri, who addressed the Chair and wished the Chair to recognize him, whether he wished to speak to the amendment.

Mr. PHELAN. I think the chairman of the committee is willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN. No, Mr. President; the Senator is mistaken. I am willing for the Senate to dispose of it in any way it pleases. It does not concern me any more than it does any other Senator on this floor, but the committee refused to put it on, and I do not feel at liberty to depart from their instructions.

It will take only 15 minutes to complete this bill, in my opinion. I know of nothing to delay the Senate; and if we can have a vote on this matter, we will follow up the others mighty quickly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PENROSE. Now, Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 24, after line 22, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, the plot of ground, known as the O'Neal property, situated on the north side of High Street, immediately east of and adjoining the present post-office site at Gettysburg, Pa., the cost of said additional site not to exceed $250.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, this is offered at the end of the paragraph relating to "Public buildings, construction, sites, and rent," and is a matter of some urgency, as this unsightly little strip near the battle field of Gettysburg might not be available to the Government hereafter. It is only $250, and I really ought to apologize for the amount.

Mr. MARTIN. I have no objection to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PENROSE. I will ask to have the correspondence from the department put in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF ASSISTANT SECRETARY,
Washington, March 2, 1917.

Hon. BOIES PENROSE,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In accordance with the request of Representative BEALES, there are transmitted herewith copies of reports submitted under date of September 19, 1916, to the chairmen of the Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House and Senate in connection with bills H. R. 17270 and S. 6820, providing for the acquisition of additional land, known as the O'Neal property, adjoining the present post-office site at Gettysburg, Pa.

Respectfully,

B. R. NEWTON,
Assistant Secretary.

GETTYSBURG, PA., September 19, 1916.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS,
United States Senate.

SIR: In response to your request, without date, there is submitted herewith the following report on S. 6820, which provides for the acquisition of additional land, known as the O'Neal property, adjoining the present post-office site at Gettysburg, Pa.:

The Federal building at Gettysburg is situated on a plot of ground on the northeast corner of High and Baltimore Streets, with a frontage of 140 feet on the former by 153 feet on the latter. The site was purchased in 1909 for $24,000, and a building was constructed thereon and occupied in 1914, at a cost of $111,920.54. Adjoining the Federal site on the west is an irregular strip of land known as the O'Neal property, which has a frontage of 11 feet 3 inches on High Street, and a depth of 121 feet 6 inches. It is understood that this property is unimproved and detracts from the appearance of the Federal site on account of the presence of a shed and corncrib, both of which are in a very dilapidated condition.

From information received by this department, it is believed that the acquisition of this strip of land by the Government is desirable, and that the sum of $250 carried by the bill is a reasonable price for the land.

Respectfully,

B. R. NEWTON,
Acting Secretary.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to cancel the assessment of $13,252.21, being income tax on profit on the sale of Charles L. Freer, of Detroit, Mich., in the year 1915, of 12,095 shares of Parke, Davis & Co.'s stock, $1,000,000 of the proceeds from the sale of said stock having been given to the Smithsonian Institution for the erection of a building to house the art collections presented to the Nation by Mr. Freer under deed of gift dated May 5, 1906, and the remainder having been paid by Mr. Freer for the purchase of additional objects which have been added to the collections and presented to the Nation by him.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and will make a brief statement in regard to it in a moment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 26, on page 132, it is proposed to insert:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

ROADS AND BRIDGES.

For contribution to the Forest Service for the purpose of constructing a bridge across the Mississippi River on the Cass Lake Indian Reservation, in the State of Minnesota, upon the condition that the local authorities, State or county, contribute $10,000 toward the building of the same, and in conjunction with an appropriation of $5,000 made available for expenditure by the Secretary of the Interior for this purpose in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918," approved March 2, 1917, $10,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I submit the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 130 strike out the following:

In all, $175,000: Provided, That the total expenditure for the installation of a hydroelectric power plant shall not exceed the sum of $150,000 appropriated therefor in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1917.

And insert in lieu thereof the following:

Also not exceeding $60,000 for the completion of the installation of the hydroelectric power plant authorized by the sundry civil act for the fiscal year 1917; in all, $235,000: Provided, That any portion of the appropriation of $150,000 for the hydroelectric power plant authorized by the sundry civil act for the fiscal year 1917 which may be unappropriated on July 1, 1917, is hereby reappropriated and made available until expended.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, $150,000 was appropriated last year. I will not discuss the measure, but simply ask permission to insert in the RECORD the letters of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Interior, and the assistant attorney of the Department of the Interior, explaining fully the necessity of the increased appropriation.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, January 12, 1917.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior of the 11th instant, submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation in the sum of $60,000, for completion of installation of a hydroelectric power plant in Yosemite National Park, Cal., in addition to the sum of $150,000 provided by the sundry civil act of July 1, 1916.

The Secretary of the Interior, in his communication, states the reason and necessity for the submission of the estimate at this time.

Respectfully,

W. G. MCADOO, Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 11, 1917.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I transmit herewith a supplemental estimate in the sum of $60,000 for completion of installation of a hydroelectric power plant in Yosemite National Park, Cal. The sundry civil act approved July 1, 1916, authorized the expenditure of not exceeding $150,000 for a hydroelectric power plant in the park, which amount has been found to be insufficient to properly install a plant adequate for the needs of the service in the park. The necessity for the increased appropriation is fully set forth in the accompanying report dated December 6, 1916, by Galloway & Markwart, engineers, who, under contract of August 10, 1916, with this department, are charged with the supervision of installation of the power plant.

It was not practicable to incorporate this item in the regular estimates submitted to Congress in October, 1916, because the data in relation to this matter was not then at hand, and the needs of the service in the park are such as to render the additional appropriation herein requested imperatively necessary.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE.

Hon. WM. G. MCADOO,
Secretary of the Treasury.

HYDROELECTRIC POWER PLANT, YOSEMITE VALLEY, CAL.

[Memorandum for Senator PHELAN.]

The following are important points in the matter of the request of the Secretary of the Interior for an increase of $60,000 in the appropriation for the hydroelectric power plant in Yosemite National Park:

1. Original appropriation of $150,000 insufficient because of difficulty in finding foundation for dam in Merced River. Cost $25,000 additional to construct dam.

2. Power plant as authorized by Congress should be doubled in capacity. This can be done for $35,000 at this time. If doubled later, will cost $100,000.

3. Electric energy will be used for heat, light, and power in the operation of hotels and camps in Yosemite Valley.

4. New facilities for accommodation of tourists in this valley recently established have cost more than $500,000, and altogether the Desmond Park Service Co. will invest $1,000,000.

5. The department does not consider it just to require San Francisco business men to also construct power plant, nor does it consider it advisable from an administrative point of view to permit concessioners to build and operate power plants.

6. Estimate of total annual income from new plant, when completed, about $40,000. Total cost of operation about $17,000. Net profit will therefore be about $15,000 per annum, or 6.9 per cent on investment. This profit will be in addition to the value of the power used by the Government, which amounts to nearly $10,000 per annum. Government power is used for lighting of roads of the valley, administrative headquarters, barns, corrals, storehouses, etc.

7. Unless plant is completed, $100,000 worth of labor, material, and equipment will be almost total loss. Pipe line, machinery installed, etc., will rapidly deteriorate. Later, if more funds are made available, cost of establishing labor camps, blacksmith shop, etc., will be very high.

8. Plant can be completed at double the capacity very much cheaper now than it can under any other circumstances or at any other time.

HORACE M. ALBRIGHT,
Assistant Attorney, Department of the Interior.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I offer the following amendment. I will state that the amount asked is covered in the estimates.

The SECRETARY. On page 175, line 15, strike out "$7,500" and insert in lieu "$15,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PITTMAN. I offer the following amendment.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 19, page 128, insert:

Authority is granted to expend from the appropriations made for the construction and operation of railroads in Alaska, not exceeding $1,800, for the purchase, maintenance, repair, and operation of one motor-propelled, passenger-carrying vehicle for the official use of the Alaskan Engineering Commission at Seattle, Wash., to be available from the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALDER. I submit the following amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 162, after line 14, insert "one at $1,800, four at $1,600 each, one at $900."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. These amendments can go to conference. I know nothing about them. I suppose they will not get far in conference.

Mr. CALDER. They are all estimated for.

Mr. MARTIN. They can go to conference.

Mr. CALDER. I also offer the following:

The SECRETARY. On page 161, line 13, insert: "Chief of Printing and Sales Section, $2,000; one clerk, at $1,650; one clerk, at $1,400; one clerk, at $1,200."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALDER. I offer the following:

The SECRETARY. On page 161, line 18, insert "two clerks at $1,400 each."

On page 161, in line 25, insert "one clerk, at $2,000; one clerk, at $1,400; one clerk, at $1,200."

On page 162, line 7, insert "one, at $1,800; one, at $1,600."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALDER. In connection with the amendments just agreed to, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Maritime Exchange, of New York, which explains them.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MARITIME EXCHANGE,
78 Broad Street, New York City, April 4, 1917.

Hon. WILLIAM M. CALDER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We take the liberty of writing you in connection with the appropriations for the work of the Coast and Geodetic Survey contained in the sundry civil bill.

It is our understanding that the House will adopt without further consideration the bill as it originally passed the last session. It is probable that when the measure comes up in the Senate there will be some hearings or debate in connection with the appropriations for the above service, and we therefore beg to call your attention to the conditions at present existing as regards Coast and Geodetic charts.

Under date of February 15 the various chart agencies here which supply the merchant marine with these charts were notified by Dr. Jones, superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, that until further notice the distribution would be discontinued to agencies. It is our understanding that the Navy has taken the entire output of the department, rendering it impossible for any charts to be furnished to the merchant marine. The supply of a great many of the charts is already exhausted, and the situation, as you can readily appreciate, is very serious.

It seems to us most important that the appropriations for the Coast and Geodetic Survey should be so increased and its facilities enlarged so that it would be possible for this bureau to turn out sufficient charts for both the Navy and merchant marine. I am sure the marine interests here would appreciate anything you might do to aid us in this matter. Full information as to details could be secured from Dr. E. Lester Jones, superintendent of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey.

Thanking you for whatever action you may take in our behalf, I remain,

Yours, very truly, J. B. MORRILL, President.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 60, I move to strike out the proviso on line 14, beginning with the word "That" after the word "Provided," down to and including the words "nineteen hundred and sixteen" in line 22—both provisos.

The SECRETARY. On page 60, in the item relative to the Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway Commission, strike out the following proviso:

"Provided, That the total area of lands finally to be acquired for said parkway shall not exceed the area and parcels described and delineated in the map numbered 2, contained in House Document No. 1114 of the Sixty-fourth Congress, first session: Provided further, That the expenditure of the funds appropriated herein shall be subject to all the conditions imposed by the sundry civil appropriation act approved July 1, 1916.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. I offer the following amendment, to come in on page 184.

The SECRETARY. On page 184, after line 5, insert:

To pay M. I. Howell, as compensation for services rendered the special committee appointed under S. Res. 543, to secure certain information concerning interned ships in the ports of the United States and elsewhere and what efforts have been made by certain parties or interests to prevent the passage of the bill S. 6856, commonly known as the ship-purchase bill, during the third session of the Sixty-third Congress, from February 16, 1915, to April 8, 1915, $115.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. On page 133, after line 23, I offer the following amendment. It has been estimated for.

The SECRETARY. On page 133, after line 23, insert:

For an additional amount for the fiscal year 1918 for support, clothing, and treatment in St. Elizabeth's Hospital of the insane from the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Revenue-Cutter Service, inmates of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, persons charged with or convicted of crimes against the United States who are insane, all persons who have become insane since their entry into the military and naval service of the United States who have been admitted to the hospital and who are indigent, the sum of $81,778.40.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting the estimate and also a letter I received from a committee of employees.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, January 13, 1917.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, of this date, submitting an additional estimate of appropriation in the sum of $81,778.40, for St. Elizabeth's Hospital, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, to provide an additional number of employees at the hospital so as to allow the benefits of the eight-hour system to all employees in the wards of the institution.

The Secretary of the Interior, in his communication, states that the reasons for the submission of the estimate at this time and the necessity for the same are set forth in the accompanying letter of the superintendent of the hospital.

Respectfully, W. G. MCADOO, Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 13, 1917.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I transmit herewith copy of a letter dated December 20, 1916, from the superintendent of St. Elizabeth's Hospital and accompanying supplemental estimate in the sum of $81,778.40, to provide an additional number of employees at the hospital during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, so as to allow the benefits of the eight-hour system to all employees in the wards of the institution.

The reasons for not being able to submit this estimate with the regular estimates for 1918 and the urgent necessity for the appropriation are set forth in Dr. White's letter. I have to request that this estimate be transmitted to Congress at an early day with a view to favorable consideration thereof. This estimate has received approval by the President.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
ST. ELIZABETH'S HOSPITAL,
Washington, D. C., December 20, 1916.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith supplementary estimates in addition to the estimates heretofore submitted for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, for this hospital. These estimates are submitted in order to enable provision to be made for 120 additional employees, so that those who do not at the present time have the advantage of the eight-hour basis may be given opportunity to take advantage of the shorter hours.

This estimate has not been presented before because the matter has been under investigation and study, and has not been in shape to formulate. For some years past all of the employees of the hospital have been working upon an eight-hour basis except those who are directly engaged in the care of patients, constituting what is known as the ward service, with certain other minor exceptions. Naturally these employees feel that in the operation of the statutes they have been discriminated against, and the hospital can not but feel that the concessions that have been granted have been in the least desirable direction when the nature of the work which the hospital stands for is considered. In other words, the most important function which the hospital subserves is the immediate care of the individual sick patient. All the other functions which are performed by these several employees are subsidiary to this central one. It would seem, therefore, that every concession should be made to the ward employees that will make for increased efficiency. Observations which have been recently made with regard to the operation of the eight-hour law would indicate that it does increase efficiency, through its beneficial influence upon the employee himself, preventing conditions of overfatigue and therefore bringing him into his work better able to do it. These advantages are, of course, of great moment in dealing with the problems which confront an institution of this character. It is highly important that the ward attendants should go on duty refreshed and rested, so that during their period of duty they may be free from all such tendencies that might express themselves in irritability and crossness toward the patient. In fact, I think there is very little doubt but that many of the difficulties which arise and result in minor abuses of patients by employees are dependent upon the employee being tired and irritable. It is for these reasons that this estimate is presented for the extension of the eight-hour law to the ward employees and to certain other classes not yet covered in its operation. I may say that the State of Illinois has already passed an eight-hour law which applies to its charitable institutions, and so far as I know this is the only State which has passed such legislation, unless legislation of this character has passed very recently, in which case, of course, it would not have been in operation sufficiently long to draw any conclusions from it. I am of the opinion that the United States as an employer should not be very far behind in progressive measures the advantages of which are fairly apparent.

The amount asked for would not only permit the employment of an additional number of employees, but also a sufficient amount to allow for feeding them and to make allowances to pay them enough to provide for their lodging outside the hospital, as we have not the room within the hospital to accommodate them. This sum would also permit us to make the same allowance to employees of the same class who at the present time are compelled to live away from the hospital, and for whom there is not sufficient room within the hospital to provide lodging.

Those for whom increase in salaries is asked if allowed could be provided for without any additional appropriation being provided.

Very respectfully,

WM. A. WHITE,
Superintendent.

For an additional amount for the fiscal year 1918 for support, clothing, and treatment in St. Elizabeth's Hospital of the insane from the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Revenue-Cutter Service, inmates of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, persons charged with or convicted of crimes against the United States who are insane, all persons who have become insane since their entry into the military and naval service of the United States who have been admitted to the hospital and who are indigent, the sum of $81,778.40.

Amount appropriated for the current fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, $285,250.

The following persons at St. Elizabeth's Hospital in the capacities herein mentioned may be paid at the rates of compensation stated during the fiscal year 1918 and annually thereafter as follows: Stenographers at $900 each; head baker, $900; librarian, $900. Sixty dollars per annum may be paid all per annum employees who can not be accommodated with lodgings in hospital building (submitted).

THE NATIONAL LEAGUE GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES,
BRANCH NO. 35,
WASHINGTON, D. C.

To whom it may concern:

The attendants and supervisors at St. Elizabeth's Hospital are required to be on duty, active and otherwise, on an average of 137 hours per week, whereas 48 hours is considered a full week's work in all other civic departments of the Government.

The duties of an attendant or supervisor subject him to a continuous mental strain by reason of his being responsible for the safety and well-being of patients afflicted with homicidal or suicidal mania, or both. His physical strength is taxed in caring for those cases of acute mania, in assisting and caring for those who are entirely helpless, in keeping the halls and rooms in proper condition when his household consists of two score or more irresponsible persons, and various other duties, too numerous to mention, fall to his lot.

We contend that at the expiration of our day's work under the present system we are not in proper condition, mentally or physically, to exercise that energy and care which our own conscience demands in the proper performance of our duties.

The present scale of wages is as follows: Commencing at $20 per month for male attendants and $15 per month for female attendants; after six months, which is the probationary period, the pay is $22.50 per month for male attendants and $17.50 per month for female attendants; after one year the pay is $25 per month for male attendants and $20 per month for female attendants; and after two years $30 per month for male attendants and $25 per month for female attendants. Charge attendant, male, goes up to $35 per month and male charge nurses goes up to $47.50 per month. Female charge attendant goes up to $30 per month and charge nurses goes up to $42.50 per month; and the male assistant supervisors' pay is $55 per month and female assistant supervisors' pay is $50 per month. Male supervisors' pay is $67.50 per month and female supervisors' pay is $62.50 per month, which is entirely at the discretion of the superintendent.

The scale asked for is not to include board, laundry, or lodging, which are furnished under the present system, and is consequently but a trifling increase over the amount which is now spent for this purpose.

In our bill, which will be presented, will be embodied the following:

Eight hours shall constitute our day's work, and we be allowed one day off each week for Sundays, a day off for each holiday, and 15 days' vacation. The appropriation made for our keep be stricken out, and in place thereof a pay be rated, for both male and female, at $40 per month, for the first six months, for charge attendants and nurses; $80 per month for supervisors; and $75 per month for assistant supervisors.

The rooms now occupied by the several hundred attendants, if turned over for the use of patients, would relieve the generally overcrowded condition of the hospital; also the attendants would not, after a long day of mental and physical exertion, be compelled to seek rest in an insane ward where night is made hideous by the intermingled muttering of imbeciles and ravings of maniacs.

This is a reference to what some of the other hospitals are paying their attendants:

Mr. WALSH. I offer an amendment to come in on page 114, at the end of line 12.

The SECRETARY. On page 114, at the end of line 12, insert:

Provided, That in time of war or of national emergency greater percentages of these sums may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be used for personal services in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. On page 114, after line 12, I move to insert the following.

The SECRETARY. On page 114, after line 12, insert:

The Secretary of the Treasury may detail certain medical officers of the Public Health Service for cooperative health, safety, or sanitation work with the Bureau of Mines, and the compensation and expenses of officers so detailed may be paid from the applicable appropriation made herein for the Bureau of Mines.

In time of war or national emergency any part of the fund of the Bureau of Mines may be used in the United States or in foreign countries for investigations of military value whenever such investigations bear a direct relation to the purpose for which the funds are appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. I ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Director of the Bureau of Mines explaining the last two amendments.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
BUREAU OF MINES,
Washington, April 9, 1917.

Hon. THOMAS J. WALSH,
Chairman Committee on Mines and Mining,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR WALSH: I have to suggest three amendments to the sundry civil bill as it passed the House—one designed to prevent unnecessary duplication in the normal work of the Bureau of Mines, the other two intended to increase the value of the bureau in connection with the carrying on of the war.

I suggest that the following paragraph be inserted, after line 2, on page 110:

"The Secretary of the Treasury may detail medical officers of the Public Health Service for cooperative health, safety, or sanitation work with the Bureau of Mines, and the compensation and expenses of officers so detailed may be paid from the applicable appropriations made herein for the Bureau of Mines."

There are many problems in connection with the mine-safety and sanitation work of the Bureau of Mines that call for the services of trained surgeons and sanitary engineers. The Public Health Service has a corps of specialists in these lines, and it would be an unnecessary duplication to build up a similar corps in the Bureau of Mines. The problems are, however, so intimately related to the mining and metallurgical industry that their solution should be paid for from Bureau of Mines funds. It is proposed, therefore, to meet the situation by the detail of men acting under the direction of the Public Health Service, their salaries and expenses to be paid by the Bureau of Mines. This has the approval of the Public Health Service.

I suggest that after the paragraph just proposed, the following paragraph be inserted:

"In time of war or of national emergency any part of the funds of the Bureau of Mines may be used in the United States or in foreign countries for investigations of military value whenever such investigations bear a direct relation to the purposes for which the funds are appropriated."

Some of the subjects on which the Bureau of Mines has specialized are of direct value in connection with military problems. For example, the chief chemist of the bureau was selected by the War Department as the man best fitted to investigate the European nitrate situation and its bearing upon the manufacture of explosives in the United States. Similarly, studies made by the bureau on mine gases and breathing apparatus are of direct value in connection with such problems as combating poisonous gases in trench warfare and the purifying of air in submarines. The men who have specialized on these problems are the men best fitted to investigate the military phases of the same problems, and in order that the country may have the maximum military benefit from the training and technical knowledge of these men and the investigative facilities of the Bureau of Mines, it is recommended that this amendment be adopted.

I suggest also that the following proviso be added at the end of line 16, page 117:

"Provided, That in time of war or of national emergency greater percentages of these sums may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be used for personal services in the District of Columbia."

During the progress of the war it will probably be necessary to have in Washington as technical advisers to the military authorities, engineers and chemists of the Bureau of Mines, who, in peace time, would be stationed in other parts of the country. For example, the work on noxious gases, already requested by the War Department, will require a considerable amount of investigative work, which, because of the necessity for frequent consultation with Army and Navy officials, can be carried on only in Washington. Similarly, emergencies not now possible to foresee are likely to arise at any time, and it would be unfortunate if a restriction on the percentage of expenditure in the District of Columbia should interfere with the solution of military problems. The authority to expend an increased percentage in the District of Columbia would expire with the termination of the war or national emergency, and would be exercised only in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. I recommend, therefore, that this proviso be made a part of the bill.

Cordially, yours,

VAN. H. MANNING,
Director.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask unanimous consent that the Secretary may correct the totals in the bill wherever they need correction.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

FOOD PRODUCTION WITHIN RECLAMATION PROJECTS.

Mr. PHELAN. Out of order I ask leave to introduce a bill recommended by the Department of the Interior, and to present a statistical table which illustrates the subject matter.

Mr. SMOOT. What was the request of the Senator from California?

Mr. PHELAN. Out of order to introduce a bill.

Mr. SMOOT. What else?

Mr. PHELAN. And to present a statistical table to illustrate the subject matter, which came to me to-day from the Department of the Interior.

Mr. SMOOT. To be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. PHELAN. In the RECORD; yes.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator does not want the bill printed in the RECORD?

Mr. PHELAN. No; the statistical table. It bears upon the question of lands which are susceptible to cultivation under the Reclamation Department, with a view of meeting the shortage of food supplies.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALSH in the chair). The Chair takes occasion to say to the Senator from California that the table will be perhaps unintelligible without a copy of the bill.

Mr. PHELAN. I thank the Chair for the suggestion, and will ask that the bill also be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill and the table referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 1725) to stimulate the production of food upon private and public lands within reclamation projects, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

Be it enacted, etc., That to aid in the production of food crops, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, owners of uncultivated private lands within reclamation projects, or their tenants, may be furnished with water for irrigation purposes for a period not extending beyond December 31, 1920. Where such land is within a project now or hereafter under public notice the owner or lessee of such private lands shall pay for the water furnished not less than the annual operation and maintenance charge fixed by the public notice, plus 2 per cent of the construction charge.

SEC. 2. That uncultivated public lands within a project, whether or not public notice has been issued, may be leased by the Secretary of the Interior without limitation of acreage, and water furnished therefor in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 1 hereof, with appropriate charge for the lease of the land.

SEC. 3. That where the Secretary of the Interior finds it impracticable to otherwise secure satisfactory guaranty of the irrigation and cultivation of public land to which the Reclamation Service can deliver water he is authorized to arrange for the cultivation of such lands by contract or with persons under Government control or supervision.

SEC. 4. That where the Secretary of the Interior finds it impracticable to otherwise secure satisfactory guaranty of the irrigation and cultivation of private lands to which the Reclamation Service can deliver water he is authorized, in the public interest as a war measure and after due notice to the owner, to undertake, by contract or by Government forces, the cultivation of said lands and to make reasonable compensation to the owners thereof for the use of such lands, taking into full consideration the benefit to such lands of the improvements necessary to bring them into cultivation, such as clearing, leveling, ditching, fencing, and any other necessary improvements.

SEC. 5. That no right to the use of water shall in any wise attach to any lands by reason of the furnishing of water under this act after the termination of any lease or contract made hereunder.

SEC. 6. That the sum of $5,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry out the provisions of this act, said sum to be reimbursed to the general fund of the Treasury from the sale of crops produced under the provisions hereof, other proceeds of the operations of this act, or from any other receipts into the reclamation fund.

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into full force and effect.

PRINTING OF DOCUMENTS IN THE RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I might as well take a little time at this point to appeal to Senators to encumber the RECORD just as little as possible. I may say that the Public Printer to-day has not on hand paper enough of some grades to do the absolutely necessary printing of the Government, and it is impossible to get certain kinds of paper.

I have not objected during the last week to the immense number of duplications that have gone into the RECORD by way of telegrams and resolutions, because of the fact that they touched upon a question that is vital to the American people at this time; but I appeal to Senators to keep out all duplications from the RECORD and to make it just as concise as possible. I believe that the RECORD, under the conditions existing to-day, ought to contain only what is said upon the floor of the Senate, unless an exception should be made in the case of communications from State legislatures or some organization, perhaps, expressing the opinion of a great mass of people. I believe that the printing in the RECORD of a great many articles such as have been printed in it and the duplication of telegrams and other communications ought to cease from now on.

I have received hundreds and hundreds of telegrams; I have read the RECORD, Mr. President, and I have found exactly the same telegrams from the same parties put in the RECORD, not once but frequently half a dozen times. It only encumbers the RECORD, costs the Government thousands and tens of thousands of dollars, and, more than that, I repeat that I do not know where we are going to get the paper to keep up the printing that will be absolutely necessary for the different departments of the Government.

Mr. THOMAS. And nobody reads the communications after they are published.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE HENRY T. HELGESEN.

A message from the House of Representatives, by E. T. Taylor, jr., one of the clerks, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. HENRY T. HELGESEN, late a Representative from the State of North Dakota, and transmitted resolutions of the House thereon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
April 11, 1917.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. HENRY T. HELGESEN, a Representative from the State of North Dakota.

Resolved, That a committee of Members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary, for carrying out the provisions of these resolutions, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the House do now adjourn.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I offer the following resolutions, and ask that they be read.

The resolutions were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Senate resolution 29.

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of the Hon. HENRY T. HELGESEN, late a Representative from the State of North Dakota.

Resolved, That a committee of 11 Senators be appointed by the Vice President, to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives, to attend the funeral of the deceased.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed, under the second resolution, as the committee on the part of the Senate: Mr. GRONNA, Mr. McCUMBER, Mr. KENYON, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, Mr. JONES of New Mexico, Mr. HUSTING, Mr. CUMMINS, Mr. BROUSSARD, Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, and Mr. FERNALD.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the deceased Representative, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 12, 1917, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 11, 1917.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We come to Thee, O God our Father, with glad and thankful hearts that we are involved in a plan which can not fail of its ultimate purpose because of Thine infinite wisdom, power, and goodness. Yet history, observation, and experience teach emphatically that we may retard its progress as individuals, as a nation, a race, by opposing the will of its Projector. Teach us, O God our Father, how to work together with Thee for the end which all true men long for, hope for, pray for; that Thy will may be done in us.

We have been touched by the going of a Member of this House, which leaves a void in our hearts. Comfort his colleagues, friends, and family by the blessed promises of the immortality of the soul, and help us to look forward with faith and confidence to the fulfilling of Thy plans in the larger life beyond the grave. And all praise be Thine through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE REPUBLIC OF CUBA (H. DOC. NO. 18.)

The SPEAKER. The Chair has received a letter which he thinks of sufficient importance to lay before the House. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

LEGACIÓN DE CUBA,
Washington, D. C., April 9, 1917.

Message transmitted to the honorable Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States of America by the speaker of the House of Representatives of the Republic of Cuba, through the legation of Cuba at Washington, D. C.

The House of Representatives of the Republic of Cuba, in declaring that a state of war exists between this nation and the German Empire, resolved—all members rising to their feet and amidst the greatest enthusiasm—to address a message of confraternity to that body announcing the pride felt by the people of Cuba in uniting their modest efforts to those of the great Nation contending for the triumph of right and respect for the liberty of small nationalities.

The house also resolved to express the special gratification of the Cuban people in uniting their flag side by side to that of the glorious Nation which, in days of undying memory, sacrificed the blood of her sons to help the people of Cuba to conquer their liberty and independence.

MIGUEL COYULA,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

[Applause.]

The letter was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed.

THE STATE OF OREGON.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following telegram of which my colleagues, Mr. SINNOTT and Mr. MCARTHUR, have received copies, and they have suggested that I present it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

PORTLAND, OREG., April 10, 1917.

Representative W. C. HAWLEY,
Washington, D. C.:

The Oregon Infantry regiment recruited to full war strength and mustered into the service. Field Artillery, Cavalry, and Coast Artillery are recruited to maximum strength, with hundreds on the waiting list. Officers and noncommissioned officers are men who have spent years preparing to be of service and are qualified. These facts are furnished you by the general staff of Oregon for your information.

WHITE, Adjutant General.

[Applause.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I only want to add a brief word to that. During the Civil War, at the request of the General Government, Oregon raised a large body of soldiers, equipped and maintained them in the field at her own expense for the protection of the people, the mails, and other Government property in the Northwest. During the Spanish-American War we furnished all the soldiers that were asked for, and could have furnished several times the number required, as they were waiting to go. The Second Oregon Regiment was first in the Philippines and the first in Manila. When the call for troops came for service on the Mexican border the Oregon regiment was the first ready for service. The services of our soldiers in the field have always been highly commended. The patriotic people of our State have been prepared whenever necessary to defend the honor and the flag of the United States, and in this time of need we are prepared to furnish all the troops from Oregon that may be needed of us. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 122. An act making appropriations for certain expenses incident to the first session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 30. Joint resolution authorizing the temporary employment of additional policemen for the Capitol Building and Grounds and the Senate and House Office Buildings.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolution of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. J. Res. 30. Joint resolution authorizing the temporary employment of additional policemen for the Capitol Building and Grounds and the Senate and House Office Buildings; to the Committee on Accounts.

BOND ISSUE.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced a bill (H. R. 2762) to authorize the issue of bonds to meet the expenditures for the national defense, extend credit to foreign nations, and for other purposes. The committee met this morning and reported it favorably, and I ask unanimous consent to make the report now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to present the report at this time. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and the bill, with the accompanying report (H. Rept. No. 3), was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. on Friday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. on Friday next. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I take it that it is the intention of the committee to take up the bond bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And finish it on Friday?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. How large a bond issue does it provide for?

Mr. KITCHIN. Five billion dollars.

Mr. MADDEN. What is to be done with it?

Mr. KITCHIN. Three billions is to be loaned to purchase bonds of foreign Governments.

Mr. MADDEN. Have we authority to do that under the Constitution?

Mr. KITCHIN. They say so; but we will discuss that phase of it on Friday. It further provides, in addition to this $5,000,000,000, for two billions of certificates of indebtedness to run not exceeding one year.

Mr. MADDEN. Is there any other provision in it for raising revenue?

Mr. KITCHIN. No.

Mr. MADDEN. Can we get a copy of the bill in advance?

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman can get a copy now; it is printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

REQUEST TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on next Saturday, after the reading of the Journal and disposing of the business on the Speaker's table, I may address the House for one hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that next Saturday, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of the business on the Speaker's desk, he may address the House for one hour. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Reserving the right to object, there is no certainty that we will be through with the discussion and consideration of the bond-issue measure, and therefore for the present I object.

Mr. BORLAND. There could be no interference with that, because it would be only on condition that we are through that I ask the privilege.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think for the present I shall object.

ADDITIONAL CAPITOL POLICE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following resolution from the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 28) authorizing the temporary employment of additional policemen for the Capitol Building and Grounds and the Senate and House Office Buildings.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE PANAMA RAILROAD CO. (S. DOC. NO. 7).

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying document, was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and, with the exception of the document, ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the sixty-seventh annual report of the board of directors of the Panama Railroad Co. for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 11, 1917.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes and in that period of time to have a letter read from the governor of Indiana, addressed to myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think we ought to adjourn. There is an announcement to be made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. MANN. I hope that he will not insist upon it at this time.

Mr. COX. I will withdraw that request, Mr. Speaker, though I think the letter ought to go into the RECORD, and I ask unanimous consent to insert it in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the matter indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman a blunt question. Is there anything in his extension of remarks that reflects upon a Senator or Representative?

Mr. COX. Absolutely not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask that question because there are certain remarks inserted in the RECORD this morning that do reflect upon Senators and Representatives, growing out of this war discussion, and I propose hereafter to object——

Mr. COX. This is a letter from the governor of Indiana relating exclusively to what he is doing out there to increase the food supply in Indiana, and contains many valuable suggestions which I think will be of value to the Nation generally.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I wish to say, in view of these reflections upon Senators and Members of the House inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD this morning, that I propose to give heed hereafter to requests for unanimous consent to extend remarks in the RECORD with reference to the war, for the purpose of ascertaining whether they do reflect upon Members. To insert such remarks is an abuse of the privileges of the House.

Mr. COX. I have no objection to what the gentleman proposes to do.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, if I may be allowed, in the last Congress I introduced an amendment to the rules which provided that no Member of the House under leave to print should be permitted to refer either directly or indirectly to any other Member of the House, and I do not see why that amendment was not incorporated in the rules. It ought to be a part of the rules of the House.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I have not the floor, but I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the matter indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
STATE OF INDIANA,
Indianapolis, April 9, 1917.

Hon. WILLIAM E. COX,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I have your letter of the 6th.

Following up a call last week we have had wonderful meetings all over the State; following this up we are to have a meeting of the executive committee to-morrow. We intend to arrange to send three expert men into every county in Indiana to spend their time, day and night, with farmers holding township meetings and working along the lines suggested.

I have issued a call to-day for the mayors of the fifth-class cities. We perfected last night a plan to mobilize the idle labor of the State; when I say idle labor I mean men who would, if called upon, enlist in the national service and who are able to enlist in this more important service of raising food.

I intend to mobilize this help to mobilize all vacant tracts of ground from 5 acres and up under charge of semimilitary organization, and see to it that these tracts are planted in substantial food crops. Then we expect along with that, as a part of this committee's work, to have the manufacturers of the State call on their men to sign pledges by which they will agree to plant and cultivate vacant lots.

We will mobilize vacant lots, assigning to each man willing to undertake it a lot and expect him to cultivate it.

I intend to select a director of food conservation, with offices in the State house and with assistants throughout the State.

I have no money with which to do this work. I intend to do either one of two things, either address a personal communication to the members of the general assembly asking them to agree that they will reimburse me for any money expended for this purpose, and I can then raise the money and go ahead with this important work. I will put the alternative suggestion to them of a special meeting of the legislature for the purpose of making an appropriation of $200,000 to carry on this work.

I am doing everything that can be done and wish I could divide myself up into about 100 men for the next 60 days; I think I could get something done.

I wired Senators NEW and WATSON, also WILL WOOD and yourself this morning asking you to cooperate with them in securing certain orders from the Interstate Commerce Commission with respect to the movement of fertilizer and seeds.

Next to the food supply I regard the coal situation, not only in Indiana but throughout the country, as the most critical.

I wish I might have the opportunity to talk it over with you. I am going east next week, and if you think it would be of any help I might stop in Washington for a day and have a conference with respect to some of these matters.

There is much that the Federal Government can do through the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission to help work out these questions, and I feel there ought to be the closest cooperation in every respect.

I thank you for your many expressions of confidence and support, and if I can be of any service to you in any way always command me.

Yours, very truly,

J. P. GOODRICH.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the notice of contest of the Hon. James Wickersham for his seat in the House of Representatives as Delegate from Alaska.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the notice of contest of Hon. James Wickersham for his seat as Delegate in the Congress from the Territory of Alaska. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is it customary to print these notices in the RECORD?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object. It is an irregular practice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. PARK. It is to give the information to the House of the grounds of that contest.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a letter from a citizen of New York sojourning in Florida, and also a letter from a minister of the gospel residing in the State of Florida, with reference to the war situation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to insert his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the matter indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I put this question to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK]: Is there anything in this letter that reflects upon any Representative, because there are such letters in the RECORD this morning?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. There is not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri objects.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a patriotic proposal from a woman in my district.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated.

A MEMBER. To whom is the proposal made? [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHBROOK. To the Government of the United States.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have hundreds of patriotic letters from people in my district, and I do not think we ought to burden the RECORD with all of these things.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Kentucky object?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri objects.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I rise to renew my request of a few minutes ago to be permitted to speak on Saturday for one hour after the close of business on the Speaker's table and the approval of the Journal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to address the House for one hour on Saturday next after the approval of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, no one knows when we will get through with the bond bill, and until that is disposed of I object.

Mr. BORLAND. This is not to interfere with the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that on Saturday next, following the approval of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, he be permitted to address the House for one hour. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. For the reasons stated, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 122. An act making appropriations for certain expenses incident to the first session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, and for other purposes.

DEATH OF HON. HENRY T. HELGESEN.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, it becomes my sad duty to announce the death of the Hon. HENRY T. HELGESEN, a Representative from the State of North Dakota, who died in the city of Washington on yesterday afternoon. Mr. HELGESEN'S career was a most distinguished and honorable one. For the last six years he was one of the most highly respected Members of this body, and for more than 30 years he has been a leader in the civic and political activities of North Dakota.

I shall ask, Mr. Speaker, at some future time that a day be set apart when Members of this House may be afforded an opportunity to pay suitable tribute to his worth and character. At this time I send to the Clerk's desk a resolution, for which I ask present consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 46.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. HENRY T. HELGESEN, a Representative from the State of North Dakota.

Resolved, That a committee of Members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of these resolutions, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The question was taken, and the resolution was unanimously agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair, by unanimous consent, announces the appointment of the following committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota, Mr. NORTON of North Dakota, Mr. HAUGEN of Iowa, Mr. DILLON of South Dakota, Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota, Mr. GANDY of South Dakota, Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina, Mr. CLARK of Florida, Mr. KINCHELOE of Kentucky, and Mr. BOOHER of Missouri.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 24 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. on Friday, April 13, 1917.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates of additional appropriations for wages of workmen and contingent expenses for the assay office at New York and the mints of Philadelphia and New Orleans for the fiscal year 1917 (H. Doc. No. 15); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates of appropriations for additional guards at the Subtreasuries at New York, San Francisco, and New Orleans, from May 1, 1917, to June 30, 1918 (H. Doc. No. 16); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, April 12, 1917.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our security and peace are in the relationship that we sustain to Thee our Father in heaven. Fate and chance have no place in the realm of the higher life, and in this realm there is naught but security and peace and rest. Grant us such conscious relation to Thyself that we shall not be subject in our inner spiritual life to any of the vicissitudes of time and fortune. Give us security in God. For Christ's sake. Amen.

THOMAS P. GORE, a Senator from the State of Oklahoma, appeared in his seat to-day.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. SMOOT and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

OBJECTIONABLE MATTER IN THE RECORD.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege. Upon yesterday I had not had time to read the RECORD when the attention of the Senate was called to the fact that I had had printed in the RECORD many telegrams, and some of which I say frankly ought not to have been printed in the RECORD. No Senator, of course, has any right to print in the RECORD anything reflecting upon the honor or honesty or integrity of another Senator. He has no right to do it in debate and therefore has no right to put it in the RECORD. That goes without saying.

It was with gratification, however, that I learned the fact I want to communicate to the Senate, because it is gratifying to me. Upon yesterday I said I had told my secretary to classify this character of telegrams and I left the impression that he had made a mistake. I have learned with much gratification since that it was my mistake and not his. He attended to his duty as he usually does. He had placed one bunch of telegrams in one place and part of the other telegrams very close to it, and then when I was hurrying to the Senate I gathered them all up and came here and put them in.

I ask unanimous consent that there shall be expunged from the RECORD, first, the communication next to the last on page 410, column 1, and the communication beginning at the bottom of column 2, page 410, and proceeding to its end. It is a little awkward to make this request, because I can not read them. If I did, I would be merely repeating them in the RECORD.

Then I ask to have expunged the next telegram which immediately follows that, on page 411 of the RECORD, in column 1.

Then, skipping the next one, which is a telegram signed by Lyon G. Tyler, president of William and Mary College, strike out the next one to his, the one below it.

Then, in column 2, page 411, strike out the second telegram, which is signed by Charles S. Ashley.

Then, skipping one, strike out the next one, which is signed by Mr. Thomas P. Ivy; and, skipping one more, strike out the next one, which is signed by A. H. Williams.

Mr. SMOOT. I call the Senator's attention to the first telegram, in column 2, on page 411.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, Mr. President, the first telegram on page 411, column 2, which begins in that column; the communication immediately following that and the communication immediately following that; then, skipping a communication, the communication following that, all in column 2, page 411.

Now, strike out the first communication in the first column, beginning on page 412. Then the first communication in the second column, on page 412. Then, skipping two communications, strike out the next one, which I will identify to the reporter by telling him it is signed by Mr. Battle. Then the one following that, in the second column, page 412.

Then I come to a communication concerning which I will say that I do not know how it got into the RECORD. It is not addressed to me; it is addressed to Senator LA FOLLETTE. Possibly somebody sent me a copy of it; I do not know; but, at any rate, it ought not to have been inserted. That is a long communication from a meeting of the governors of the Wisconsin Chapter of Sons of the American Revolution. It is the fourth communication, beginning in column 1, page 413.

Then the communication in column 2, page 413, following that.

Then the second communication in column 1, page 414, and then the last communication in column 2, page 414, the matter which appears upon the next page being a part of it.

Then, skipping the communication, the next one, signed, I will state merely for the information of the reporter, by a gentleman by the name of Newell.

Then in column 2, page 415, the communication signed by my old schoolmate and friend, Charles H. Cocke.

Then, skipping one communication, the next one. Then the one following it, and then the one following that, all in the second column on page 415.

Now, Mr. President, I want to say just this: The rules of this body are founded in wisdom and in courtesy. In striking out these communications I mean no disrespect whatever to the men who have sent them to me. They had a perfect right to express their opinion concerning the motives and purposes and their notion of the loyalty or disloyalty of anybody in the United States, whether a Senator or not. There is no such thing as "a sovereign Senator." The mistake was not theirs; it was mine. But, while they had a perfect right to express to me their opinions, I had no right to spread their opinions upon the records of the Senate, and I am sorry the mistake occurred.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me? Do I understand——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to add just one more word. Of course I felt a little bit hurt at the manner in which the matter came up.

Mr. PENROSE. Do I understand the Senator from Mississippi to state that he submitted these telegrams to the Senate and asked their insertion in the RECORD without examining their contents or knowing what he was submitting to the Senate?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; you do not. You understood——

Mr. PENROSE. That is the reason why I made the inquiry.

Mr. WILLIAMS. You understood the "Senator from Mississippi" to say, if you understood what he said, that he submitted them after he thought he had examined them and after his clerk, according to his idea, classified them, and that the clerk was carefully instructed to exclude all telegrams which reflected upon any Senator. Now then, it turns out later that it was not his fault but was mine, because I picked up a part of the telegrams in one bunch and shoved them in with the balance. In other words, in the language of the comic opera Pinafore, it was I "who mixed those babies up" and not my clerk.

Mr. PENROSE. The result is the same. The Senator thought he had examined them; his secretary was instructed to examine them, and the wrong bundle was picked up. It was a most flagrant instance, Mr. President, of a violation of the proprieties——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have not yielded to the Senator.

Mr. PENROSE. I thought the Senator had finished.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have not yielded to the Senator for a lecture.

Mr. PENROSE. I am not going to lecture the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator can do it after I sit down, and then I will reply to his lecture.

Mr. PENROSE. Very well; I will wait until the Senator is through.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have just said that I committed a grave fault in permitting these telegrams to appear in the RECORD. If I can say anything stronger than that, I do not know very well how to say it; perhaps the Senator from Pennsylvania does.

Now, I want to say this, that none of us need to be thin-skinned about the criticism of the people. If everything that every blind pacifist and peace fanatic has said about me in public print and private letters or about other Senators was put in the RECORD, I suppose it would be regarded as very insulting; and if the frantic attempt of the fanatic pacifist to inspire the patriotic ardor of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] the other day by first calling him "a damned coward" and then trying to knock him down has not called upon him to present himself to the Senate in order to ask the defense of this august body, it does seem to me none of us need be very particularly thin-skinned about what people say about us.

As far as I am concerned, this fault is mine. That explanation I have made. I have attempted to tell how it happened. The truth was that I took up a bundle of telegrams that I was to offer to the Senate and some of the telegrams that I was not intending to offer, which were lying near them, and I brought them in and shoved them all in without rereading them. I had read every telegram before and had taken due measures, as I thought, to classify them and separate them.

Now, Mr. President, there is no doubt about this matter; in the interest of ordinary peace as well as courtesy no Senator has a right to say anything upon this floor which reflects upon the patriotism, honor, honesty, or integrity of another Senator. He has no more right to put anything in the RECORD carrying a like reflection than he has to utter the words before the open Senate.

I hope what I have said is satisfactory.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I have only one word to say about this incident.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry—this is not personal to the Senator from Pennsylvania——

Mr. PENROSE. I rise to a question of order. This is really a question of order or of privilege, and I have two words to say.

Mr. WALSH. I call upon the Senator from Pennsylvania to state his point of order.

Mr. PENROSE. I want to call the attention of the Senate to the very questionable propriety of the wholesale insertion of telegrams every morning in the RECORD.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. PENROSE. I want to make a personal explanation.

Mr. WALSH. What is the order before the Senate?

Mr. PENROSE. I rise to a personal explanation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The order before the Senate is the presentation of petitions and memorials.

Mr. WALSH. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have made a motion or asked unanimous consent to expunge the matter I indicated from the RECORD.

Mr. PENROSE. I speak to that motion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have indicated sundry communications to be stricken from the RECORD, and I ask that that request shall be put before the Senate.

Mr. PENROSE. I object to the request, for I want to say two words.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If I can not get consent, I will make the motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi has asked unanimous consent to strike from the RECORD the communications indicated by him and in the notes of the reporter. Is there objection?

Mr. PENROSE. I will object so that the Senator may make the motion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What does the Senator say?

Mr. PENROSE. I made an objection so that you can make a motion that I may have an opportunity of saying two words.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well, then, I make the motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi moves that the matter indicated by him be expunged from the RECORD.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not want to cut off freedom of debate from the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I only rose to call the attention of the Senate to the gross abuse which we have witnessed in the last few days, and which we are constantly witnessing in the insertion of telegrams, frequently inconsequential, in the RECORD. This is one of the most flagrant instances that has occurred recently. We have seen scores of telegrams of no consequence whatever encumber the RECORD and diminishing its usefulness by obscuring the really useful matter in that publication and diluting it with matter like this. Here we have an instance of telegrams which in some way were jumbled up and thrown into the Senate without any proper inspection or consideration.

I receive telegrams, Mr. President, several thousand a week, on matters of this kind, and I have refrained, from a sense of good taste and propriety, from giving the Pennsylvania department of the Western Union Telegraph office a record in the publication of our daily proceedings. Why every obscure citizen who expresses a desire to enlist and to raise a company in some mountain fastness should have his telegram read here in the Senate, that being the last ever heard of this valiant warrior, and why these hundreds of telegrams should be repeatedly published in the RECORD, when scores of other Senators have similar telegrams, almost identical telegrams, they being of no value by way of information to Senators or Representatives or the public, I have yet to understand?

I hope that this mistake, which the Senator from Mississippi so candidly admits that he has made, will impress Senators with the importance at least of the exercise of care, at any rate, in selecting telegrams worthy of some particular note and consideration, and that it will impress on them that perhaps the practice is "more honored in the breach than the observance" of taking the time and taxing the patience of the Senate by flooding the RECORD every morning with telegrams, nine-tenths of which are of no consequence whatever after the recipient has read them.

Mr. WILLIAMS and Mr. THOMAS addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, of course I agree, as every Senator does, with a great deal of what has been said by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I have been one of the Members of the Senate who has availed himself very seldom and very little of this custom, which, in my opinion, is a bad one; but speeches have been made against the course of the President of the United States, against the course of the Congress of the United States, and against the will of the people of the United States, in which it has been asserted that the people of the United States were neither with the President nor with Congress nor with themselves. Things have been inserted in the RECORD which were highly insulting to every one of us who wanted to avenge German aggression. I therefore thought it was only right to have inserted in the RECORD those telegrams upholding the President, the Congress, and the people, and I thought I was doing only that which upheld me in the position I have taken to support the President, and which upheld the President and which upheld the Congress. I have no apology to make for that.

As to the question of "good faith and propriety," referred to by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], although I have a very high personal regard for the Senator from Pennsylvania, I know that he will agree with me that if I were selecting an apostle of "good taste and propriety," I would go a little bit farther than where he now sits.

Mr. President, I have made my explanation so far as I know how; I have also made a motion, and I ask that the Senate vote on it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Mississippi to say that he felt somewhat hurt because of the manner in which this question was brought to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator from Colorado will permit an interruption, I will say yes, I did, because I thought that he or any other friend of mine could have come to me and said, "John, there are some things here in these telegrams which I do not think you will think you ought to have inserted in the RECORD," and I could then have made a motion upon my own will and not appear apparently pilloried before the country by any other Senator's motion.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I endeavored to ascertain where the Senator from Mississippi was before I called the attention of the Senate to what I conceived to be a violation of one of its rules. I am very sorry that the Senator feels hurt in regard to it. I merely wish to say that my course would have been the same, prompted from a sense of duty, had any other Senator than the Senator from Mississippi been the cause of my protest. I beg to assure the Senator from Mississippi that no intention on my part existed to reflect upon him at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was in my committee room, where I could have been found. I did not say that there was any such intention.

Mr. THOMAS. Nor did there exist any intention upon my part to hurt his feelings, except in so far as I thought the subject was one which should be immediately brought to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And without consultation with the "Senator from Mississippi"? Mr. President, I ask for a vote on my motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I desire to read a short but highly patriotic letter which I have received from a mother in Montana and to make brief comment thereon, for it did my heart good to receive it, and I think the public should know of it.

I am a believer in the practice of publishing in the RECORD a limited number of patriotic telegrams and letters from different States in order to show the sentiment of the people in those States and to stimulate others, provided, of course, that none of the letters or telegrams make any reflection upon any Senator or upon any department of the Government, or upon anybody at all, for that matter. Of course I would not sanction that.

I am in receipt of a letter from Montana, which is so different from some other letters which I have received and which breathes such a pure spirit of high-minded patriotism and devotion to country, that I believe it ought not to be passed by unnoticed. It breathes a beautiful sentiment of unselfish sacrifice. The letters is as follows:

MISSOULA, MONT., April 6, 1917.

Hon. H. L. MYERS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I trust you will give your support to the compulsory universal military training bill. I am a widow with one child, a son, and I believe it to be the only way to put our country on a proper basis for defense, as each citizen will then have his share of responsibility.

Very truly,

(Mrs. R. A.) ETHEL G. RODRICK.

I desire to say a few words in reference to this letter. It deserves a few. This letter, to my mind, breathes the lofty sentiment of pure patriotism and devotion to country which we need at this hour. Here is a widow with only one child, and that child a son who doubtless is just about the age of young men who, under conscription, would be required to serve in the war upon which we are now embarking; at least his mother evidently thinks he is of that age. Doubtless he is the pride of his mother's life, the hope of her advancing years, her mainstay and support; more to her than all else in the world. His mother expresses a desire to have him offer his services to his country in the war in which we are now engaged, and she is willing, if Providence should have so foreordained, that he shall even shed his life's blood in behalf of his country and give up his life on the altar of his country. This is the kind of motherhood spirit which makes countries great and which wins wars.

This mother is not only willing to give the services and, if need be, the life of her son to her country in its time of stress, but she would have the law so framed that he would have to serve whether she were willing for him to do so or not and whether or not he be willing. Furthermore, she wants the law so framed that all other young men of like age will be required to serve, so all would be on a level, which, I believe, would be a very fair and reasonable method of raising an army. It would require the sons of the rich and of the poor, of the great and of the small, of the high and of the low to serve alike, each to render equal service to his country.

All honor to this Montana mother and widow for her patriotic sentiments. She is deserving of ranking with the mothers of Sparta, who put the honor and welfare of their country above all else in this world. Such Spartan motherhood makes men worthy to be soldiers, makes nations worthy to be nations; yea, makes for liberty and the rights of mankind; makes life worth living. I am proud to have such a constituent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Mississippi.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. JAMES. I present to the Senate and ask to have printed in the RECORD a resolution adopted by the members of Pineville Council, No. 77, of the Junior Order United American Mechanics, of Kentucky, approving the course of the President and expressing loyalty and support to the Government.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PINEVILLE, KY., April 10, 1917.

Hon. OLLIE M. JAMES,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Inclosed find copy of a resolution passed by the members of Pineville Council, No. 77, Junior Order of United American Mechanics.

Please accept this with the same sincerity and gravity with which it was passed by this organization, and be assured that it expresses the sentiment not only of this fraternal organization but the sentiment of 99 per cent of the people of the mountains.

You will confer a favor upon us by placing this resolution in the hands of those who would call upon us should our services be needed.

Obediently, yours,

G. J. JARVIS.

Whereas there is every indication that the United States of America are to be drawn into the world war through the ruthless and inhuman tactics of the Imperial German Government; and

Whereas President Wilson has called Congress into extraordinary session for the purpose of taking such action as to them seems best in the impending crisis; and

Whereas the Junior Order of United American Mechanics ever stands ready to defend the Stars and Stripes and to protect the interests of the American people: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved—

1. That we unquestioning and unqualifiedly indorse the action of President Wilson in calling Congress into session at this time for the purpose of protecting the rights of America from the unlawful and ruthless ravages of Germany.

2. That we, as a patriotic and American order, pledge to our Government whatever assistance we may be able to lend, whether on the battle field or in furnishing our share of the supplies necessary to carry on the war.

3. That we denounce as un-American any defense of the warfare naw being waged by the Imperial German Government upon defenseless women and children, and in the name of virtue, liberty, and patriotism call upon every home-loving American to put his face to the front and search for no vision but the Stars and Stripes.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minute book of the lodge and a copy furnished Senators JAMES and BECKHAM.

PINEVILLE COUNCIL, No. 77, JR. O. U. A. M., REUBEN HENDRICKSON, Councilor.

A copy.
Attest:

G. J. JARVIS,
Assistant Recording Secretary.

Mr. WALSH. I send to the desk patriotic resolutions of the General Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, adopted on February 7, and also resolutions adopted on the eve of the dissolution of the last session of the legislature, and ask that they be printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint resolution No. 4. (Introduced by Mr. Edwards.) A resolution relating to international affairs.

IN THE SENATE.

February 5, 1917: Introduced without previous notice by unanimous consent of senate. Read and adopted. Transmitted to House for concurrence.

IN THE HOUSE.

February 5, 1917: Read and adopted. Returned to the senate.
February 6, 1917: Referred to enrolling committee.

Whereas it is apparent that our Nation is facing a great international crisis, and that despite our persistent efforts to maintain peace and good will with all the world, we are compelled to meet a situation that threatens the tranquillity of our relations with other world powers; and

Whereas a part of the press and people of the great European nations seem to mistake our democratic method of free and vigorous discussion of internal and external problems for a lack of national unity; and

Whereas it is important at this time that all the world should know that no consideration of previous association, of foreign birth, or even the ties of kindred and of blood outweighs in the hearts and minds of our people of the loyalty and love which they feel for this Nation that has given to us all the greatest measure of freedom and opportunity ever bestowed on any people in the world's history: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the people of the State of Montana, speaking through their servants, the members of the legislative assembly, communicate to the President of the United States and through him to all the world our unquestioned, undivided, and unanimous support in whatever course the exigencies of the situation require; and be it further

Resolved, That while we hope and pray for peace with all the world, we pledge ourselves, severally and collectively, and in our representative capacity, with all our resources, as individuals and as a Commonwealth, to the unequivocal and undivided support of the Nation; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States.

W. W. MCDOWELL,
President of the Senate.
JAS. F. O'CONNOR,
Speaker of the House.

Approved February 7, 1917.

S. V. STEWART, Governor.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Montana, ss:

I, C. T. Stewart, secretary of state of the State of Montana, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of Senate joint resolution No. 4, a resolution relating to international affairs, and pledging the support of the State of Montana to the President, enacted by the Fifteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana and approved by S. V. Stewart, governor of said State, on the 7th day of February, 1917.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of said State. Done at the city of Helena, the capital of said State, this 1st day of March, A. D. 1917.

[SEAL.]

C. T. STEWART,
Secretary of State.

Senate resolution No. —. (Introduced by Mr. Hogan.)

Be it resolved by the Senate of Montana, That we renew the pledges heretofore made by this body of the moral, financial, and physical support of the President of the United States, in dealing with the grave international situation that confronts him, in any emergency that may arise and to any limit. We call the attention of the Congress of the United States to the fact that Montana has millions of acres of fertile land now unused that, if properly utilized, will produce food enough to feed a large portion of the Nation's people. That if speedy action is taken the cultivated area of the State can be tripled, and the great Indian reservations within our borders can be made to produce immense quantities of potatoes, wheat, and other cereals. Individual efforts can not accomplish the results in time for this year's planting o crops, but the combined efforts of the State and Nation can produce results in this line that would be a mighty factor in the struggle which appears to us to be inevitable.

We have great mineral resources, great water power, and great agricultural assets, and last, but not least, we have men, all of which are at the disposal of the Government for national defense.

We express as our sober and deliberate judgment the conviction that the dangers that threaten us are great enough to require and demand the mobilization of our national resources for war or peace, as the case may be, and we urge that immediate action be taken to that end. We pledge the cooperation of the State in any plan that the wisdom of the National Government may adopt for the development and use of our resources and, if necessary, will bond the State for this purpose. And be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be forwarded to the President and Congress of the United States.

Mr. BORAH. By request, I present a memorial signed by a great number of citizens against compulsory military service. The memorial is not long, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD, omitting the list of names.

There being no objection, the memorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ST. MARIES, IDAHO, April 1, 1917.

To the President of the United States and the Sixty-fifth Congress of the United States, in session:

We, the undersigned, American citizens, residing at St. Maries, Idaho, belfeving that it would be taking an unfair and dishonorable advantage of the present high national tension due to the present international situation to attempt to pass a law so obviously unnecessary to meet the crisis as the universal military training measure, we petition the President and Congress, whatever their personal sentiments may be, to give us a fair deal by delaying the measure until such a time as it can be given calm and unbiased consideration.

Mr. NEW. I present a petition from the Commercial Club, of Madison, Ind., with reference to the improvement of the Ohio River. I ask that the petition be received and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HUSTING. I submit two telegrams, the first embodying a resolution adopted by the Order of Elks, of Grand Rapids, and the Second from the Order of Elks, of Janesville, Wis., expressing loyalty and support to the Government, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LOYALTY RESOLUTION, GRAND RAPIDS (WIS.) ELKS' LODGE.

GRAND RAPIDS, WIS., April 6, 1917.

Hon. PAUL O. HUSTING,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The following resolution was unanimously adopted this evening at a meeting of the Elks' Lodge at Grand Rapids, Wis.:

"Whereas the United States is now on the verge of war, therefore we, as citizens of this Nation and members of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, in meeting assembled, with malice toward none and with charity for all, but with loyalty and patriotism in our hearts and with firmness in the right, do hereby

"Resolve, That as loyal citizens, irrespective of political creed, we hereby approve of the action of President Wilson in his efforts to establish national preparedness and to maintain our integrity and honor as a Nation; that we, as members of this great American order, hereby pledge to him and to this Government our hearty and loyal support in every act to protect the safety of our citizens and honor of our Nation and the cause of freedom and democracy throughout the world; that we hereby pledge anew faithfulness to our obligation to foster and promote love of country, devotion to our flag, and fidelity to our republican institutions."

W. H. CAREY, Exalted Ruler.

LOYALTY RESOLUTIONS, JANESVILLE (WIS.) LODGE OF ELKS.

JANESVILLE, WIS., April 4, 1917.

Mr. HUSTING,
Washington, D. C.:

Therefore be it Resolved, That the Order of Elks, being composed soley of American citizens, the American flag being our emblem, we again affirm our loyalty to the flag as loyal American citizens, without regard to any party affiliation, pledge our hearty support to the President and Congress in their every act for the safety and protection of our citizens both at home and abroad and the cause of freedom and democracy throughout the world; and be it further

Resolved, That should war be declared we urge Congress to immediately enact a law providing universal obligatory military training as the only efficient, just, and democratic method of defense; that we urge Congress without delay to equip our existing troops and those to be raised with the most modern appliances of war, so that the equipment of our Army and Navy shall be second to none, and that if war is declared we urge the Government of the United States to conduct it with all of its power.

JANESVILLE (WIS.) LODGE, No. 254.

Mr. HUSTING. I also present a telegram from the Wisconsin Defense League signed by Wheeler P. Bloodgood, chairman, and others, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LOYALTY TELEGRAM OF WISCONSIN DEFENSE LEAGUE.

MILWAUKEE, WIS., April 2, 1917.

Senator PAUL O. HUSTING,
Washington, D. C.:

Following telegram has been sent to the President:

"The Wisconsin Defense League has come into being as the result of the telegram sent you on February 27, and the mass meeting held March 17, which was addressed by Senator HUSTING, Representative LENROOT, and others. It has the indorsement of more than 10,000 individual citizens of Milwaukee and of organizations aggregating 30,000 more of her male population. Meetings held in six representative Wisconsin cities within the past four days have been attended by thousands, by whom the Government has been indorsed and patriotic allegiance expressed with the utmost force and enthusiasm. Madison, the State capital, had a demonstration yesterday, participated in by 15,000, and a monster meeting presided over by Chief Justice Winslow, of the supreme court, which passed strong resolutions, of which you have been advised. Other meetings of similar character are announced for this week. You will learn from reports of the recruiting officers to the War and Navy Departments that Wisconsin men are backing their declarations with enlistments. The people of Wisconsin have no patience with peace propagandists who are in great majority bent only upon placing obstacles in the way of this Government for the sole benefit of those who threaten our peace and freedom. Wisconsin is loyal to you and will stand behind you as the head of the Government. In the language of Chief Justice Winslow, we believe that 'in the midst of the greatest calamity of the ages we have taken our stand upon the side of human rights and fundamental principles of civilization. If we abandon that position now, we would shirk a plain duty and proclaim ourselves the greatest cowards in all history.'"

WHEELER P. BLOODGOOD,
Chairman Wisconsin Defense League.

Executive committee: F. R. Bacon, W. W. Coleman, Walter Davidson, Rev. Herbert C. Neenan, S. J. Guy, D. Goff, George Cudahy, John Callahan, Willet A. Spooner, Ellis B. Usher, Frank M. Hoyt, Thaddeus M. Wild.

Mr. HUSTING. I also present resolutions adopted by the Democratic county committee of Sauk County, Wis., and a petition signed by a large number of citizens of Markesan, Wis., which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution and petition were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PATRIOTIC RESOLUTIONS OF DEMOCRATIC COUNTY COMMITTEE OF SAUK COUNTY, WIS.

We, the Democratic county committee for Sauk County, Wis., duly called together and assembled, do resolve as follows:

That we pledge our loyalty to our country, and hereby renew our allegiance to democracy at home and abroad. We hereby extend to our brave President in his effort to support stainless the honor of the United States our hearty and unreserved support.

We congratulate our State and the Government upon the loyal Americanism of Senator HUSTING, and as Democrats are proud of his support of our President, and we recall that our honored Senator has in the past supported with zeal that basic democratic principle of universal service.

We further commend Congressman LENROOT and all of the Wisconsin delegation who have with patriotic loyalty supported our President in the trying situation that has been and now is.

Lastly, at this solemn moment we avow that no man can serve two masters, and for ourselves and our constituents we reaffirm that we stand for the United States and ever shall.

We, the undersigned business men of Markesan, Wis., earnestly petition for the passage by the United States Congress of the joint resolution introduced in the United States Senate by Senators MORRIS SHEPPARD and JACOB H. GALLINGER, and in the House by Representatives EDWIN Y. WEBB and ADDISON T. SMITH, providing for the prohibition of the sale, manufacture for sale, transportation for sale, importation for sale, and exportation for sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes in the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof.

R. G. WILLIAMS
(And others).

Mr. POMERENE. I present sundry communications and resolutions from citizens of Ohio, which I ask may be incorporated in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the communications and resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BOARD OF EDUCATION,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Cleveland, April 4, 1917.

Hon. ATLEE POMERENE, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting held under the auspices of this board of education yesterday evening, at which I had the honor to preside, and which was attended by citizens of a great variety of races and stocks, the following resolution was carried by a most unanimous and enthusiastic vote:

"Resolved, That we, 465 citizens of the United States of America, assembled at Nottingham School, Cleveland, Ohio, do hereby declare our heartfelt allegiance to the United States of America and our support of the President in his defense of the right of American citizens and American commerce to traverse the high seas in accordance with the principles of international law, notwithstanding the edict of any foreign nation or potentate whatsoever; and

"Resolved, That the chairman is requested to send a copy of this resolution to the President."

Respectfully submitted.

Director of Schools.

NORTH END IMPROVEMENT ASSOCIATION,
Toledo, Ohio, March 30, 1917.

Whereas our President, Woodrow Wilson, has used his utmost endeavor to keep this country out of the European holocaust; and

Whereas notwithstanding the President's endeavor to the contrary it has become quite evident that this country is becoming embroiled in war with certain European nations; and

Whereas it has also become evident that our present voluntary military system is grossly inadequate in case of serious emergency, and it is also unfair to them to rely on only our most patriotic young men for national protection: Now therefore be it hereby

Resolved, That the North End Improvement Association, of Toledo, Ohio, do hereby express our appreciation and confidence in President Wilson and pledge to him and his almost unanimous conferees in both Houses of Congress our support in upholding and carrying out the measures they shall deem wise in the premises; and be it further

Resolved, That Congress should immediately enact proper laws providing for universal preliminary education and training to commence in youth and be continued with organization and equipment at stated periods for a reasonable time thereafter; and be it

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be mailed to President Wilson and to Senators POMERENE and HARDING and Congressman SHERWOOD, and a copy to each of the Toledo daily papers.

Resolutions adopted by Mansfield Lodge, No. 56, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Mansfield, Ohio, at the regular session of the lodge April 3, 1917.

Whereas the President of the United States has declared to the Congress that a state of war has been forced upon our country by the Imperial Government of Germany and has asked authority to use the power and resources of the Nation to defend and protect the rights and interests of our country and its citizens against the unlawful aggressions of the German Empire and has called upon the citizenship of the Republic to rally to the defense of our common country: Therefore be it

Resolved by Mansfield Lodge, No. 56, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Mansfield, Ohio, That we indorse the action of the Chief Executive of our country and urge upon the Congress united support of the administration of the Nation; and further, that we pledge our fealty to our country and renew our obligation to sustain and protect its flag and all the institutions which it represents.

Resolved also, That we indorse the proposed action of the Congress to adopt a stable and universal citizen soldiery, and we urge the passage of the measure known as the Chamberlain bill and believe it to be a reconsecration of our faith and allegiance to this great democracy.

THE FREMONT CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
FREMONT, OHIO.

At a regular meeting of the Fremont Chamber of Commerce, held this 14th day of March, 1917, the following resolution was presented for adoption by F. E. Seager:

"Whereas we believe it is the desire of our people to live in peace and amity with all nations; that neither our national leaders nor our people covet the territory or possessions of any race or people on earth; and

"Whereas we, as a Nation, have been engaged in peaceful pursuits and in the amassing of wealth for many years; as a country we are rich in agriculture, mining, and manufacturing; and being rich in lands and gold we invite attack from the powerful and envious; other nations, rich and weak, have been despoiled; only a people willing and able to maintain their rights and defend their liberties are guaranteed free institutions; and

"Whereas we believe it to be a self-evident fact that the duty of defending the Nation rests equally upon all citizens capable of service: Therefore,

"Resolved by the Fremont Chamber of Commerce, That we favor the immediate establishment by Congress of a permanent and democratic system of compulsory universal military training for national defense, under Federal control, adapted to American requirements, and embracing all young men between the ages of 19 and 24 years for such period or periods of annual service as may be prescribed by law, coupled with the obligation of service in time of war up to the age of 45 years, according to each man's capacity; and be it further

"Resolved, That we ask Congressman OVERMYER and Senators HARDING and POMERENE to favor and work for the enactment of permanent laws embodying the above or similar provisions, and that a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to our Congressman and to each United States Senator from this State, and that they be furnished to the press of the county."

Moved by C. L. Halter, seconded by Lester Wilson, that the above resolutions be adopted. Voted on and carried unanimously.

F. E. SEAGER, Secretary.

Resolutions passed by the Richland County Bar Association, April 3, 1917, regular meeting.

Whereas the Nation is on the verge of war or in a state of war; and

Whereas American ships have been sunk on the high seas by the submarines of the Imperial German Government, with loss of American lives, in violation of specific solemn treaty obligations and in violation of international law and in contempt of the decent opinions of mankind; and

Whereas the President of the United States has assembled Congress in special session and laid before it the causes that impel action in defense of national safety and honor: Therefore we, the members of the Richland County Bar, "with malice toward none," "with charity for all," but "with firmness in the right," do hereby

Resolve—

First. We approve the action of the President of the United States in severing diplomatic relations with the German Empire, in raising and equipping troops, in the creation and the assembling of the appliances of war.

Second. We urge Congress to enact a law providing for universal, obligatory military training and service as the only just, fair, democratic, and efficient method of national defense.

Third. Should armed neutrality fail and if war must needs occur, we urge upon the Government of these United States to conduct it with all the power of the Nation, to the end that there may be a speedy termination of the horror and barbarism on land and sea, and, at last, to us civilization may be saved.

Fourth. We direct that the president of our association send a copy of these resolutions to our respected Senators, Hon. WARREN G. HARDING and Hon. ATLEE POMERENE, and our faithful Member of Congress, Hon. WILLIAM A. ASHBROOK.

PORT CLINTON, OHIO, April 4, 1917.

Hon. WOODROW WILSON,
President of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: At a meeting of the Port Clinton Business Men's Association, held Tuesday evening, April 3, 1917, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

"Whereas conditions, which the United States of America are in no way to blame, have made it necessary for the President of the United States to sever diplomatic relations with Germany and for Congress to declare a state of war existing between the United States and Germany: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we, the Port Clinton Business Men's Association, do hereby pledge our undivided and unqualified loyalty to the President and Government of the United States, indorsing in its entirety the action taken by President Wilson and Congress in severing diplomatice relations and in declaring a state of war to exist with the Imperial Government of Germany; and be it further

"Resolved, That we pledge that in thought, word, and deed we will use our utmost endeavor to the end that loyalty and patriotism, irrespective of race or class, shall prevail in our community."

Respectfully, yours,

PORT CLINTON BUSINESS MEN'S ASS'N.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have a communication from a clergyman, representing what is commonly called the New Amish Church. Like some other religious organizations, its members have conscientious scruples against military service. This communication sets out more fully than any of the many I have had the nature of their scruples; and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the communication was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:
